The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 24, line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-three thousand six hundred" and insert "fifty-nine thousand one hundred and seventy"; in line 18, before the word "cents," to strike out "28" and insert "38"; in line 19, after the word "burning," insert "on an average"; and on page 25, line 2, after the word "Washington," to strike out:

Provided further, That the entire service of electric lighting authorized under this appropriation shall be let, after due advertisement, to the lowest responsible bidder therefor: Provided further, That no contract shall be made for electric arc lighting at a price exceeding the rate hereinbefore specified.

So as to make the clause read:

For electric arc lighting, including necessary inspection, in those streets now lighted with electric arc lights in the city of Washington, and for necessary extensions of such service, $59,170: Provided, That not more than 38 cents per night shall be paid for any electric arc light burning on an average from forty-five minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise, and operated wholly by means of underground wires; and each arc light shall be of not less that 1,000 actual candlepower, and no part of this appropriation shall be used for electric lighting by means of wires that may exist on or over any of the streets or avenues of the city of Washington.

Mr. KYLE. I should like that to be left as the House put it, 28 cents per night for each arc light. At 28 cents per night it figures out $102.20 a year for an arc light of 1,000 candlepower. At 38 cents, the price fixed by the Senate committee, the price would be $138.70 per arc light of 1,000 candlepower. I have a list of 131 cities in the United States where private companies operate, the same as they do here, and the average price is one hundred and twenty-one dollars and a fraction for lights of 2,000 candlepower.

Mr. TELLER. The representatives of the company appeared before the committee, and the committee did not think it was wise to put it down to 28 cents. They did not believe it could be done.

Mr. KYLE. If it is done in other cities it ought to be done here.

Mr. TELLER. I think it can be done at 38 cents. I should doubt whether it could be done with any profit at 28 cents.

Mr. GALLINGER. The matter will be in conference.

Mr. KYLE. What is the present figure, may I ask?

Mr. TELLER. Forty cents.

Mr. KYLE. Forty cents would be nearly $145 per year for a thousand candlepower. If the average price in 131 cities, by private companies remember, is but $121 for 2,000 candlepower, I do not understand why it can not be done here with a thousand candlepower for $102.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from South Dakota will allow me, I would suggest to him that the gas bill which passed the Senate yesterday passed with various amendments which have gone to conference.

Mr. KYLE. This amendment refers to electric lighting.

Mr. HARRIS. I though it was in reference to the gas question, and I was going to suggest to the Senator that, that bill having gone to conference, this bill will necessarily go to conference, and it is to be hoped that the other matter will be disposed of before this bill is disposed of, and then this bill be made to conform, I take it for granted, to what may be the result of the legislation on the gas question. I thought we were dealing with the gas question, and not with the question of electric lighting.

Mr. TELLER. I would say that it was supposed by the committee that both the question of gas and electric lighting in the District would be disposed of by the action of the two Houses of Congress outside of the District appropriation bill. That, of course, will govern us, and we shall try to conform the appropriation bill, as far as possible, to the action taken on that bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. Let me state to the Senator from Colorado that there has never been any bill before the District Committee on the subject of electric lighting, I mean as to the price of electric lighting, or anything of that kind. In fact, I think it never heard any complaint in reference to the cost of electric lights in the city of Washington; and for that reason, I suppose, there has never been any bill before the District Committee on that subject.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator from South Dakota will permit me, I will state that during the last Congress this very question came up when I had charge of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and I went through the matter very thoroughly as to the cost of electric lighting here compared with the other cities in the immediate vicinity, and I am perfectly satisfied that at 38 cents per thousand a night it will be impossible for this company, on a fair capital, with the actual capital invested, and with the cost they are obliged to incur for laying conduits, to make a profit of over 7 or 8 per cent. Judging from the price paid here compared with that paid in the adjoining city of Baltimore, this is about the same rate, taking into consideration the fact that the company here are required in all cases to put their wires under ground, which will cost $10,000 a mile in this city, which we require them to expend, as we do in the case of the gas company, not as a matter of business policy for themselves, but as directed by the Commissioners, so as to have the conduits laid in advance of the improvement of the streets.

I think this is a very low rate, and I will say to the Senator there is no human being in the District of Columbia who uses electricity who has complained of the price.

Mr. KYLE. I presume not. I merely referred to the street arc electric lighting, for which all the people of the United States are taxed; it is a matter which concerns all the taxpayers; and it occurred to me as a question of economy, if other cities were furnished this light for $121 for 2,000 candlepower, it ought to be furnished here at a similar rate.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is desirable that we should have accurate information on this subject.

Mr. KYLE. I have accurate information from 131 cities.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota to some later information than he has. The National Electric Convention was held in New York City from the 3d to the 6th day of May, 1896—only a few days ago. In that convention there were 10,000 electric light companies represented. If the Senator will go to the record he will find that it was shown that the average price for arc lights with overhead wires of those 10,000 companies is 41.7 cents per night. That is precisely what was developed in that meeting in New York City a few days ago.

Mr. KYLE. If the Senator will allow me just there, the average price, he says, given in that journal is 41 cents and a fraction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Forty-one and seven-tenths.

Mr. KYLE. That is the same sort of argument the Senator indulged in yesterday, arguing that as other cities had charged more, therefore more should be charged here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will take care of my own argument. I do not require any supervision on the part of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. KYLE. Let me say that that argument amounts to nothing.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator said that yesterday, but it did not affect the vote.

Mr. KYLE. If we prove that in other cities the charge is less, then certainly we have a right to ask you to prove that a lower charge than is proposed shall be made here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to restate my statement, and the Senator in his own time can make his own speech. I do not care to have him inject it into mine.

I want to repeat that in the electric light convention in New York City, held from the 3d to the 6th day of May, 1896, there were 10,000 electric light companies represented, and it was shown there that the average for every arc light per night for those 10,000 companies is 41.7 cents, while in Washington we have been paying 40 cents, and it is proposed by the Senate committee to reduce it to 38 cents.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has well said that in the city of Washington our electric-light wires are in conduits under ground, and that it has cost the company here some $10,000 a mile to place them there, while in the other 10,000 cities there is scarcely an instance of a single mile of electric-light wire under ground, and it seems to me extraordinary—this company doing business here, and having placed their wires under ground because Congress commanded them to do so, and having very courteously and very gracefully obeyed the mandate of Congress in this respect—that we should undertake to make them furnish electric lights for 13 cents for every arc light per night less than the average in the 10,000 cities of the country represented in that convention, where their wires are strung overhead at $10,000 a mile less than it cost to put them under ground.

Mr. KYLE. I do not intend to argue this question at length to-day, as I argued the gas question, because I know everything goes here as the companies want them to go; but here are some facts: I do not care whether 10,000 electric light companies gather together and hold a national convention or not; I do not care whether they arrange for a combination of prices all over the United States or not. I presume the greater the convention the more liability there is to be a combination to fix higher prices in the cities of the United States. I do know, though, from investigation and from authoritative sources, that in 131 cities in the United States there is an average charge of $121 per year for 2,000 candlepower, which is twice the candlepower required of this company by this bill.

I know also by investigation that in 24 cities in the United States which own their electric-light plants—municipal ownership—that the prices there, not for 1,000 candlepower, but for 2,000 candlepower, is $26 per year, as against $138 required in this bill. Making due allowance, if need be, for putting all the wires under ground in conduits at $10,000 a mile, I think the difference between $26 per year for each light and $138 per light is sufficient to cover it. That is all I care to say.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 25, after line 7, to strike out:

That hereafter the United States Electric Light Company or any other electric light company doing business in the District of Columbia shall not charge or collect from the United States or any other consumer of electric arc or incandescent lights or electricity for power prices exceeding 75 per cent of prices charged for such lights and power on the 1st day of January, 1896, in the said District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 20, to strike out:

For new sponsons, new deck, and raising house on harbor boat, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 22, to insert:

For new fire, ice, and wrecking boat, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 12, to increase the appropriation "for purchase, replacement, and repair of public pumps" from $7,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 21, under the head of "Washington Aqueduct," to insert:

For protecting the inlet to the aqueduct at Great Falls, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 27, to insert:

Washington Aqueduct tunnel: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to resume work on the Washington Aqueduct tunnel and its accessories and the Howard University Reservoir, authorized by section 2 of the act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," and to prosecute and complete the same; the work on the said tunnel and accessories to be carried on in accordance with the plans of the board of experts as set forth in its report dated January 17, 1896, House Document No. 166, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, which plans have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. And to carry out the provisions of said act and this paragraph the balance remaining unexpended from the appropriations made by the said act of July 15, 1882, and by subsequent acts for said purpose, amounting to $266,746.38, is hereby reappropriated, to be advanced out of the revenues of the United States, and not subject to the conditions of the capital account created by the act of July 15, 1882, and the sum of $266,746.38 is also hereby appropriated out of the surplus general revenues of the District of Columbia, to be applied to such parts of the works, and in such order as to time, as the Secretary of War may deem necessary to promote as soon as practicable the completion of the entire system of said works: Provided, That the sum herein set apart and appropriated shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers; and the work shall be carried on by contract or otherwise, as the Secretary of War may deem best for the public interests.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to amend the amendment of the committee in line 20, on page 27, by striking out the word "seven," before the word "hundred," and inserting "five," that being the amount of the surplus, and there being an error in the amendment. Then, in line 25 of the amendment, on the same page, before the word "hundred," I move to strike out "seven" and insert "five"; on page 28, line 3, after the word "Columbia," to insert "said sums"; and in line 6, to change the word "sum" to "sums."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment on page 27, line 20, before the word "hundred," by striking out "seven" and inserting "five"; in line 25, before the word "hundred," by striking out "seven" and inserting "five"; in line 3, on page 28, after the word "Columbia," by inserting "said sums"; and at the end of line 6, after the words "that the," by striking out "sum" and inserting "sums"; so as to read:

And to carry out the provisions of said act and this paragraph the balance remaining unexpended from the appropriations made by the said act of July 15, 1882, and by subsequent acts for said purpose, amounting to $266,546.38, is hereby reappropriated, to be advanced out of the revenues of the United States, and not subject to the conditions of the capital account created by the act of July 15, 1882; and the sum of $266,546.38 is also hereby appropriated out of the surplus general revenues of the District of Columbia, said sums to be applied to such parts of the works, and in such order as to time, as the Secretary of War may deem necessary to promote as soon as practicable the completion of the entire system of said works: Provided, That the sums herein set apart, and appropriated shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Public schools," on page 28, line 17, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "four"; and in line 22, after the word "thousand," to insert "two hundred"; so as to make the clause read:

For officers: For superintendent first six divisions, $3,300; superintendent seventh and eighth divisions, $2,250; clerk to superintendent of first six divisions and secretary to board of trustees, $1,400; clerk to superintendent of seventh and eighth divisions, $800; messenger to superintendent first six divisions, $300; messenger to superintendent seventh and eighth divisions, $200; in all, $8,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 6, after the word "For," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-four"; so as to make the clause read:

For twenty-four, at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 9, after the word "For," to strike out "sixty-one" and insert "fifty-eight"; so as to make the clause read:

For fifty-eight, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 11, after the word "For," to strike out "nineteen" and insert "eighteen"; so as to make the clause read:

For eighteen, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 11, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of public schools from $734,875 to $735,775.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "For janitors and care of buildings and grounds," on page 30, after line 21, to insert:

For janitor, who shall be an engineer and machinist, of manual training school, Central High School, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 4, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "six"; so as to make the clause read:

Of the Adams, Addison, Ambush, Amidon, Anthony, Bowen, Arthur, Banneker, Bell, Blair, Blake, Bradley, Brent, Briggs, Buchanan, Carberry, Corcoran, Cranch, Fillmore, Garrison, Giddings, Harrison, Jackson, Johnson, Jones, Lenox, Logan, McCormick, Madison, Magruder, Maury, Monroe, Morse, Patterson, Phelps, Pierce, Phillips, Polk, Slater, Smallwood, Taylor, Towers, Twining, Tyler, Van Buren, Weightman, Wormley, and Wilson buildings, and the 6 new eight-room buildings, 53 in all, at $600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 17, to increase the total appropriation for care of smaller buildings and rented rooms from $57,731 to $64,231.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 19, to increase the appropriation for rent of school buildings and repair shop from $12,500 to $13,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 21, to increase the appropriation for repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds from $31,000 to $33,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 24, to increase the appropriation for the purchase of tools, machinery, material, and apparatus to be used in connection with instruction in manual training from $8,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 1, to increase the appropriation for fuel from $35,000 to $36,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 22, to increase the appropriation for text-books and school supplies for use of pupils of the first eight grades from $35,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 2, to insert:

For additional ground and reconstructing Anthony Bowen School building, $32,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 4, to insert:

For one four-room school building, Langdon, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 6, to insert:

For one four-room addition to Benning School (white), $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 8, to insert:

For one four-room school building, Hillsdale, to be erected on the Binney site, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 10, to insert:

For additional amount for construction of school building, sixth division B, Giesboro, so as to make same an eight-room building, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 13, to insert:

For one new two-room building and site on or near the line of Connecticut avenue extended, $5,000.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move an amendment to the amendment on line 15, page 34, before the word "thousand," by striking out "five" and inserting "ten"; so as to make the amount $10,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 34, after line 15, to insert:

The appropriation of $8,000 for one new four-room building, sixth division A, Conduit road, made by the District appropriation act approved March 2, 1895, is hereby authorized to be used for the purchase of a site and the erection of said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the provisions in italics on page 34 are the only provisions in the bill for new school buildings?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

Mr. TELLER. The House of Representatives inserted provisions for some new buildings in the bill as it was sent to us.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not refer to the Western High School building just below, where the appropriation is increased from $50,000 to $100,000; but I do not see any other provisions for new buildings except those which have been added by the Senate committee.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will look at the bottom of page 33 he will find a provision for reconstructing and adding to the Wallach School building, $22,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; I see that provision as to the Wallach School.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will find a provision for a building in eighth division B of $1,400 a little higher up on page 33.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is also a provision at the top of page 34 for one eight-room building, northeast, $39,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I see, beginning at the top of page 33, these provisions:

For furniture for new school buildings and additions to buildings, as follows:
Eighth division B, eight rooms, $1,400;
Tenley, Brightwood, Brookland, and Congress Heights, four rooms, at $700 each, $2,800.

I think these are all the additions—only some three or four. I wish to ask the Senator about how many scholars these additions will provide for?

Mr. TELLER. I can not say how many they will provide for; but I am sorry to say they will not provide for as many children as ought to be provided for. The superintendent of public instruction states that there are now 10,000 children in the District who can only attend school part of the time because of the lack of educational facilities.

Mr. HAWLEY. Only half time.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; only half time. I would say that they are the smaller and younger children. We have heard considerable complaint about this matter, but whether this appropriation will be sufficient to provide the additional accommodations necessary I am not quite able to say, but this seems to be about all we can get.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it is lamentable that this goes on from year to year, and we are continually met with the complaint that there is not room in the school buildings for the children of the city. The growth of the city is great in one sense, but it is not beyond our means to provide for it. If there be anything we ought to do, everybody will acknowledge it, is to provide school accommodations for all of the children of the District.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 34, line 23, before the word "construction," to strike out "toward the"; in line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred"; and on page 35, line 1, after the word "site," to strike out "under a contract which is hereby authorized therefor"; so as to make the clause read:

For site for and construction of a new building for the Western High School, $100,000, and the total cost of said Western High School building, including cost of site, shall not exceed $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "For Metropolitan police," on page 35, line 24, before the word "lieutenants," to strike out "three" and insert "four"; on page 36, line 10, before the word "privates," to strike out "two hundred and sixty-one" and insert "three hundred and six"; in line 12, before the word "privates," to strike out "one hundred and ninety-four" and insert "two hundred and twenty-four"; in line 21, before the word "drivers," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty-three"; and in line 23, after the word "all," to strike out "$553,480" and insert "$628,840"; so as to make the clause read:

For major and superintendent, $3,300; captain, $1,800; four lieutenants, inspectors, at $1,500 each; chief clerk, who shall also be property clerk, $2,000; clerk, $1,500; clerk, $900; four surgeons of the police and fire departments, at $540 each; for additional compensation for twelve privates detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $2,880, or so much thereof as may be necessary; nine lieutenants, at $1,320 each; thirty-one sergeants, at $1,140 each; three hundred and six privates, class 1, at $900 each; two hundred and twenty-four privates, class 2, at $1,080 each; twenty station keepers, at $720 each; eight laborers, at $480 each; laborer in charge of the morgue, $680; messenger, $700; messenger, $500; major and superintendent, mounted, $240; captain, mounted, $240; forty-three lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, at $240 each; twenty-three drivers, at $480 each; and three police matrons, at $600 each; in all, $628,840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 25, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That for a deficiency in the police or firemen's relief fund, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States, out of the receipts from fines in the police court, in order to meet such deficiency, a sum not to exceed $6,000 for the police fund, and $2,000 for the firemen's relief fund.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer as a substitute for the proviso the following:

Provided, That hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States, out of the receipts from fines in the police court, a sufficient amount to meet any deficiency in the police fund or the firemen's relief fund.

It will be observed by the Senate that the provision from the committee is for a specific amount, not to exceed $6,000 for the police fund and $2,000 for the firemen's relief fund, to be paid out of the fines of the police court; and on page 39 a provision has been inserted for the firemen's relief fund by assessing the firemen $1 a month each.

Mr. PLATT. There is no provision for assessing policemen?

Mr. GORMAN. No; but there is a rule by which they do assess them. For the firemen's relief fund there is an assessment of $1 from each of these men, who get a very small compensation, much less than in any of the other cities on the Atlantic Seaboard, and much less than in cities of less population, and where the responsibility is less than in Washington. Last year the Senate inserted a provision giving them a sufficient amount from the fines in the police court to have made a fund to have provided for these brave and gallant men; but we were not permitted by a coordinate branch to continue it longer than one year.

The sad and terrible catastrophe that occurred last night in view of us all makes it absolutely necessary that the provision which I have offered should be made permanent here, as it has been made permanent in all other cities that are well governed. I trust that the amendment will not only be adopted unanimously by the Senate, but that at the risk of the loss of the pending bill the Senate will stand by the provision and give this relief to the families of the gallant men who recently lost their lives and those who were injured, and of those who may be killed or maimed hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 37, line 20, to increase the appropriation for miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including stationery, etc., from $18,500 to $20,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 21, to insert:

For extending the patrol system and changing the location of certain boxes, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 1, to increase the total appropriation for Metropolitan police from $23,250 to $29,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "For the fire department," on page 38, line 12, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "six" and insert "ten"; in line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "forty thousand nine" and insert "forty-three thousand three"; so as to make the clause read:

FOR THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

For chief engineer, $2,000; fire marshal, $1,000; clerk, $900; two assistant chief engineers, at $1,200 each; fifteen foremen, at $1,000 each; ten engineers, at $1,000 each; ten firemen, at $840 each; four tillermen, at $840 each; sixteen hostlers, at $840 each; one hundred and one privates, at $800 each; ten watchmen, at $600 each; in all, $143,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall deduct $1 per month from the pay of each fireman, which sum so deducted shall be kept as a firemen's relief fund and be invested in United States or District bonds, and held in the manner provided by existing law in respect to the policemen's fund, and shall be used for the relief of any fireman who, having served not less than twelve months, shall by reason of injuries received or disease contracted in the line of actual fire duty, going to, at, or returning from a fire, or having served not less than fifteen years, shall become so permanently disabled as to be discharged from service therefor; and in the case of the death of such fireman from such injury or disease, leaving a widow or children under 16 years of age, for their relief: Provided, That no fireman shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this relief fund who may by reason of his own indiscretion bring on any injury or disease which may incapacitate him from the performance of his duties as a member of the fire department, or who shall be retired for such cause or causes: Provided further, That such relief shall not exceed, for any one fireman or his family, the sum of $50 per month; and a sum not exceeding $75 may be allowed from such fund to defray the funeral expenses of any fireman dying in the service of the District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for the fire department, on page 39, line 14, to increase the appropriation for repairs to engine-houses from $3,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 16, to increase the appropriation for repairs to apparatus, and new appliances, from $3,000 to $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 17, to increase the appropriation for purchase of hose from $6,000 to $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 18, to increase the appropriation for fuel from $3,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 24, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the fire department from $37,000 to $40,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 8, to insert:

For one aerial truck, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 10, to insert:

To exchange old-style straight-frame engine for modern upright, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 12, to insert:

For one new engine to be placed in house now occupied by chemical engine No. 2 at Mount Pleasant, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 15, to insert:

For house, lot, and furniture to be located in the vicinity of Brightwood to accommodate chemical engine company No. 2, now in service at Mount Pleasant, $15,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask whether the Commissioners of the District estimated for or requested any additional fire engines?

Mr. TELLER. They did. All these appropriations are made on estimates.

Mr. HAWLEY. I want to know whether they asked for more than are granted in the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I do not remember about that.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; they estimated for two more, the Senator will remember, but we did not give them.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is rather late to get them for the fire that occurred yesterday, but we may have another one. I have heard complaints for years that they were not sufficient in number when you consider the extent to which the city has spread.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senator from Connecticut is quite right. In this city, with all the territory covered, we have only nine engines that are available. I am told that at the fire last night every engine in the city, except one or two chemical engines out at Mount Pleasant, was in use, and they were not sufficient. The Senate committee have said from time to time that the number was not sufficient, and we made provision last year for two and secured one. This year the committee have provided for one new engine to be placed in the house now occupied by the chemical engine at Mount Pleasant, and for some trucks. I think myself we ought to have at least two more. Our fire department is one of the most efficient in the country, but the Commissioners insist that two more engines are required that the service may be properly distributed in this city.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg leave to move to insert after line 15, on page 40:

For two new engines, to be placed at the discretion of the Commissioners of the District, $9,000.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut, if that is done we shall have to provide for an increase of the force somewhat.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course.

Mr. TELLER. Perhaps the Senator had better take a little time and offer the amendment later, so that the force can be increased in proportion. I do not know, myself, just what additional force would be required.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 41, line 10, under the head of "Telegraph and telephone service," to increase the appropriation for general supplies, repairs, etc., from $11,000 to $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the Commissioners of the District are hereby empowered to authorize the erection and use of poles for telephone and other purposes in the public streets, avenues, and roadways of the District of Columbia outside of the city of Washington, and the permits for this purpose heretofore granted are hereby ratified: Provided, however, That all such poles so erected shall be subject to use by the said District for the stringing of wires thereon to be used for fire-alarm and police purposes without any charge therefor to the said District, such privileges as may be granted hereunder to be revocable at the will of Congress without compensation: Provided further, That all poles so erected shall be located and constructed in such manner as the Commissioners of the District shall prescribe, but in any case the Commissioners shall require all electric-light wires or power wires to be carried in underground conduits when the same shall cross any street, avenue, or roadway.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I make a point of order against the amendment just read. It is clearly general legislation, and gives extraordinary powers to an executive department.

Mr. HILL. It was put on by the committee, was it not? The point of order can not lie, then.

Mr. TELLER. I did not hear what the Senator from New York said.

Mr. HILL. I said that against an amendment which was put on by the Committee on Appropriations the point of order does not lie.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; it does.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know about that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course it does.

Mr. TELLER. The committee can not put everything on. I suppose the committee can not put on general legislation nor a claim. I am myself inclined to think that the amendment is general legislation.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is not any doubt about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the Chair holds that the amendment is objectionable under the rule. The proviso will be stricken out.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 42, after line 8, to strike out:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or any telephone company doing business in the District of Columbia to charge or receive more than $50 per annum for the use of a telephone on a separate wire; $40 for each telephone, there being not more than two on a wire; $30 for each telephone, there being not more than three on a wire, and $25 for each telephone, there being four or more on the same wire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 17, to insert:

For incinerating all combustible waste collected in the District of Columbia and delivered at the furnaces, $15,000: Provided, That said Commissioners may, on and after the passage of this act, enter into contract, after due advertisement as required by law, under such regulations and specifications as they may establish, for incinerating such combustible waste for a period not exceeding four years, to terminate June 30, 1900: Provided further, That said Commissioners are hereby authorized to make necessary regulations for the collection, transportation, and delivery of such refuse in the District of Columbia, and to annex to said regulations such penalties as will enable them to secure the enforcement thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 10, under the head of "Health office," to increase the appropriation for the prevention of the spread of scarlet fever and diphtheria in the District of Columbia from $5,000 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the United States marshal shall hereafter be entitled to receive the same fees for the service of process in all matters of condemnation of land as he is allowed by law in other cases.

So as to make the clause read:

Miscellaneous: For United States marshal's fees, $1,400: Provided, That the United States marshal shall hereafter be entitled to receive the same fees for the service of process in all matters of condemnation of land as he is allowed by law in other cases.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I make the point of order against this amendment also. I think Congress has passed a bill providing salaries for United States marshals. This is clearly out of order.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator that the bill to which he refers does not include the marshal of this District. The marshal here still gets fees.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Does it not include all United States marshals?

Mr. TELLER. No; the exception is here in this District. We made an exception because the marshal of this District performs not only the duties of United States marshal, but the duties of sheriff as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota insist upon his point of order?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I was not aware of that fact. I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 45, line 6, under the head of "Courts," to increase the appropriation for witness fees from $6,000 to $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 8, after the word "furniture," to insert "and replacing the same"; so as to make the clause read:

For repairs to police-court furniture and replacing same, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 23 on page 45.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to go back to the amendment near the top of page 45. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] calls my attention to the fact that finally we did not leave the marshal for this District out of the bill, but put him in. We left out the district attorney of this District and we gave the marshal a salary. My recollection is that there was some controversy about it. I want to correct the statement I made. The marshal is now a salaried officer of this District.

Mr. CULLOM. The salary was fixed at $5,500.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then I renew the point of order.

Mr. TELLER. The proviso first agreed to was put in the bill pending the question as to what would be done with the marshal.

Mr. PLATT. It was not in the bill as it passed the Senate, I think.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Illinois has the bill as it was finally agreed upon.

Mr. CULLOM. There was a good deal of controversy in the conference committee of the two Houses on that bill in reference to the district attorney and marshal for the District of Columbia. It was finally agreed that the district attorney should be taken out of the operation of the bill, but as to the marshal the amount of his salary was fixed at $5,500 instead of a statutory limitation as heretofore.

Mr. GORMAN. Then the proviso at the top of page 45 ought to go out.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, so that the amendment may be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado moves to reconsider the vote by which the proviso at the top of page 45 was agreed to. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That the United States marshal shall hereafter be entitled to receive the same fees for the service of process in all matters of condemnation of land as he is allowed by law in other cases.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Now, I ask that the amendment may be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. It goes out on the point of order, I understand. It is new legislation.

Mr. CULLOM. If it goes out on a point of order, there is no question before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota insist on his point of order?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the point of order is well taken, and the proviso is stricken out.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 47, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General"; so as to make the clause read:

Court-house, District of Columbia: For the following force necessary for the care and protection of the court-house in the District of Columbia, under the direction of the United States marshal of the District of Columbia: One engineer, $1,200; three watchmen, at $720 each; three firemen, at $720 each; five laborers, at $480 each; and seven assistant messengers, at $720 each; in all, $12,960, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 2, to insert:

Jail grounds, District of Columbia: For the erection, under the direction of the Attorney-General, of a brick or stone wall to inclose the grounds upon which the jail in the District of Columbia now stands, including the purchase of material and the employment of such skilled and other labor as may be necessary for the purpose, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 11, after the words "District of Columbia," to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,000, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General"; so as to make the clause read:

Warden of the jail: For warden of the jail of the District of Columbia, $2,000, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General.

Mr. PLATT. What does this amendment mean? As it read in the bill originally it was "For warden of the jail of the District of Columbia, $1,800." The amendment is to strike out "$1,800" and to insert "$2,000, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General." I should like to know just what that means.

Mr. TELLER. The jail and its expenditures have been under the superintendence or direction of the Department of Justice, and this is simply what the present law is, except that the salary of the warden has been raised.

Mr. PLATT. It reads as if the warden of the jail of the District of Columbia had to expend his salary for something.

Mr. TELLER. That is exactly what the present law is.

Mr. PLATT. It is not what is intended to be paid under——

Mr. TELLER. It is simply intended that he shall be paid through the Department of Justice. That is all there is to it. He has to be paid through some Department. Somebody has to get the money out of the Treasury.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me the word "expended" is a very peculiar word to use in that connection.

Mr. TELLER. That is the present law, and under the conservatism that governs the committee we have not changed it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 48, line 2, before the word "overseers," to strike out "five" and insert "six"; in line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert "night watchman, $548; carpenter, $600"; and in line 15, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fourteen thousand four hundred and fifteen" and insert "sixteen thousand one hundred and sixty-three"; so as to make the clause read:

For Washington Asylum: For intendant, $1,200; matron, $600; visiting physician, $1,080; resident physician, $480; clerk, $720; clerk, $600; baker, $420; overseer, $900; six overseers, at $600 each; engineer, $600; assistant engineer, $350; second assistant engineer, $300; night watchman, $548; carpenter, $600; five watchmen, at $365 each; blacksmith, $300; hostler and ambulance driver, $240; female keeper at workhouse, $300; female keeper at workhouse, $180; four cooks, at $120 each; two cooks, at $60 each; trained nurse, $420; five nurses, at $60 each; in all, $16,163.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the provision fixing the salaries of five nurses at $60 each. Is it $60 monthly? Certainly it is inadequate if those are annual salaries. The others are annual salaries. It does not say that these are monthly salaries. Sixty dollars per nurse a year would be inadequate.

Mr. TELLER. These are people who are receiving training for the purpose of becoming nurses.

Mr. SHERMAN. "Two cooks at $60 each." Is that an annual salary or monthly salary?

Mr. TELLER. An annual salary.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me it is totally inadequate.

Mr. TELLER. These are the people who are living in the asylum and who are allowed something for the service they render besides their board and home. The nurses are people who are being trained for some form of service. The provision comes to us from the House in that form. That is the way we understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. They can be taken from the inmates as well.

Mr. TELLER. They may be inmates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 48, after line 21, to insert:

For painting and repairs of almshouse and workhouse, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four thousand seven hundred" and insert "five thousand and forty"; so as to read:

For Reform School: For superintendent, $1,500; assistant superintendent, $900; teachers and assistant teachers, $5,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Reform School," to increase the total appropriation for salaries from $15,902 to $16,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 10, to insert:

For new bake oven, including brick building for same, $2,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "For charities," on page 51, after line 3, to strike out:

For the relief and care of the poor and destitute, and for such charitable and reformatory work, and such care and medical and surgical treatment of poor and destitute patients in the District of Columbia as have been heretofore usually provided for by direct appropriations to private institutions, and as the District Commissioners may deem necessary, the sum of $94,700, to be expended under the direction of said Commissioners, either under contract with responsible and competent persons or institutions or by employing for the purpose the public institutions or agencies of said District, where practicable: Provided, That no such contract shall extend beyond the 30th day of June, 1897, and that no payment shall be made under any such contract except for service actually rendered, for which compensation shall be provided in said contract; and that said Commissioners shall report to Congress on or before the first Monday of December in each year a detailed statement of their expenditures theretofore made under this appropriation, and of all contracts made by them hereunder, giving the names of the persons and institutions contracted with, and stating what further expenditures will be required thereunder: And provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid for the purpose of maintaining or aiding, by payment for services or expenses, or otherwise, any church or religious denomination, or any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

For relief of the poor, $13,000.
For Temporary Home for ex-Union Soldiers and Sailors, Grand Army of the Republic, $2,500.
For the Women's Christian Association, maintenance, $4,000.
For Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital, maintenance, $15,000.
For Children's Hospital, maintenance, $10,000.
For the National Homeopathic Hospital Association of Washington, D. C., for maintenance, $8,500.
For the Washington Hospital for Foundlings, maintenance, $6,000.
For the Church Orphanage Association of St. John's Parish, maintenance, $1,800.
For the German Orphan Asylum, maintenance, $1,800.
For the National Association for the Relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children, maintenance, including repairs, $9,900.
For St. Ann's Infant Asylum, maintenance, $5,400.
For Association for Works of Mercy, maintenance, $1,800.
For House of the Good Shepherd, maintenance, $2,700.
For the St. Rose Industrial School, maintenance, $4,500.
For St. Joseph's Asylum, maintenance, $1,800.
For Young Women's Christian Home, $1,000.
For Hope and Help Mission, maintenance, $1,000.
For Newsboys' and Children's Aid Society, maintenance, $1,000.
For Eastern Dispensary, maintenance, $1,000.
For Washington Home for Incurables, maintenance, $2,000.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have from the committee some explanation of this amendment and of the subsequent amendment to be found on page 57, for the appointment of a joint select committee. Before the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] replies, I should like to say with regard to it that I think it would be very much better to leave this matter as the House fixed it. I do not want to go into a discussion of the subject, but I think I am permitted under the rules to say that this provision was not adopted in the other House without discussion, and that the House came to this conclusion, and it seems to have been, as the bill comes to us from the House of Representatives, a settlement of a much-discussed, not to say vexed, question. It seems to me that the amendment proposed by the committee leaves the whole question open for future discussion, and that it would have been better for the Senate committee to accept the bill as it came from the other House, which, I am permitted under the rules to say, was the deliberate conclusion of the House and made a settlement of this matter, and not to leave it open to disturb future Congresses.

The exact point to which I wish to call attention as showing that the whole subject is left open, that nothing is settled about it by the amendment as proposed by the committee of the Senate, is this: The House provided for the appropriation of a round sum of $94,700 to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners under contract with the respective competent persons or institutions or by employing for the purpose the public institutions or agencies of the District where practicable. Then it was provided—

That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid for the purpose of maintaining or aiding, by payment for services or expenses, or otherwise, any church or religious denomination, or any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

The Senate committee in its proviso on page 54 adopts a part of the House proviso, but it declines to adopt what may be said to be the essential part of the proviso and the one upon which all the controversy has been raised. It provides—

That no part of the money herein appropriated for charities shall be paid for the purpose of maintaining or aiding, by payment for services or expenses or otherwise, any church or religious denomination.

It does not provide that the money shall not be expended for aiding, by payment for services or expenses or otherwise, any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control. It leaves the whole question open and just where it was before the discussion in the House and the adoption of the House provision. The amendment for a joint select committee amounts to nothing as affecting the question with respect to what is to be the policy of Congress in this respect.

I do not wish to go into any lengthy discussion of the question of the appropriation of money in aid of sectarian or denominational charitable institutions. The matter has been very thoroughly and fully discussed not only in the other branch of Congress, but throughout the country, and I believe that the better sentiment of this country is that governments, State or national, ought not to appropriate money to be paid out of State or national treasury in aid of private charitable institutions, whether sectarian or denominational or otherwise. But the practice of aiding them has grown up in the District of Columbia and has been increasing all the while, so much so that when charitably inclined persons think there is room for another charitable institution here they immediately proceed to organize it upon the expectation that they are to come to Congress for an appropriation to aid them in carrying it on.

I think that is all wrong. These views of mine are not recently formed views. I introduced a petition, I think three Congresses ago, for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the appropriation of money for any sectarian or denominational purposes or aiding any sectarian or denominational institution. I believe such a clause is to be found in the constitutions of nearly half of the States in the Union. I believe that at the present day, without any reference to religious ideas or religious tests or anything of that sort, it is the well-settled opinion of a great majority of the people of the United States.

The reason why I think the amendment of the Senate committee had better not have been proposed is that, so far as the District of Columbia is concerned, the provision of the bill as it came from the House would settle it that hereafter it was to be the policy of Congress not to make appropriations for such purposes. The amendment opens the whole question again to discussion, and I regret that it should have been proposed by the committee. I wish it to be understood that my vote is to be in opposition to the committee amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the committee found some difficulty in dealing with this question as it came to the Senate from the other House. The House provision was exceedingly sweeping; and it was pretty certain that, without amendment, it could not be carried out without injustice to some of the institutions which we have relied upon here for charitable work. A majority of the committee concluded that it was best to return to the system of last year, and also to provide for the commission which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] thinks will not amount to anything.

So far as I am concerned, I agree with the Senator that these matters should be conducted by the Government and not by private establishments. I shall myself be pleased whenever, without doing injustice to the infirm and dependent, we can adopt a system which will allow the Government to have absolute control over all the moneys that we expend for charitable purposes. I believe we might do it now, but that was not the opinion of the majority of the committee, and I think it was not the opinion of very many good people who are engaged in charitable work. They seem to think that the plan as provided for by the House would work great hardship and great injustice, and therefore the majority of the committee, as I say, resolved to take the course which has been taken.

Mr. PLATT. But some time this matter will have to be settled, and if it is settled in the way the House proposed to settle it, it will be said then that it works injustice and hardship. Very likely it may be hard upon some of these institutions which have been organized supposing, as a matter of course, that they would come to the Government and get an annual appropriation. I know just how charitably inclined people in the District of Columbia feel. They come to regard it as a settled matter that whenever a charitable institution is organized here Congress is going to appropriate for it. They are never satisfied with the amount. They think it ought to be more. So it is continually a cry of "give," "give" to charitable institutions. I think it is all wrong, and we had better leave it as the other House put it.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think the interest exhibited by the charitable people who came before the committee was so much in reference to the institutions or the organizations as it was to the beneficiaries. I think there was a very general feeling among the people who have been engaged in charitable work that without those agencies at this time there would be much want of efficiency in the expenditure of this money. It would not, perhaps, reach the beneficiaries as it is intended by Congress that it shall.

I admit that there was a great deal of embarrassment about the matter. I think it was much more embarrassing than the question of schools which we had up here some time ago. It seems to me that it rests on precisely the same principle, that the Government agencies should be conducted by Government agents, and that as soon as possible the Government should disconnect itself from the assistance of that class of people unless we should adopt a system such as is in vogue in some countries, particularly in Germany. There citizens volunteer to carry out the Government wish and to supervise the expenditure of the money. Under that system the very best people of Germany come to the assistance of the authorities in determining who are entitled to receive the benefits, looking up the proper cases for governmental charity, and assisting in a general way. That would not be objectionable. It is a beneficial system. If we should adopt such a system I think the Government might then avail itself of such agencies, but unless it does that, it seems to me we shall have eventually to say to the charitable institutions in the District: "The National Government must have control of all the money that it puts out, and the whole proceedings. The payment and direction and all must be under the control of the Government." But we were not fully agreed in the committee upon any method of doing that at this session, and hence we reported as the provision is found in the bill.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I think the amendment proposed by the committee ought not to be agreed to. The point made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that injustice is or may be done to certain private institutions is an objection that is continually being raised in like cases. It has been raised from the beginning, and it will be raised until we have entirely done away with the whole business of pampering private institutions by public patronage. We have found the same trouble in my own State, and within the range of my limited observation the experience has been the same in other States. Persons of charitable disposition, but not of unlimited pecuniary resources, will organize a private charitable institution with the expectation of its ultimately being maintained out of the public treasury, and from year to year those institutions multiply, until finally they have become a weight, an incubus upon public treasuries.

We find that all over the country, in every State of the Union, the subject is being discussed, and perhaps more in the year 1896 than in any preceding year of our history; but that only goes to show the intensity and the extent of the feeling upon the subject which prevails among the people. I think it is time that the subject was dealt with heroically and that all appropriations for private institutions were cut off. To say that these people have had no notice that such a thing might be done is to state a purely imaginary case. We had the same thing to deal with in Kansas. The people have had the same thing to deal with in the State of Maine, in Vermont, indeed, I believe, in all of the New England States. They are now dealing with it in the State of New York. Persons who invested money in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors believed their property was endangered by reason of the enactment of prohibitory laws and the adoption of prohibitory amendments to constitutions, and hence appealed to the courts for remedy. But the courts very wisely hold that there is no remedy in such cases; that the people have all the time had notice from the beginning that the reserved rights of the people might some day be asserted to the injury of these particular individuals. So it is in this case. These private institutions which are now conducting charitable establishments have had notice from the beginning that the public rights might some day, at any time, be asserted; so that there is a constant, standing, perpetual notice. As I said in the beginning, I think it is time the subject was dealt with heroically; and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single observation before the vote is taken. My attitude on this question is a matter of record. I believe the committee of the Senate have made a mistake in changing the provision that was incorporated in the bill by the House of Representatives. I understand that a Senator is naturally, perhaps properly, criticised if he objects to almost anything that relates to charitable work here or elsewhere, and yet back of all this, at the bottom of all this, is the principle which we have to meet in the Congress of the United States, as it is being met elsewhere.

I do not know how it may be in other States, but I know that if in the little State of New Hampshire a proposition should be made to the legislature of the State or should be presented to the common council or board of aldermen of any city of the State to appropriate money for a sectarian institution, whether its work was charitable or otherwise, it would get no support whatever, because such a proposition would be abhorrent to the sense of our people, and I think that is the growing sentiment in the country. It is the old doctrine which, as I have said before, was fought out in other countries a long time ago, which for some reason or other we have allowed to creep into our system, and which we have in some way or other to get rid of.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to make a speech on this subject, nor am I going to give utterance to a single suggestion that is not kindly and that is not well intended, but I do hope that in some way, whether it be this year or next year or some other year, the Congress of the United States will get rid of this proposition to appropriate money for institutions, whether they are educational or charitable, that are directly under the control of any religious society, I care not whether it is the society that I chance to be connected with or otherwise. It is a principle that I have in some way imbibed, that I have such an intense belief in, that I would be doing myself an injustice if I did not on every occasion utter my protest against it; and that, Mr. President, is all I care to say to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. PLATT. May I inquire whether the striking out and inserting are all one amendment, that is, whether it is all one amendment from line 4, on page 51, to the end of line 22, on page 53?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that it is all one amendment. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Appropriations report to strike out, beginning in line 4, on page 51, as follows:

For the relief and care of the poor and destitute, and for such charitable and reformatory work and such care and medical and surgical treatment of poor and destitute patients in the District of Columbia as have been heretofore usually provided for by direct appropriations to private institutions, and as the District Commissioners may deem necessary, the sum of $94,700, to be expended under the direction of said Commissioners, either under contract with responsible and competent persons or institutions or by employing for the purpose the public institutions or agencies of said District, where practicable: Provided, That no such contract shall extend beyond the 30th day of June, 1897, and that no payment shall be made under any such contract except for service actually rendered, for which compensation shall be provided in said contract; and that said Commissioners shall report to Congress on or before the first Monday of December in each year a detailed statement of their expenditures theretofore made under this appropriation, and of all contracts made by them hereunder, giving the names of the persons and institutions contracted with, and stating what further expenditures will be required thereunder: And provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid for the purpose of maintaining or aiding, by payment for services or expenses, or otherwise, any church or religious denomination, or any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

Mr. ALLISON. That is one amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have taken a great deal of interest in many of the associations for charitable purposes named in the bill. Many of these institutions have been founded now for many years. I know that when I was a member of the other House, some forty years ago, I took a great deal of interest in the subject of the distribution of money for charitable purposes. There were in existence here then some admirable charitable institutions, all of them, I think, more or less under sectarian influence. Many of them were Catholic institutions, because a large proportion of the population of this District belonged to that church. We thoroughly examined the very question that is now before us and concluded, on the whole, that it was better to encourage the organization of these societies and to help them as we could with appropriations from time to time. That system has now grown so that Government aid is rendered to perhaps twenty or thirty institutions, and one or two of them have done a wonderful amount of good. One Catholic institution I know of myself has not only expended the money appropriated for charitable purposes carefully and judiciously, but has expended a vast amount of money contributed by charitable people in the city.

I believe in the principle which has been stated by the Senators who have already spoken, that it would be better to have this charity disbursed directly by the Government of the United States; but the Government, in order to do that, must have sites, must have buildings, and must have proper facilities for taking care of the sick and the disabled. Many persons who come to this city come in such a condition that they must be sent immediately to some charitable hospital, some place where they can be cared for, generally by women who are employed at very small wages to take care of them. These institutions, as a rule, are conducted with great economy.

It seems to me, before we break down this system, we ought to provide another to take its place. Neither this District nor the Government of the United States has any buildings to which persons can be sent, and the District or the General Government ought to be in possession of such buildings before we undertake to distribute these small charities, and to take care of persons who are sick or diseased or poor or needy. We are in no condition to do it. Therefore it seems to me that the proposition made by the committee of the Senate is a wise one. I think that we had better postpone the matter of organizing these charities, and not turn them over to the Commissioners of the District, who are men actively employed, with plenty to do to manage the affairs which properly come under their control. They are generally prominent citizens, and they have not the time, they have not the opportunity, nor have they the means to find shelter and support so as to care for and aid and supply with medicine and surgical assistance the poor and the feeble in this District. So it seems to me we ought not to strike down the system which has been built up for thirty or forty years until we have provided another.

I should be willing to appropriate large sums of money for buildings for the use of charitable institutions here, and we ought to have them here in this city, as nearly all cities have them, and have them under the control of the Government, but until we provide the buildings and the other necessary means of organization to distribute the money that we are willing to appropriate, we ought not to change the present system.

So far as I am concerned, I make no distinction between one branch of religion and another. Any religion is better than no religion, and I have confidence in any form of religious worship which requires of its adherents obedience to Almighty God, and any form of religious worship which recognizes the general theories of the Bible I believe to be good. When organizations of this kind have been built up by charitable and religious people, and they have contributed their funds to erect buildings and have been encouraged by the annual appropriations of Congress now for more than forty years, this aid should not be suddenly cut off from them. It should only be done after the Government has prepared itself to deal charitably and kindly and well with the poor, the sick, the feeble, and the needy.

I therefore am of opinion that the conclusion arrived at by the Committee on Appropriations on this bill is a wise one. They simply postpone this matter and direct an inquiry. It seems to me that is the best thing to be done. The provision made here is as follows:

That a joint select committee is hereby authorized, to consist of three Senators to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, which select committee shall make investigation of the charities and reformatory institutions of the District of Columbia, and especially of those for which appropriations are made by this act, as respects their relations to the government of the District of Columbia and to the United States, whether by special charter or otherwise, their efficiency, their management and resources, etc.

Is it not better that representatives from the two Houses of Congress should take this matter up carefully and see whether or not any of these institutions can be purchased or new buildings can be erected for the purpose of taking care of the feeble and the sick who happen to be here in the city of Washington? In a population now of over 300,000 there will always be a certain proportion in trouble who ought to be cared for, and it seems to me we ought not to dispense with the provisions already made for their care until we find some better plan than is proposed in the House proposition to turn all the sick and feeble and indigent and careless, and perhaps reckless, people over to the District Commissioners—three men who have plenty of business to attend to without this. They are not in a condition to deal with, and they are not able to deal with, this question. I would rather take three, four, five, or six women to manage this matter of looking after the poor and the suffering than all the men who are likely to be Commissioners of the District of Columbia. A matter of this kind ought to be turned over to the kindly charity of good people, and the committee here provided for might, no doubt, examine into the condition of the various institutions which are now used and aided by us by the appropriation of money, and make proper arrangements. Some of the institutions, probably, are not well prepared for this work, and they might be dropped from the list, but until the Government does provide some means of taking care of the poor people we ought not to disturb the present arrangement.

I remember, among others, that Thaddeus Stevens, who was supposed to be a stern, unyielding man, bitter in his hatreds and warm in his friendships, took the greatest possible interest in the charitable institutions here, and went around among them one after another in order to find out how they were conducted. During his lifetime he did all he could to maintain them, although he was regarded as a cynical old bachelor, and everybody, except those who knew him intimately, thought he had no heart. That is the way I would deal with this question. Let a committee be appointed; let them go and examine these institutions and see how the poor and the sick are cared for, and if they can find a better way let them report to the next session of Congress. But to stop suddenly all the appropriations made for this purpose and to turn the entire matter over to the Commissioners of the District, who are overworked, does not seem to me wise, and therefore I shall vote to support the proposition made by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I think, under the provision of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, that which the Senate committee proposes to strike out provides for all that the Senator from Ohio has in contemplation.

Mr. SHERMAN. It turns the matter over to the District Commissioners.

Mr. PEFFER. The provision reads in this way:

For the relief and care of the poor and destitute, and for such charitable and reformatory work, and such care and medical and surgical treatment of poor and destitute patients in the District of Columbia as have been heretofore usually provided for by direct appropriations to private institutions, and as the District Commissioners may deem necessary, the sum of $94,700, to be expended under the direction of said Commissioners, either under contract with responsible and competent persons or institutions or by employing for the purpose the public institutions or agencies of said District, where practicable.

I have been reading the first part of the paragraph, beginning at line 4, on page 51, which proposes to leave the entire subject under the control and subject to the discrimination and management of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, that they may, in their discretion, provide for by contract with private institutions or with public institutions, whichever in their judgment may be necessary.

In connection with that I do not see why the commission the Senator speaks of may not be appointed, and why it is not a good suggestion; but, at the same time, I think all that is required for the present situation is provided for in the language which I have read; and I think it is an excellent way of taking the preliminary steps to get rid of this troublesome question.

Mr. SHERMAN. What the Senator has read only shows that what I said was correct, that it is proposed by the bill as it came from the House for a single year to confer this power upon the District Commissioners. They having no care now of this matter, are to be suddenly called upon to take this duty for one year, and it provides that only for one year shall they have this charge. What is to be done after that? It seems to me the District Commissioners are not the proper persons to do it. I would rather for this purpose take any one or any dozen or any thirty of the charitable institutions which are referred to in this bill as the beneficiaries of the bounty of the people of the United States. The money has been fairly distributed among these various organizations which now exist, including almost every denomination, from the largest to the smallest. I had rather leave the expenditure of the money to the judgment and kindness and good feeling of the people who manage these institutions than to turn it over to the overworked Commissioners of the District of Columbia as an experiment for one year, disturbing all the appropriations which have been made, all the arrangements, and all the precautions which have heretofore been adopted in the management of the various associations mentioned in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Let the question be first put on striking out what the Secretary has read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the motion to strike out the portion of the bill which has been read by the Secretary.

Mr. GORMAN. Does that embrace all the charities?

Mr. PEFFER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, is it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. The question is to be taken on agreeing to the entire amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit first, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], the motion to strike out what has been read by the Secretary.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator that it is practically all one amendment.

Mr. TELLER. It is not. If we strike out what has been read, I suppose there will be no objection to the words in italics; and if we refuse to strike out, of course the words in italics must go out of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The question ought to be on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee, striking out and inserting, and it ought to be taken as one question.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust by unanimous consent that that may be done, because the whole scheme of charities is involved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the entire motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Chair to state that the question is to strike out what has been read and insert what is proposed on pages 52 and 53, down to line 22.

Mr. PLATT. That is it.

Mr. GORMAN. That will embrace the whole subject.

I desire to say, Mr. President, only a word in addition to what has been so well said by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. The system of charities in the District of Columbia has grown up from time to time, and appropriations have been made, until four years ago we authorized the appointment of a superintendent of charities. The work of that officer has very much simplified the system and has corrected many abuses, until the result was reached last year of making provisions somewhat similar to those contained in these amendments, making an absolutely fair distribution of the amounts appropriated by Congress, from which excellent results have been obtained. There may be, and there possibly are, improvements yet to be made, all of which can be ascertained and reported upon by the joint select committee which is proposed in this bill. I trust that the amendment recommended by the committee will be adopted.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to argue this proposition, but for fear that the yeas and nays may not be called, so that I may not go on record as I stand, I simply desire to say that I am opposed to the amendment, and opposed to any provision of law by which public money is appropriated for sectarian purposes of any character whatever.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I want to say that I indorse the last sentiment which the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has uttered, yet that drives me irresistibly to support this amendment. I do not believe in appropriations for sectarian purposes. We have further in this amendment a clause which distinctly announces that doctrine:

Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated for charities shall be paid for the purpose of maintaining or aiding, by payment for services or expenses or otherwise, any church or religious denomination.

Not a dollar under that provision can go to any church or religious denomination for its support. We simply put in the hands of certain charitable organizations under religious and denominational control a certain sum of money, which they may expend in relieving humanity, and not in promoting and building up their denominational principles. That is all there is about it, Mr. President. You can not make anything else out of it. It is for the relief of human suffering, of humanity, through the instrumentality of these religious organizations, and not for the purpose of building them up nor for the purpose of promoting their denominational or ecclesiastical or religious views.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There being no other way to do it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why do we do this? Because the bill as it came from the House is simply impossible of execution. We have no alternative, in my judgment, left us. Let us see where Senators who insist upon this House provision would leave the charities of the national capital. What does the bill say?

The sum of $94,700—

for the relief and care of the poor and destitute, and for such charitable and reformatory work, and such care and medical and surgical treatment of poor and destitute patients in the District of Columbia as have been heretofore usually provided for by direct appropriations to private institutions, and as the District Commissioners may deem necessary, to be expended under the direction of said Commissioners—either under contract with responsible and competent persons or institutions or by employing for the purpose the public institutions or agencies of said District, where practicable.

Every Senator knows as well as he knows his existence that there are not in this District public institutions or agencies which can provide for the unfortunate. No Senator dare say upon this floor that there are public institutions or agencies here, created either by the District of Columbia or by the Government of the United States, sufficient to care for the suffering, the poor, the destitute, the sick, the wounded, the disabled. No one can pretend to make that proposition. Then, how must it be done? By contract! Now, think of the ridiculous absurdity of making contracts for the distribution of charity. Contract with a hospital for the treatment of patients! How could you make such a thing as a contract with the Emergency Hospital here, where people are taken—some with a finger cut off, some with a little bruise, some with a terrible wound that will require medical and surgical aid for hours and hours at a time—how are you going to make a contract for those cases? Think of it! An absolute contract having to be made for every act of charity and mercy performed in the District of Columbia. Yet Senators want that provision retained in the bill.

Mr. GRAY. And advertise for the lowest bidder.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; and advertise for the lowest bidder for the dispensation of charities and mercies and blessings!

And no such contract—

shall extend beyond the 30th day of June, 1897—

Here is a further restriction—

and that no payment shall be made under any such contract except for service actually rendered, for which compensation shall be provided in said contract.

I should like some Senator to draw a contract which would enable the Emergency Hospital to secure compensation for every little aid that it renders. Human ingenuity could not possibly provide a contract for this kind of a surgical operation, and for this kind of a dose of medicine to a sick child who may be brought there by its poverty-stricken mother. And yet not a dollar is to be paid unless it was specifically stated in the contract in advance, and then the contract price charged. No, no, Mr. President, this House provision is utterly impracticable of execution. You had better withhold your $94,700; better keep it and not give a dollar of it, because it can not be used if this provision is to be carried out.

What have we done, Mr. President? We have done the only thing which was left us to do. What is that? We have simply restored the charities as they have been for years, and we have put in the provision that not a dollar of this money shall be used for the purpose of building up or maintaining any church or religious denomination; and, therefore, it shall only be used for charitable and beneficent purposes. Then, we have provided a joint committee of Senators and Representatives, three of whom are to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate and three by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. They are to investigate the whole field of charities in the District, and report at the next session of Congress the system and the means which Congress ought to adopt in order to afford the relief which our laws, our institutions, and our holy religion require at our hands.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri, in his honest zeal in this matter, has somewhat overstated, to say the least, the situation. I do not suppose there is a Senator in this Chamber who desires that in dealing with the hospitals of the city of Washington the principle which the Senator says we advocate should be applied. If the Senate committee had eliminated or had individualized the hospitals and provided in the amendment that they should have a direct appropriation, and then should have allowed the House provision to stand so far as the sectarian institutions are concerned, it would have received my most cordial approbation and support.

Of course we can not make a contract with the Emergency Hospital; but I will call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that when, on a former occasion, I made the suggestion concerning Providence Hospital, in the city of Washington, I was met with the statement that we did make a contract with that hospital for the performance of a certain duty, for which they received a specified sum. I think the District Commissioners can properly make contracts, if there is no better way, for the care of the indigent poor of the city of Washington. At the same time, I should deal differently with the established hospitals of the city; and I have never yet found anybody to object to the appropriation of public funds to aid in the charitable work which is carried on in great public hospitals. It is done all over the country, and nobody objects. The hospitals are not connected with religious institutions; they are not sectarian; they are managed for the alleviation of human suffering and the good of the general public. The cities make appropriations, and I think in some instances the States, for great public hospitals, and that policy receives the support and the approval of everybody. The States make contracts with hospitals, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] says, and correctly says.

Mr. President, I have not called attention to any one of these institutions. In whatever I have said in the Senate during the present Congress I have never mentioned the name of a church. Those who have, as I think, sometimes unfairly attempted to put us in what I believe would be a false position have named certain religious bodies and said that we were endeavoring to discriminate against a particular religious organization. I have no such feeling myself. Whatever my faults may be, I am not so narrow as to desire to do an injustice, to cast a vote, or to put in the way of any religious association or organization one single particle of an obstacle to operate against their carrying out their benevolent and charitable purposes. I have no such feeling as that, and I hope I may never become so warped as to cast a vote or utter a word in that direction.

But there are in this list certain institutions that are manifestly sectarian. I will not name them. Senators can read them for themselves. The Senator from Ohio says that these institutions are managed by all the religious denominations of the country. That is not true. The Senator was mistaken about that, but I am not going to discuss that feature of the case.

Mr. President, I have said more than I intended to say on this subject. I would be very glad, indeed, to have, even though it be an experiment, the proposition that the House of Representatives put in the bill tested for one year, and see if we can not dispense the funds that we vote here for charitable purposes to better advantage than we have been doing in the past. If it should fail, then we could devise some better plan than is incorporated in the provision that comes to us from the House of Representatives.

It occurs to me that the very fact that the Senate committee proposes an investigation of the subject is a concession that we have been going possibly in the wrong direction in appropriating public funds for purposes of this kind. If the amendment suggested by the Senate committee shall go in the bill, as I presume it will, then I shall certainly hope that the other amendment providing for an investigation of this matter will likewise go in the bill, because I think it will be well for us to see what a joint select committee will say to the Congress of the United States on this great question, for it is a great question.

I would be one of the last men in this body to do any harm to any poor waif or any suffering child or man or woman in the District of Columbia who needed the beneficence of individuals or of the Government to relieve human suffering. But, Mr. President, I have been brought up in an atmosphere where the churches take care of their poor; where they do not go either to the cities or to the treasury of the States; and they ought not to come to the Treasury of the National Government to ask for public funds to help them carry on their charitable work. I know of no reason why the State of New Hampshire or any other State of the American Union should be taxed for the purpose of helping religious organizations and ecclesiastical concerns to carry on work of any kind, whether it is charitable or otherwise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of the bill after the word "charities," in line 3, page 51, down to and including line 5, on page 52, and insert from line 6, on page 52, to line 22, on page 53.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the vote may be taken by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, as the yeas and nays have been ordered, I think I should say one word in addition to what has already been said respecting these charities.

It was the disposition, so far as I know, of the Committee on Appropriations to meet as far as practicable the views of the House of Representatives as presented by the paragraph in the bill as it came to us, but it seemed to the committee impracticable to execute the provisions in such a way as not to cripple many of the most worthy and necessary charities in this District. For example, the first paragraph in the amendment proposed to be inserted is "For relief of the poor, $13,000." It will be remembered that the provision as it came to us from the other House came in a lump sum of $94,700, which absolutely embraces every item contained in the details of the Senate committee's amendment. It was said to us in explanation of the provision as it came to us from the other House that it was intended to provide for these charities as they now exist. It was contended by some of those who advocated the appropriation of a lump sum that in fact there was embraced in the detailed statement but one single charity that was under religious or ecclesiastical control. So it was claimed for the House provision that there would be under it no material change in the management of these charities.

The first question that confronted the Committee on Appropriations was, if that be true, how could the money be expended under the House provisions? The first item to be provided for is "For relief of the poor, $13,000." This is and has been for many years a pressing charity, or what is called an emergency appropriation, distributed usually in the late winter or spring months, in the discretion of the Commissioners, for the relief of those people of the District who are found by press of necessity at the close of winter or during the extreme cold weather to be in need of immediate relief.

The next item is "For Temporary Home for ex-Union Soldiers and Sailors, Grand Army of the Republic, $2,500." That is an appropriation which has been made for a great many years to that worthy organization in this District, who by personal contributions of their own, by the Grand Army posts of this District, and by this little aid given to them are enabled to take care of the veterans of the Republic who, owing to one cause or another, find themselves stranded in this city.

The fourth item is "For Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital, maintenance, $15,000." That hospital is well known to the members of the Senate to be one of the most important and necessary hospitals in the city. It is under the direction of many of our best citizens. It was erected at a cost of several thousand dollars by contributions from distinguished people of this city who had the means to contribute to it; and each year from their private resources, as I remember now, speaking without having the figures before me, they contribute from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars for the maintenance of this dispensary and Emergency Hospital. The demands upon the hospital are so great that some years ago we were appealed to by those then in control to provide from the Treasury of the United States a small appropriation for the purpose of aiding them. The first appropriation, I think, was $10,000. Later on it was increased to $15,000.

I do not need to enumerate these several items in detail further than I have gone to show the character of some of the institutions which are the recipients of these appropriations. When you turn, in the light of these facts, to the provision of the bill as it passed the House, you will find that this sum is "to be expended under the direction of said Commissioners, either under contract with responsible and competent persons or institutions, or by employing for the purpose the public institutions or agencies of said District, where practicable." That led me and the committee to inquire what are the public agencies or institutions in this District that the Commissioners could resort to in case they found it impossible to execute these provisions under a contract. We found that there are but two. One of them is the almshouse, lying in the eastern portion of the city, and which is provided for in the present bill. I was not surprised that the Senator from Ohio rose in his place and said he noticed that one of the employees of that institution, one of its nurses, was receiving $60 per annum. He thought that must be a mistake, that it must be $60 a month. Yet the almshouse takes care of from two to three hundred of the destitute people of this District at all times. The average attendance there is from two to three hundred. I should like to have some Senator who has a carriage and rides over the fine pavements of this city visit for an hour that almshouse as I have visited it and see the character of the destitute men and women who are held there and cared for by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia under appropriations that we make. The inmates are in poverty and destitution; they are as illy prepared for all the affairs of human life as you will find the destitute in any city in the United States. Now, for one I would not desire that any greater number of destitute persons in this city who could be better cared for elsewhere, at least, should be consigned to the almshouse of the District of Columbia.

The other agency of the District of Columbia is the Freedmen's Hospital, which is familiar to Senators, and which is filled to its capacity every day and every week and every hour of the year with the destitute colored and white men and women of this city. So I find it would be impossible to execute these provisions of the House in public institutions, and therefore it would be necessary, in order that the destitute here might be cared for by somebody, that we should make some provision other than that provided by the House.

I ask the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to tell me how it is possible to make a contract for a destitute child or a destitute man or woman who is disabled either by the cable cars or by some accident on Pennsylvania avenue and is carried to the Emergency Hospital? A leg may be broken, an arm may be broken, or there may be some still greater injury to that person.

Mr. GRAY. Half a dozen firemen were carried there last night who were injured at the fire.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; firemen, I am told, were carried there last night. How is it possible to make a contract for such emergencies?

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I am not familiar with this subject, but I will reply by asking the Senator another question.

Mr. ALLISON. That may furnish a good answer.

Mr. PLATT. If the $94,000 which the other House proposed to appropriate had been appropriated in that way, does the Senator believe that there would have been any failure to take care of the persons and to expend the amounts which are provided in the item in taking care of them by contract?

Mr. ALLISON. Under the provisions of the paragraph as it came to us?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; would they not have been able to make some arrangement for the expenditure of $2,500 for the Temporary Home for ex-Union Soldiers and Sailors, for instance? In other words, does the Senator understand that the word "contract" means a contract for bathing the person who happens to be sick, or anything of that sort? The idea advanced by the Senator from Missouri was that every little service must be contracted for.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not go into that.

Mr. PLATT. Is there not any other way to make a contract for the care of people who go to these hospitals? Could there not be some terms or some general arrangement by which they would all be taken care of?

Mr. ALLISON. I have been trying to show that it is impossible to make a contract with the Emergency Hospital, for which there is an appropriation of $15,000 in the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think I can suggest a way to do it, and to model every paragraph upon the idea.

Mr. ALLISON. How?

Mr. HAWLEY. To make a contract with the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital to go on just as they have been going on at $15,000 a year. That is a contract.

Mr. ALLISON. That would be making a contract, but it would not be making a contract such as is required by the House provision, which is "that no payment shall be made under any such contract except for service actually rendered, for which compensation shall be provided in said contract."

Mr. PLATT. I will suggest, then, if that is the only difficulty, it might very easily have been arranged by striking out so much of the House paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; and if the paragraph is to remain in the bill I hope the Senator from Connecticut will move to so amend it as to make it effectual. I am not in controversy as respects what the Senators from Connecticut and other Senators want to accomplish, but as to what the committee has done.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not object.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand, but other Senators object to what the committee has done, and it is for them to show some other way whereby the thousands of people who are aided somewhat by these appropriations shall be provided for. We found much difficulty as respects all these questions, and as respects the sectarian or religious control. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Connecticut another question. The committee propose to insert on page 54:

Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated for charities shall be paid for the purpose of maintaining or aiding, by payment for services or expenses or otherwise, any church or religious denomination.

We propose to retain that provision, which is a part of the House provision proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think that was ever done. Was an appropriation ever made for a church or a religious denomination?

Mr. ALLISON. In aid of it. That was the claim made before our committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question? What is the sense of leaving in the provision that none of this money shall be used as an appropriation for a church when there is no pretense in the committee amendment that it is to go for that purpose? It seems as if it was likely to befog somebody. The amendment, in fact, provides a specific appropriation for certain definite hospitals and other institutions. Then the committee has put at the end of those items a proviso that none of the appropriations shall go to support a church. I should like the chairman of the committee to explain the purpose of putting in that provision.

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator. It was said before our committee by a person who is quite reputable, I have no doubt, that it was the habit of certain of these hospitals to contribute of their own funds to the erection and maintenance of churches; that although we were giving them funds for charitable purposes they were using the aggregate of their funds by making subscriptions in aid of church government, and that the employees, the people about the institution, were aiding the church by means of their employment. So we covered that ground, or we thought we did, in order that these appropriations might be applied to the proper purposes of charity, as we propose in the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will it interrupt the Senator if I call his attention to the provision for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I still fail to understand it. These appropriations are exactly as they have been made in former years?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. So no additional safeguard is thrown around the appropriations from the safeguard that must have been thrown around them in other years?

Mr. ALLISON. Except as I have stated.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If this amendment is to have that effect, I should like to ask the Senator how it does it. There is certainly nothing here to prevent St. Joseph's Asylum, which gets $1,800 for maintenance, appropriating a part of it to constructing a St. Joseph's Church, if there is one. Is there such a church?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that there is.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am only seeking to ascertain the purpose of putting in this clause. I do not quite see where it comes in.

Mr. ALLISON. I am stating the purpose. Whether it will be effectual for the purpose I do not know. Of course, I have my own belief that no such thing has ever been done or that no such thing is likely to be done, but in order to meet the objection which appeared elsewhere and before our committee we wished to make the provision perfectly certain or as nearly certain as we could.

Mr. President, having an imperfect knowledge as respects the organization, method, resources, and receipts of these institutions, or most of them, sympathizing with the general expression of opinion here upon the subject of dealing with charities in the District of Columbia, we thought before we undertake to make an appropriation as the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from New Hampshire propose, and ourselves providing for the care of these destitute people, we should ascertain, in the first instance, the situation and condition of these institutions now; and therefore it was that the committee proposed the appointment of a joint select committee of six, three members of the House and three members of the Senate, to deal with the question and ascertain all the facts. I was glad to hear the Senator from Kansas say that that provision ought to be retained whether we amend the text of the bill or do not amend it. I think it should be retained. I think we should investigate the question not only of the charities which are embraced here, but the numerous charities in the District which never have received, so far as I know, or, if at all, only at widely separated intervals, any portion of the public money of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. Several of them have received nothing.

Mr. ALLISON. Several of them have received nothing. There are large charitable institutions in the District, now taking care of great numbers of people, which have never been the beneficiaries of the Government of the United States unless it has been temporarily.

The Committee on Appropriations have done the best they could with the question, with a view of eliciting the fullest information respecting it, and in the meantime doing the best possible. If the Senate can do better no one will be more contented than I.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CHILTON. Let the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "charities," in line 3, page 51, down to and including the word "control," in line 5, page 52, and to insert what is printed in italics after line 5, on page 52, down to and including line 22, on page 53.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. I do not see him present; therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I do not know how he would vote, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired on this vote with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. He would vote "nay," if present, and I should vote "yea."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCBRIDE. My colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH. I have a general pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am advised by the Senator who has charge of the pairs on this side of the Chamber that the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is absent without a pair. I will transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HILL. I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], but I transfer my pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], who is not otherwise paired, and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—35.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 53, line 23, after the word "yard," to insert "including rent"; so as to make the clause read:

For municipal lodging house and wood and stone yard, including rent, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For repairs to building, $5,000; in all, $25,000: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated for charities shall be paid for the purpose of maintaining or aiding, by payment for services or expenses or otherwise, any church or religious denomination.

So as to make the clause read:

For the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, maintenance, $20,000; for repairs to building, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I offer an amendment to come in on page 54, after line 6.

The SECRETARY. After line 6, page 54, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no member or members of any board or boards of trustees or directors of any charitable institution, organization, or corporation in the District of Columbia which is supported in whole or in part by appropriations made by Congress shall engage in traffic with said institution, organization, or corporation for financial gain; and any member or members of such board of trustees or directors who shall so engage in such traffic shall be deemed now and hereafter legally disqualified for service on said board or boards.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have the consent of the Senator in charge of the bill to return to page 40, and to propose again the amendment I presented concerning fire engines. I withdrew it at the time that I might get it phrased correctly and find out precisely what the Commissioners of the District recommended in their annual estimates. I have submitted the amendment to the Senator in charge of the bill. I move to add, after line 19, on page 40, the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 19, page 40, it is proposed to insert:

For two additional engines, and the lots, houses, and furniture therefor, the location thereof to be selected by the Commissioners of the District, $55,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Perhaps I had better explain why I give that figure. The engines will cost $4,500 each, making $9,000. In the estimates of the Commissioners, careful estimates, the sum for lot, house, and furniture for an engine is fixed at $23,000. I double that, making it $46,000, and I double the cost of an engine, making $9,000, the total being $55,000, all of which is a matter of estimates governed by experience.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 55, line 11, after the word "Provided," to strike out:

That before this appropriation shall become available the board of managers of said Industrial Home School shall transfer the control and management of said institution, with all its right, title, and interest in and to the same, to the board of children's guardians, who shall thereafter control and manage said institution as an industrial home school and for such other child-caring work as shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, drawing moneys for supplies and maintenance of said institution by requisition upon said Commissioners and paying over all income of said institution to the said Commissioners. Said transfer shall include a surrender of the charter and corporate franchises of said institution, and the filing of an irrevocable release and surrender of all control of the same with the said District Commissioners.

And insert:

That the board of managers of the Industrial Home School, on or before the 30th day of June, 1895, shall transfer said school to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and said Commissioners shall thereupon appoint a board of trustees of said school, consisting of nine members, whose terms of office shall be, for the first appointment, three members for one year, three members for two years, and three members for three years, and thereafter all appointments shall be for a term of three years, except appointments to fill out unexpired terms. The board of trustees so appointed by the Commissioners shall manage the school under such regulations as now exist or may hereafter be made by said board, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. All designations for employment in said school made by said board of trustees shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and, in the event of disapproval by said Commissioners of any selection by said board of trustees, the said Commissioners shall make the appointment. All supplies for said school shall be obtained by requisition upon said Commissioners, and all moneys received at said school as income thereof from sale of products and from payments for board and instruction, or otherwise, shall be paid over to said Commissioners to be expended by them for the support of the school as herein provided: Provided further, That wards of the board of children's guardians committed to the Industrial Home School shall be supported by said school without charge to said board.

So as to make the clause read:

Industrial Home School: For maintenance, including repairs, $9,900: Provided, That the board of managers of the Industrial Home School, etc.

Mr. TELLER. I move to amend the amendment in line 3 by striking out "ninety-five" and inserting "ninety-six"; so as to read:

The 30th day of June, 1896.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. In line 25, beginning with the word "Provided," I move to amend the amendment by striking out the remainder of the amendment down to the word "board," in line 3, on page 57.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, after the word "Provided," where it first appears in line 25, to strike out the remainder of the amendment down to and including the word "board," in line 3, page 57, as follows:

Provided further, That wards of the board of children's guardians committed to the Industrial Home School shall be supported by said school without charge to said board.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 57, after line 17, to insert:

That a joint select committee is hereby authorized, to consist of three Senators, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, which select committee shall make investigation of the charities and reformatory institutions of the District of Columbia, and especially of those for which appropriations are made by this act, as respects their relations to the government of the District of Columbia and to the United States, whether by special charter or otherwise, their efficiency, their management, and resources, whether by appropriations, investments, or otherwise, and also what portion, if any, of appropriations heretofore made to them have been used for the purpose of maintaining or aiding by payment for services, expenses, or otherwise any church or religious denomination; whether such charitable or reformatory institutions are effective and economical in their organization, methods, and expenditure to provide for the poor and destitute in the District of Columbia; whether it is practicable for the Commissioners or other authority in the District to make contracts for such care of the poor and destitute with any of said institutions, and if so, which of them and to what extent.

Said committee shall make report as soon as practicable after the beginning of the next session of the present Congress, including in such report any changes by them deemed advisable as respects the methods of dealing with the charities and the reformatory institutions of said District.

Said committee is authorized to sit during the recess, to employ a clerk and stenographer, and payment for such services and the necessary expenses of the committee shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives jointly on the certificate of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether he has any objection to the insertion, in line 13, after the word "contracts," of the words "or otherwise to provide." Of course they can be dropped out in conference if it is found desirable.

Mr. TELLER. No; I have no objection to the insertion of those words.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the amendment be amended in that way.

Mr. TELLER. I think that is a good suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "contracts," in line 13, it is proposed to insert "or otherwise to provide"; so as to read:

Whether it is practicable for the Commissioners or other authority in the District to make contracts or otherwise to provide for such care of the poor, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 59, line 20, under the head of "Militia for the District of Columbia," to increase the appropriation for expenses of rifle practice and matches, etc., from $2,500 to $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 25, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That hereafter all leases and contracts involving expenditures on account of the militia shall be made by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and appropriations for the militia shall be disbursed only upon vouchers duly authorized by the Commissioners, for which they shall be held strictly accountable;

So as to make the clause read:

For general incidental expenses of the service, $300: Provided, That hereafter all leases and contracts, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 17, under the head of "Water department," before the word "inspectors," to strike out "six" and insert "seven"; so as to make the clause read:

For revenue and inspection branch: For chief clerk, $1,800; two clerks, at $1,400 each; two clerks, at $1,000 each; chief inspector, $936; seven inspectors, at $900 each; messenger, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 21, before the word "hundred," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "two" and insert "four"; and on page 61, line 10, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-seven thousand" and insert "thirty-eight thousand one hundred"; so as to make the clause read:

For distribution branch: For superintendent, $1,800; draftsman, $1,500; foreman, $1,400; two clerks, at $1,000 each; timekeeper, $800; assistant foreman, $900; tapper and machinist, $900; assistant tapper, $600; three steam engineers, at $1,100 each; blacksmith, $750; two plumbers, at $750 each; two assistant machinists, at $864 each; property keeper, $900; three firemen, at $730 each; two flushers, at $540 each; driver, $480; two watchmen, at $480 each; hostler, $480; calker, $730; in all, $38,134.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 9, after the word "ninety-seven," to strike out:

Provided, That not exceeding $300,000 of the surplus general revenues of the District of Columbia remaining on the 1st day of July, 1896, shall be transferred to the water fund, to be applied in payment in full of the balance of the principal of the debt incurred for the 48-inch and Fourteenth street water mains, and in part of the principal of the debt incurred for increasing the water supply as provided in the act of July 15, 1882.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment which I intended to propose on page 15, at the end of line 10, which was passed over, be read:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to go back to pages 13 and 19, where we have passed over two committee amendments?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has asked to have an amendment on page 13 reserved.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to the language in the part from line 20 to line 25, inclusive, with the addition of what I send to the desk and move as an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 25, on page 13, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That said Spring road parkway shall conform to the present recorded map thereof, prepared by said Commissioners.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to say that, as I understand the case, I have no objection to the widening of Spring road parkway to 250 feet, provided it is done according to the present map prepared by the Commissioners of the District, which is in their office. I have heard that there is a purpose, if the authority is granted, to change that laying out and to widen it wholly on the south side of the present roadway.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can strike out the whole of that provision if he desires, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not desire to strike it out. The committee may strike it out if they desire. I only suggest the amendment, and I have given the reasons why I want it made. I do not wish the Commissioners to have the authority to change the present map.

Mr. TELLER. I shall not object to the amendment. Let it go.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 19 there is a provision in relation to street railways to which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] called my attention——

Mr. GORMAN. Before the Senator proceeds to that, will he permit me to offer an amendment, to come in after the word "granted"?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the word "granted," in line 11, on page 19, the following proviso:

Provided, That this provision shall not be construed to affect rights heretofore acquired either by contract or under any order of court made under authority of law.

Mr. TELLER. I see no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I shall not ask the Senator from Colorado to delay, though I had asked him to allow the amendment to which he has just referred to be passed over this morning. I had hoped to be able to have some conference with members of the District Committee, because the present form of the amendment is not satisfactory to me; but as the whole amendment will be open to consideration in conference, I shall not ask for any further delay at present. If hereafter the District Committee shall come to a conclusion, we can present it to the committee of conference, and it may then be considered according to whatever merit it may have.

Mr. TELLER. Let the committee amendment be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "collected," in line 5, on page 19, the Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment, to insert:

Provided, That no street railroad company in the District of Columbia shall be permitted to run cars over any part of the route of any underground electric or cable road by a route or routes not specified in its charter or specifically described in amendments thereto, except by authority of Congress hereafter to be granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let the amendment I have proposed be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

For payment for the lots and parts of lots condemned in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in case No. 419, district court, for the extension of Sixteenth street, $202,380.56.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 15, on page 16.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 15, on page 16, it is proposed to insert:

For paving with sheet asphaltum Eighteenth street extended and Cincinnati street from the intersection of Eighteenth street with Columbia road to the east entrance of the bridge crossing Rock Creek, near the Zoological Park, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I offer three amendments, all of which are to come in after line 2, on page 22.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

For grading and regulating Twentieth street extended to the southeasterly entrance to the Zoological Park, $2,500: Provided, That the owners of the Cliffburn tract shall dedicate the ground covered by such extension through such tract.

Mr. COCKRELL. There should be inserted in the amendment the words "for public use."

Mr. HARRIS. Insert the words "to the public use" after "dedicate."

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dedicate" it is proposed to insert "to the public use"; so as to read "shall dedicate to the public use the ground covered by such extension," etc.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. Let the next amendment, which I have sent to the desk, be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted, it is proposed to insert:

For improving and protecting Connecticut avenue extended, beyond Rock Creek, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I move to add after the amendment just adopted what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted it is proposed to insert:

For continuing the macadamizing of the road extending from the Broad Branch road to Chevy Chase Circle, $5,000; and authority is given to the District Commissioners to reconvey to the original owners any portion of said road upon receiving a conveyance of an equivalent, in conformity with the new plan of highways.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 20, at the end of line 22, I move to insert the proviso which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 22, on page 20, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That Connecticut avenue shall be extended straight from Leroy place to the District line, on the line of Connecticut avenue as now established in the city of Washington, and that a suitable grade on said avenue shall be established.

Mr. ALLISON. The object of that is to establish a line between those two points.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 22, line 5, before the word "dollars," I move to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five." My belief is that that sum will be required for grading and regulating those streets. We can examine the subject further in conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, on page 22, it is proposed to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five"; so as to read:

For grading and regulating Yale, Bismark, Princeton, Harvard, and Columbia streets, between Seventh and Fourteenth streets, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know whether the Senator from Colorado has called attention to the fact that the various amendments which have been made necessitate a change of the totals in the bill. The clerks should be authorized to make the change in the various provisions.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the clerks may be authorized to make the necessary changes in the totals throughout the bill to correspond with the amendments which have been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. PEFFER. On page 36 I ask the attention of the Senator from Colorado to line 21. After the word "at," in that line, I move to strike out the words "four hundred and eighty" and insert "six hundred"; so that it will make the annual salary of the drivers $600 instead of $480.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lines 21 and 22, on page 36, it is proposed to strike out the words "four hundred and eighty" and insert the words "six hundred"; so as to read:

Twenty-three drivers, at $600 each.

Mr. PEFFER. I desire to state to the Senator and to the Senate that on the 9th day of April I offered an amendment to be proposed to the District appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and reported favorably by that committee on the 25th day of April; but it seems that the Committee on Appropriations have not taken any action upon it, certainly not any affirmative action. If the Senator who has charge of the bill is willing to accept the amendment without any discussion, I shall of course be gratified.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that I do not think the Senator's amendment was presented to the committee. If it was, I have no recollection of seeing it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment to the bill, which I desire to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of Analostan Island, in the Potomac River, $112,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not detain the Senate to discuss this amendment, Mr. President, if there is a disposition to allow it to go into the bill without discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire where this island is, and what necessity there is for its purchase by the Government?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will read from the report. I will say that this matter was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and, under date of May 16, 1896, the Senator from Vermont

[Mr. PROCTOR] made a written report in favor of the proposition, in which he says:

Analostan Island lies in the Potomac River, directly opposite the mouth of Rock Creek and opposite also the reclaimed flats which will become a part of the park system of the District of Columbia. Situated above the main portion of the city, Analostan Island might easily become the property of persons who would use it for business purposes of an offensive nature. Moreover, it is probable that at some day in the near future a memorial bridge will be constructed at the foot of New York avenue. Such bridge will pass directly over the marshes which form the lower part of Analostan Island.

The committee understand that the island can now be purchased for a moderate sum, probably for $112,500. It contains about 54 acres of solid ground above the ordinary level of the tides, and about 24 acres of swamps at about the level of low tide. Besides this, there are a number of acres partially submerged, which could easily be reclaimed. Also, the Government owns the land on the Virginia side of the river between the Arlington Cemetery and the water, so that the island really lies between two portions of Government property, and its situation makes it inevitable that some day it must become Government property. In the opinion of the committee, it would be both wiser and more economical to hasten rather than postpone that day.

Mr. President, as a question has arisen on this amendment, I will occupy just a moment in its discussion. Analostan Island lies in the Potomac River almost immediately opposite Georgetown. There are to-day 75 acres of land in sight, 54 acres that rise to a considerable height above the tide, and 24 acres that are to-day about on a level with the tide, and it is estimated by those who examined it—I have made a personal examination of the property, but on this point I am not qualified to speak—it is estimated that when the Government reclaims those flats, as the Government will have to do some day, there will be there 150 acres of good land.

My attention was called to this matter in connection with the location of the proposed hospital for contagious diseases, and I visited the island with the view of examining it as to its availability for that purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask just one question there.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course, there is no means of conveyance to the island now except by water?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly not.

Mr. COCKRELL. And it is contemplated in the future to build a bridge there?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think not. I think that the contemplation that would be more proper would be to do what is done in Boston and in New York Harbor, where their public institutions are on islands, to have ferryboats. I think that would be the better and cheaper way. It is a very short distance from the shore.

Mr. COCKRELL. If a bridge should be constructed, resting upon that island and then extending to Arlington, could it be so constructed that access could be had to the island by vehicles, and everything of that kind?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think there is no question about that; and it is suggested that if we are to build a bridge to Arlington, one of the piers will undoubtedly rest upon Analostan Island.

Mr. COCKRELL. If a pier were resting there vehicles would not be enabled to get down on the island.

Mr. GALLINGER. That, of course, could be very readily obviated. I think there would be no engineering difficulty in the way of getting down to the island from that bridge. I should judge not. I think that will be conceded by everybody.

I visited this island with a view of determining whether it would be a desirable place for the purpose of locating the contemplated contagious diseases hospital; and I am free to say that in its present condition, in my judgment, it would not be desirable to put a hospital of that kind there on that island; but in the future, after the Government has reclaimed that land, and after the Government has added to the 74 acres now there almost as much more land as is purchased by the reclamation, which must at some time be made by the Government—and there is a clamor for it already—in my judgment it would then be an ideal place for all the public institutions of the District of Columbia, and not only could be put there the contagious diseases hospital, about which there is such a controversy to-day, but we could put there our workhouses and our penal institutions of all kinds, and eliminate from the District of Columbia all the institutions of that character which to-day are located in the District.

I will say in this connection that Dr. Busey, who stands at the head of his profession in the District of Columbia, being at the head of the Medical Association, argues that the island ought to be purchased for that purpose. He thinks the hospital for contagious diseases might now be erected there, although he is not clear as to its sanitary condition, not recently having visited it.

Dr. William W. Johnston, a very distinguished physician of Washington, says that no doubt this island ought to be bought by the Government for the purpose of putting these institutions there.

There is a very interesting article in the Washington Post of March 25, 1896, discussing this matter, in which it is said:

It is advanced that all such institutions will necessarily have to be isolated in the future, and that it would be wise, both on the part of the District and the United States governments, to buy the island before it becomes more valuable. If the property were purchased now and the swamps filled, it is said by army officers that the sanitary condition of Fort Myer would be improved 50 per cent. It is considered one of the most unhealthy army posts in the East, and if the plan suggested by the committee which examined the island were carried out the District would have about 150 acres of valuable land, which could be used to isolate any institution objectionable in the city, and the health of Fort Myer and all the surrounding country would be improved.

I notice that Mr. John McElroy, a well-known citizen of the District, and Mr. A. S. Solomons have also given their testimony; and recently Governor Shepherd, who is very highly regarded by the people of the District at the present time, whatever may have occurred in the past, and whose judgment upon this question I think would be taken by almost any Senator, when he was asked a question about the desirability of the Government purchasing Analostan Island, said:

I say, "Yes," unhesitatingly. They should own it for its connection with and partial control of the river improvements, which can not be properly brought to a conclusion save through the ownership of this island.

Furthermore, it is most desirable that the Government should own it in view of the proposed memorial bridge, of which it will form an important feature.

It is also needed for the improvement of the sanitary condition of the heights on which Fort Myer is situated, as well as the surrounding section of Washington City.

In every way it is a wise thing for the National Government to do, and it can never be done so cheaply and well as now.

Mr. President, in my judgment, if an island such as Analostan Island was in close proximity to any other large city in the American Union, it would be immediately purchased for public purposes. When you go into the harbor of Boston or New York you see what they have done there in the purchase of islands for the purpose of establishing upon them the public institutions.

Analostan Island, I will say, is to-day mortgaged in the vicinity of $70,000. I do not state the exact amount, but it is not far from $70,000. It is estimated by some people to be worth $150,000, and even more. The District Commissioners have given their opinion that $112,500 is a very reasonable price for the island, but it will certainly never be worth any less than it is to-day; and, as I before said, in the near future the Government will have to expend money to make the very improvements which, when made, will almost double the acreage of that island, and it is desirable that the Government in that view should own it so that it will come in possession of that added territory.

I am not an expert in real estate matters, and I would not want to put my opinion against that of Senators who know more about these things than I do, but, in my opinion, this is a matter that ought to engage the serious attention of Congress.

I sincerely trust that this amendment will be permitted to go in the bill to-day, and not only that, but I trust the conferees on the part of the Senate will insist upon it remaining in the bill, because it is in the line of good public policy and the economical use of the public money.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire what is the price of this property?

Mr. GALLINGER. One hundred and twelve thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. TELLER. It has been asserted that the property could be bought for $75,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was an entire mistake. The Senator who made that suggestion has written a letter to the Committee on the District of Columbia saying that he was laboring under a misapprehension when he made that suggestion to the committee.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state to the Senator from Colorado that the island has a mortgage on it now of $70,000.

Mr. TELLER. I only wanted to know whether we were paying an exorbitant price for the property. I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that the Government ought to buy it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment provides that only so much shall be expended as may be necessary; so if the amount named would seem to be too large, when we come to negotiate, if we can get it for less, the whole amount will not be necessary.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to strike out "$112,500" and insert "$75,000" as the price for this property.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that should be seriously contemplated by the Senate the amendment had better be withdrawn, because the property can not be purchased for that money and ought not to be purchased for that money. I hope the amendment to the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I had occasion to look at this island but a few days ago. It is a low island, unoccupied, yielding no revenue, and $500 an acre, it seems to me, would be an enormous price for it if a person were going to buy it as an investment. The amendment I offer proposes paying $1,000 an acre for this island. I have heard that within thirty days the property could have been purchased for $75,000, and now $37,500 has been added since the idea arose of selling it to the Government. I do not doubt but what this island can be purchased readily for $75,000, and I believe the owners will be glad to take that price, and take it very quickly. I think there is not a particle of doubt about it.

They certainly will take that sum if they are not very foolish people.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am informed, and I think by reputable parties, that $100,000 has been offered for the island. The Senator from South Dakota says it is a low island Fifty-four acres stand, I think, on an average of about 20 feet above high tide. It is not a low island, except that there are 34 acres that are now somewhat swampy, and there are 60 or 70 acres that can be reclaimed.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to inquire of the Senator, purely for information, whether the waters surrounding the island are not Government waters, that is, waters that come in from the river, navigable waters, over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction? Am I not right about that?

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume so.

Mr. PEFFER. Then, I inquire, where have the present owners secured their title?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not go into that subject. If this island is sold, of course a good title will be given, and the property has been in the hands of private individuals from time immemorial.

Mr. STEWART. The question of title will be examined by the Attorney-General under the general law.

Mr. GALLINGER. I meant to say, in connection with this matter, that there is an unsanitary condition, because the flats that surround this island to-day affect Fort Myer, but, in my judgment, they affect more seriously the city of Washington than Fort Myer, because the currents of air come from the south more often than from the north. I have no doubt that many men who are suffering from malaria are suffering from it because of the conditions surrounding that island.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. The question propounded by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] has a deeper significance than seems to have been given to it. If the waters of the Potomac are navigable waters, tide waters on both sides of that island, by what authority does any private individual obtain title to it?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that would not hold true on both sides of the island. There is on the Virginia side of the island a stream or waterway that is called Little River, but I do not imagine that anything, unless it may be a rowboat, has ever been on that Little River. Between the island and the shore of the city it is navigable water, I think, as high up as Georgetown, and this island is directly opposite to Georgetown.

Mr. ALLEN. But we come back to this question: There must have been a time in the history of the Potomac River when the waters on the west side, or the Virginia side, were navigable in fact. They are navigable in law now, as I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be so.

Mr. ALLEN. This island has been made from the wash of the river.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. The island has not been made from the wash of the river. It may have been made from the descent of a glacier over the country at some time. I do not know what made it; but it was not made by the wash of the river.

Mr. ALLEN. It is in the channel of a navigable stream. Now, I should like to know by what authority or whence private individuals obtain title to that island?

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska what difference it makes whether the stream is navigable or not?

Mr. ALLEN. It makes a great deal of difference.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask what difference it makes as to the question of title?

Mr. ALLEN. It makes this difference: A navigable stream and everything that belongs to that stream and is a part of it is by the public law of nations a highway, just exactly the same as the tree that grows in the highway is part of the highway; and whenever anyone claims that he has title to an island of that kind he must show some cession on the part of the sovereign to him, investing him with title to it.

Mr. GRAY. No more than the land on the banks of a stream.

Mr. ALLEN. There is all the difference that there is between daylight and darkness.

Mr. STEWART. I do not suppose it is necessary to settle that question now, because the Attorney-General will pass upon the title before the property is purchased. I was not aware that islands were any more public property than land of any other character. If there is any such theory as that, of course the Attorney-General will examine it. If the purchase is made, it will be made subject to examination by the Attorney-General as to title.

Mr. ALLEN. I guess that is true; I suppose there is no doubt about it.

Mr. STEWART. Of course the provision for the purchase will amount to nothing if the parties claiming title have no title.

I wish to make this remark: This movement resulted from an effort of certain persons to find a place for a contagious diseases hospital, and a good deal of attention was given to the subject. My attention was called to it on that account, and I have come to the same conclusion as the Senator from New Hampshire, after having examined it, that it is a very desirable purchase for the United States and that the United States ought to own the island.

The United States has got to improve the land about it, and a place is needed for such purposes, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] tells me that he is ready to vote with me if I quit. I certainly do not want to lose a vote by continuing the discussion, and I will quit.

Mr. GALLINGER. By consent, I desire to amend the amendment by adding to it:

The validity of the title to be determined by the Attorney-General of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. CARTER. Let the amendment as amended be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, after line 18, insert:

For the purchase of Analostan Island, in the Potomac River, $112,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the validity of the title to be determined by the Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the proposition is here presented to purchase an island in the Potomac River for the sum of $112,500. It is suggested, and probably with much force, that the title to this property is now in the United States.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. CARTER. That question has been raised on this floor in the course of this discussion. I submit that the passage of an act by Congress providing for the purchase of the island would be a recognition of the title in some other party than the United States. As has been aptly suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], the proposition of the United States to purchase would be equivalent to a waiver of any right or interest the United States may now have in that property.

But from no source does a suggestion come indicating any demand by the General Government for the use of the property. It is suggested that unhealthy sanitary conditions exist upon the island. If such be the fact, let the District authorities in execution of the law suppress the nuisance and compel the parties who claim title to remove the obnoxious conditions there existing. It is not needful that we purchase all the swamps adjacent to or in the river, in order to get rid of unhealthy conditions.

To pay the sum of $112,500 for an island the value of which no one has pretended to fix by appraisement or otherwise, with no proposition made here to condemn the property; with no existing need for it on the part of the Government or the District of Columbia, seems to me very much like placing a premium on the assiduous efforts of enterprising real estate agents who seek to sell to the Government a piece of property for this enormous sum, which, as has been suggested, could be purchased by private individuals for one-third of the sum named in the amendment.

In view of the fact that no necessity exists, in view of the fact that the United States may be at this time the owner of the property, and in view of the fact that we have not an overflowing Treasury, as Senators have borne testimony to on this floor from time to time during the present session, it seems to me that the real estate agents who represent this property should be politely requested to wait until the next session of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Montana will permit me, I will say that I have no knowledge of any real estate agent who is at all interested in this matter. The only parties I know of who are interested in it are the owners of the property, and I think any suggestion that has come has come directly from them.

Mr. GRAY. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that an amendment to his amendment be incorporated at some appropriate place which would make the purchase subject to the opinion of the Attorney-General as to the title.

Mr. GALLINGER. Instead of the amendment that I had incorporated just now let the Senator's amendment be substituted.

Mr. GRAY. What is the language of the provision already there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment, which has been adopted.

The Secretary read as follows:

The validity of the title to be determined by the Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. GRAY. That is the same thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, as I was out of the Chamber at the time this matter came up, I should like to have the Senator from New Hampshire or some other Senator explain the pressing necessity at this time for the purchase of this island for $112,500 when the Treasury is running behind every day. What is it proposed to do with it?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not care to occupy any unnecessary time upon this subject. I will endeavor to answer the Senator from Michigan in a few words. I did not argue that there was any pressing necessity for the purchase; I argued that it is good public policy to buy the island. I suggested that after the Government had done what the Government will necessarily have to do in the near future, reclaim the surroundings of that island, instead of being 74 acres of land as there are now, there will be 150 acres, and it will be an admirable place to put all the public institutions of the District of Columbia; besides which, very likely the pier of the proposed memorial bridge, if it is ever built, will rest upon that island.

Three years ago or thereabouts we made an appropriation for a contagious-disease hospital in this city and the District Commissioners have been unable to locate it up to the present time. They have tried to locate it in, I presume, forty different places, and there has been a rebellion against the proposed location. It is still in the air. It is my honest conviction, and I am glad to know that the medical profession of the District are in sympathy with my view in the matter, that this purchase will be a solution of that problem in the near future. In addition to that, all our penal institutions can be placed there, just as they are put on islands in Boston and New York harbor and some of the other great harbors of the country.

This is all I care to say upon the amendment. The Senate can do as it pleases about it. I have no interest in it either through real estate agents or anybody else.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether any estimate was submitted in the regular estimates of the Department for the purchase of this property?

Mr. TELLER. I am not aware that there was any estimate for it.

Mr. CARTER. Then I submit that the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Inasmuch as the amendment has been reported from a standing committee of the Senate, I submit that it is not obnoxious to a point of order.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to hear the amendment read again. I do not know that I understand it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After line 18, page 26, insert:

For the purchase of Analostan Island, in the Potomac River, $112,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the validity of the title to be determined by the Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. WHITE. The amendment means, I presume, that if the Attorney-General finds there is any title to the property then the money is to be paid to somebody. I presume, of course, there must be a title to the property, so that the question will be answered in the affirmative. It seems to me the amendment is very peculiarly drawn.

Mr. GALLINGER. Any suggestion that the Senator from California as a lawyer will make to improve the amendment will be accepted by the Senator who submitted it. We have no disposition at all to play on words in this matter. It is a plain business proposition.

Mr. ALLEN. Why not have the amendment call for a fee simple title?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the lawyers can settle that point among themselves it will be agreeable to me. I will say that I am not a lawyer.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest the propriety of amending the proposed amendment so that it will require a fee simple title. If we have got to purchase the island, instead of having such a title as the Attorney-General may approve of we want a fee simple title. The Attorney-General may be mistaken in the title. We would be bound by his judgment. However, we may be bound by it anyway.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator that there is not much danger of the District Commissioners or any other authority of the United States or of this District making a purchase involving $112,500 or any part of that amount without getting a good title to the property. It seems to me it is a reflection upon their good sense and business judgment. But still, as I before said, I am entirely willing to have the amendment changed in any way that may be agreeable to the legal gentlemen of this body who know more about the matter than I do.

Mr. ALLEN. It is not my purpose to reflect upon the character or the ability of anyone, if I can avoid doing so. It is no pleasure for me to do so. I raised a question as to the propriety of purchasing this island. I have not been convinced by anything said by the Senator from New Hampshire that we should purchase it. The same argument that has been used by the Senator from New Hampshire can be used with reference to every piece of private property in the District of Columbia. I suppose the time never will come in the history of the city of Washington when the real estate agents will not have some desirable piece of property here that they will want to sell to the Government at an exorbitant price. It is known, and I am surprised that the Committee on the District of Columbia do not put a check upon it to some extent, that there are men here organized for the express purpose of selling to the Government pieces of property at fabulous prices.

At this time, when there is such widespread distress among the people, when the Government is going in debt from month to month and from year to year to obtain money to pay the running expenses of the Government, why should we indulge in the needless luxury of purchasing an island for which there is no present demand? It is not claimed by the Senator from New Hampshire or the Committee on the District of Columbia that there is any pressing demand for this island. Why not wait until there is a demand for the construction of a hospital for contagious diseases; and possibly in the meantime the ingenuity of the Washington real estate syndicate will find a much more desirable place than this island.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to make a suggestion at this point?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. The question was raised by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] as to whether the enactment of a law to purchase the island is not a quasi recognition of the fact that the parties claiming to own the land have a good title.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know; I could not say that the passing of a bill of that kind would recognize their title. It would not be an estoppel, because the Government, being the sovereign power, can not be estopped. But I do submit this proposition, which seems to be treated somewhat lightly here by some of my legal brethren: An island that is situated in the channel of a navigable stream and has been formed by the wash of that stream is an incident of the public highway itself, a part of it, and it belongs to the sovereign power to which the channel itself belongs. I submit that as an elementary proposition of law.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator makes that suggestion upon a misapprehension of the fact. It is a rocky island and it has been there as long as the river has been there. It has not been formed in the way the Senator suggests.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not speak of the island in its incipiency. I do not recognize the Senator's interpretation of the law at all. I regret very much that I can not agree with him.

Mr. STEWART. It is not a question involving an interpretation of law; it is a question of fact.

Mr. ALLEN. Some time in the history of this navigable stream an island was formed in its center, when the waters were navigable in fact on both sides of the island, and are navigable in law to-day, and yet some person or persons claim to own a title to that island without showing, as I am informed, any cession on the part of the Government to them or to their grantors, immediate or remote. Now we propose to authorize the expenditure of one hundred and twelve and a half thousand dollars for the purchase of the island at this time without the specification of a solitary immediate use to which it is to be put.

Mr. President, we might as well anticipate at this moment that at some time in the history of the city of Washington it will have a million of population and the demand for public buildings will be double what it now is. I have no doubt in my own mind that that time may come if the Republic stands, and I hope it will. Yet would it not be perfectly idle now to authorize the expenditure of public money in the purchase of sites for imaginary or contemplated public improvements so far in advance of the actual demands of the Government? How many men who lie around this city get rich off of transactions of this kind? How many such things pass through Congress that smell to heaven of a job, of a transaction in which there is private gain to private individuals, and sometimes the stench reaches the garments of officials. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am in favor of this proposition, and I do not want to have it understood that there is any stench about it. I believe it is a good purchase, and I believe if the Government of the United States had done a good deal of purchasing of land for public purposes when it could have got it cheap it would not have paid out the millions and tens of millions of dollars in the way of condemnation that have been paid. Look at the price paid for the site for the city post-office building and all the other sites which have been bought. There has been an effort for years to obtain a place for crematories to dispose of garbage, and for various other municipal establishments.

Mr. HAWLEY. And a Printing Office.

Mr. STEWART. And a Printing Office. We are met with high prices, with speculation and opposition every time. Here is an island situated precisely with regard to this city as islands are with regard to other cities which are always purchased as being convenient for many purposes. It can be obtained now for an extremely low price. I am credibly informed that these heirs were offered some time ago $100,000 cash for this property. It is mortgaged for something over $70,000. There have been no real estate people connected with this transaction. It is not brought here by real estate agents at all.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Can the Senator state who offers the island for sale, and to whom it is mortgaged?

Mr. STEWART. I can not.

Mr. PETTIGREW. And the date of the mortgage?

Mr. STEWART. I can not tell you.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. STEWART. I know there are some heirs connected with it. I have not gone into the details, because the question of the title will be disposed of by the Attorney-General. I believe it is a proper purchase to make. That the United States will have to reclaim the flats about it, is certain. That is admitted on all hands. The Government has commenced this work and reclaimed the flats about the other islands below. Those were made islands. This is a high island, but it has flats about it in such a position that they affect Washington City and Georgetown. There is a clamor to have it improved. It is within the plan of improvements to improve the island and reclaim the land about it, which will belong to the mainland if that is done. It will then be private property, and the time is not far distant when, if purchased, it will have to be purchased at a much higher price. I believe the sum named is extremely low and that ultimately the Government has got to have it. It is a great deal better policy to buy those places that it is obvious the Government will want to use than to wait and pay ten prices when you have to force the sale by condemnation.

Mr. ALLEN. Would the Senator from Nevada permit an amendment to the bill providing for the purchase of this island by silver coined at a ratio of 16 to 1?

Mr. STEWART. Oh, let us have a vote.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I merely want to say, in reply to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], that so far as the title to the property of all the islands in the Potomac River is concerned, that has all been adjudicated long since. The grant to Lord Baltimore included all the islands in the river from its source to the mouth and to low water on the Virginia shore. A suit involving the whole question came up and went to the Supreme Court. A commission was appointed to settle the title and the title was determined to be in the State.

Mr. HAWLEY. We can not hear the Senator at all on this side.

Mr. GORMAN. I say to the Senator from Nebraska, in reply to his suggestion, that there is no question whatever as to the title of this property. The grant to Lord Baltimore included all the islands in the Potomac River from its source to the mouth. Afterwards the question came up; there was a controversy between the two States, and it went through the examination of a commission, and finally to the Supreme Court of the United States. So as to the title there is no question whatever. The parties who hold it at present are, I think, in the third or fourth generation from the original grantee. There can not be any question as to the title. As to the propriety of the purchase of the island, that is another matter.

Mr. MILLS. Was the island ever conveyed to the United States by the District of Columbia?

Mr. GORMAN. No; it was never conveyed to the United States. No private property within the District of Columbia was conveyed to the United States except within the limits of Georgetown and the city of Washington proper, where the owners conveyed by deed to the commissioners on behalf of the United States every other square and all the streets and avenues. As I said, there is no question about the title of the island. The question as to the riparian rights on this side was recently decided by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the case growing out of the improvement of the flats on this side. All of that title is in the United States; but there is no question in the world about the title to the island.

As to the propriety of the purchase of the island, we have been engaged for a good many years in ascertaining where it would be possible to find a place for a contagious diseases hospital, and it has been almost impossible to locate it. It was located in the northern section of the city some three or four years ago, and all the property holders in that region rebelled and said it would not do to have such a hospital with cases of scarlet fever there, and we gave way to them, and the same feeling has been manifested in every section of the city. The only contagious hospital we have located is immediately east of the present jail, and it appears that this island is actually the only place that is so isolated as to give no one any trouble. As to the property itself, I am perfectly familiar with it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland if it is a suitable place for a hospital?

Mr. GORMAN. I think the testimony of all the medical fraternity and everybody connected with the location of a hospital is that it is the most desirable place for it in the District. It seems to be the ideal place for it.

In addition to that, we will be compelled to fill up the flats in front of it for the health of this city and the health of the soldiers at Fort Myer, as we have done on this side. In doing that, if we acquire the property prior to filling it up we will in addition have about 100 acres that will be utilized.

Then there is the other project of crossing the river by a great bridge, as a memorial to General Grant. A bill has passed the Senate for that purpose. One of the piers, at least, of that bridge will rest upon this property.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator if the island will be suitable for hospital purposes previous to reclaiming the land around it?

Mr. GORMAN. Unquestionably, in my judgment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to say it would not.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire made a very frank statement. There is difference among the medical fraternity as to whether it ought to be done immediately or a little later on. I think this is the cheapest piece of property that has ever been offered to the Government since I have had the honor of a seat on this floor.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to state that as I understand it there are about 74 acres in the island; that 50 acres are above water; that 24 acres are partially under water and are overflowed when there is any material rise whatever in the Potomac River.

Mr. GALLINGER. How many acres?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Twenty-four acres are sometimes overflowed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understand that the island is of no use; it produces no revenue, and no one can buy it and make a living out of it in any way. It is an out-of-the-way piece of ground. The price, it seems to me, although I am not very familiar with the value of Washington real estate, at $500 would be so excessive that no man of judgment who wished to make an investment would touch it.

It seems that no one can tell anything about the island. Senators can not tell us who wants to sell it to the Government. They can not tell us who holds the mortgage. They say there is a mortgage of $70,000 upon it. It is very easy to mortgage a piece of miserable property like that for two or three hundred thousand dollars and then come and try to sell it to the Government above the price of the mortgage. That is no indication of value at all. They have not told us who has taken the mortgage or who has given it. There is no proof as to the value of the property at all, and I submit I do not believe any man would give $37,500 for the property.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a single word. I am sorry that the hearing of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] is so defective. I said that there are 54 acres of this land which rises 20 feet above high tide. There are 24 other acres level with high tide which, when reclaimed, will be good land. It is estimated, not by myself, but by competent authorities, that there will be 150 acres in all when the improvements are made.

I do not think it important to ascertain precisely who owns the land or who took the mortgage. I have personal knowledge of the fact that some very reputable people have title to the land, just as reputable people as there are in the District of Columbia. I have no question at all as to the Government getting good title. I have every reason to believe, my own mind is satisfied, that the property has been mortgaged for the amount stated in good faith and for a proper consideration. I think it is begging the question to talk about some swindling operation going on here. Nobody but the Senator from South Dakota has discovered that, unless it should be the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. They seem to have made a discovery which certainly is unknown to those of us who have taken a little interest in this matter and have given it careful consideration.

Mr. KYLE. There is no objection to telling the name of the owner.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very free to say to the Senator from South Dakota that I do not at this moment recall it.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] can tell.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] can tell the names.

Mr. KYLE. There is no need of mystification. Senators have asked who owns the land and who has the mortgage.

Mr. GALLINGER. What difference does it make who owns it?

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Vermont can tell.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not know the name of the male heir. I think a Mrs. Dewey, the wife of a naval officer, is interested in the matter. I have seen no one else. I have heard of no real estate agent. I am sure nobody has been before the committee. This lady, with the wife of a Senator, I think, called on one or two members of the committee, but the committee considered it entirely by themselves, without any outside influence from any party. It was stated that there was a mortgage upon the property. There is no question about the title. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has made that very clear indeed.

Mr. GRAY. The title is in two persons, heirs at law?

Mr. PROCTOR. The title is in two or three persons. I am not sure whether there are one or two brothers.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think there is only one brother. I so understood from this lady, the only person I have ever met in connection with it. The brother is either in very delicate health or a cripple—I can not remember now which she said; and my recollection is that she has transferred her interest entirely to him, looking forward to the surplus over and above the mortgage indebtedness for an amount sufficient to support him during the rest of his life.

Mr. PROCTOR. It appeared to the committee that within a short time we would probably be obliged to pay for a portion of the island for the proposed bridge to Fort Myer and Arlington, and that it would be a matter of economy to purchase the whole island while we could do so for a very reasonable sum.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] a question before he sits down. Upon what basis was the amendment presented by the Senator from Vermont on the 25th of April, providing for the purchase of this property for the sum of $75,000? I observe that such an amendment was presented to the Senate on that day for this purpose, and that the sum of $75,000 is named as the purchase price of the property.

Mr. PROCTOR. I had an impression (and it was because there was no hearing before the committee that I derived the impression in some way) that it might be purchased for that sum. I very soon found my mistake, and the change was made in the committee at a meeting when I was not present.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the proper plan to pursue in reference to this island is to provide in the bill for its condemnation by regular course of law. We seem to be fixing a price on the property without knowing whether we can get it for one-half that sum or not. If it is necessary for the Government to have the island, let us get it, and get it in the proper way. Let us go into the courts, hear testimony as to the value of the property, and proceed regularly to its condemnation and the divestiture of the title out of its present owner and its investment in the District of Columbia or in the Government of the United States.

I do not think it is the proper course to pursue to make an appropriation of a lump sum, hit or miss, in the light or in the dark, without knowing anything about the proper value of the land.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Texas permit me?

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. That very matter was before our committee and very fully discussed, and it was stated to the committee by some of the oldest Senators in this body that the Government has fared very badly in condemnation proceedings; that it has paid three and in some instances, I think, ten times the amount that the property was considered to be worth when it started out to condemn it. I think the amount paid for the land where the new post-office building is going up is a case in point. I will not undertake to state the increased value under the condemnation proceedings, but it seems to me that it was ten times or thereabouts. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] nods his head. I am inclined to think it was even much higher than that, and the Government, in all its condemnation proceedings, as I have been informed and as the committee was satisfied, has fared very badly.

Mr. MILLS. It is rather a strange commentary on trial by jury if we can not get a fair assessment of the value of property, and if the Government has to be plundered every time we submit a question of that sort to a sworn jury. It is rather calculated to shake our faith in one of the most ancient of all our institutions. I remember, when we were condemning property for the new Library building, a gentleman told me that for one of the lots that was condemned the Government paid him $10,000 less than he had been offered for the property. At least that is what a gentleman told me who knew of the fact. I thought it was a very great hardship. The thing was going the other way.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to remind him of the fact that the act which authorized the condemnation of property for the new Library building fixed a maximum limit and that limit of appropriation was simply apportioned between the various property holders?

Mr. MILLS. That was very unjust to the property owners.

Mr. HARRIS. So I thought at the time and so I have thought ever since.

Mr. MILLS. I do not want to do injustice to anybody. If it is necessary to have the island we want to get it in the proper way and to pay what it is worth, and nothing more.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know but that this may be a wise purchase. I only know that it is a new matter which has been brought to the attention of the Senate within the last few months. I do not believe that the price of the land will greatly enhance before we can have an opportunity to make a thorough examination in respect to title and the value of the property.

I know the amendment comes here with the sanction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I have great respect for the examinations and investigations made by that committee. It came as an amendment from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on Appropriations. We gave such investigation to the matter as we could. In fact, we made considerable inquiry upon the subject. We did not find that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia were prepared to give us any accurate or exact information respecting it. The Engineer Commissioner did not seem to know the extent or area of the island and its reclaimability or the cost of it.

I submit to Senators that, with so many important amendments already in the bill beyond what is proposed by the House of Representatives, it is unwise at this late hour to propose on the pending bill an amendment involving so large a sum of money to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia and the Treasury of the United States; and unless we can have a vote immediately upon the merits of the question I shall move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER and others. Let us vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is made upon the amendment by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. The amendment, as the Chair understands, was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that takes it out of the rule, and the point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] to the amendment.

Mr. STEWART and others (to Mr. PETTIGREW). Withdraw it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well; I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] as amended.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Being paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and not knowing how he would vote, I will withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if the senior Senator from Vermont were here.

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], but upon the express understanding that it is not to apply to cases having no political interest. I therefore exercise my discretion and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. He is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. QUAY. I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I am not aware how he would vote on this question, and therefore I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. I am assured that if he were present, he would vote "yea." Therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. Being informed by the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] that if the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] were here, he would vote "yea," I will record my vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bacon,	Faulkner,	Hill,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Jones, Ark.	Teller,
Brown,	Gibson,	Perkins,	Vest.
Caffery,	Gorman,	Platt,
Chandler,	Gray,	Proctor,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Smith,

NAYS—27.

Aldrich,	Carter,	Kyle,	Shoup,
Allen,	Chilton,	Mills,	Thurston,
Allison,	Cullom,	Nelson,	Walthall,
Baker,	Dubois,	Pasco,	Warren,
Bate,	Frye,	Peffer,	Wetmore,
Berry,	Hale,	Pettigrew,	White.
Burrows,	Hawley,	Roach,

NOT VOTING—41.

Blanchard,	George,	Martin,	Sherman,
Brice,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Squire,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Wis.	Tillman,
Call,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Cameron,	Irby,	Morrill,	Vilas,
Cannon,	Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Clark,	Lindsay,	Palmer,	Wilson,
Daniel,	Lodge,	Pritchard,	Wolcott.
Davis,	McBride,	Pugh,
Elkins,	McMillan,	Quay,
Gear,	Mantle,	Sewell,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have one or two amendments which I desire to offer for regulating and paving streets which were estimated for by the Commissioners, but which have been omitted from the bill. I send the amendment to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

For paving Massachusetts avenue extended from Twenty-second street to Sheridan Circle, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer another amendment to come in on page 21, after line 12.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

For grading and regulating Belmont and Kalorama streets between Eighteenth street and Columbia road, $1,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. On page 42, under the subhead of "Health department," in line 24, before the word "hundred," I move to strike out "two" and insert "eight"; so as to read:

Sanitary and food inspector, who shall also inspect dairy products, and shall be a practical chemist, $1,800.

I move this amendment because I know something of the man who was sought for as a capable chemist. He was getting $1,800 a year. He came here at $1,200, because that is all they could give him under the appropriation, with a promise that they would try to get it raised to $1,800, and every year for several years, I do not know how many, the District Commissioners have put into the estimates $1,800 for his salary. I think he deserves it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 7, on page 37, it is proposed to insert:

Each of the members of the Metropolitan police force shall be entitled to twenty days' leave of absence each year, with pay, the time of leave in each instance to be determined by the District Commissioners.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that I understand the police here have now ten days' leave of absence, and all of the Government employees have thirty days. I think the amendment is reasonable, and I do not desire to object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8673) to incorporate The National Society of Colonial Dames of America was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I wish to get it before the Senate, so that it may be the unfinished business for to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to the conference report being taken up, but I want to move an executive session.

Mr. GORMAN. It is not necessary to take up the conference report to-night, but it can be taken up in the morning as a privileged question.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well. Then I shall not ask to have it taken up to-night, but give notice that I shall call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 20, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate May 19, 1896.

POSTMASTER.

Harriet L. Hastings, to be postmaster at Port Gibson, in the county of Claiborne and State of Mississippi, in the place of Frank H. Foote, removed.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 19, 1896.

TERRITORIAL ASSOCIATE JUSTICE.

John C. Tarsney, of Missouri, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Oklahoma.

POSTMASTERS.

Simon B. Guthrie, to be postmaster at Gorham, in the county of Cumberland and State of Maine.

James Hudson, to be postmaster at Guilford, in the county of Piscataquis and State of Maine.

Fred M. Noyes, to be postmaster at Gardiner, in the county of Kennebec and State of Maine.

John H. Keelin, to be postmaster at East Greenwich, in the county of Kent and State of Rhode Island.

Cheney E. Parker, to be postmaster at Phillips, in the county of Franklin and State of Maine.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 19, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 5490) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. HULING, and Mr. MILNES.

The SPEAKER also announced as conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county, Mr. STEWART of New Jersey, Mr. JOY, and Mr. PATTERSON.

CONDEMNED CANNON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4324) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver one condemned cannon to the city of Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—RINAKER VS. DOWNING.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Elections No. 1, I submit a resolution which the committee desires to have passed, for the purpose of regulating the proceedings in the case of Rinaker against Downing.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Speaker and House of Representatives of the Fifty-fourth Congress:

The Committee on Elections No. 1 hereby respectfully submit to the House for its approval in the case of the contested election in the Sixteenth Congressional district of the State of Illinois, wherein John I. Rinaker is the contestant and Finis E. Downing is contestee, the resolution approved by said committee, as follows:

"Resolved, That F. J. Robinson, county clerk of the county of Cass, State of Illinois; Charles Flamm, county clerk of the county of Calhoun, State of Illinois; D. J. Murphy, county clerk of the county of Jersey, State of Illinois; William A. Hubbard, county clerk of the county of Greene, State of Illinois; Fred G. Oeltgen, county clerk of the county of Macoupin, State of Illinois; F. J. Heinl, county clerk of the county of Morgan, State of Illinois; V. A. Grimes, county clerk of the county of Pike, State of Illinois, and Charles Crisp, county clerk of the county of Scott and State of Illinois, be, and they are hereby, each ordered to be and appear before Elections Committee No. 1 of this House forthwith, then and there to testify before said committee, or such commission as shall be appointed, and the truth to speak touching any matters then to be inquired of them by said committee in the contested election case of John I. Rinaker vs. Finis E. Downing, now before said committee for investigation and report; and that they, and each of them, respectively, as such county clerks, bring with them all the ballots and packages of ballots cast in each of said counties at the general election held in said counties on the 6th day of November, A. D. 1894, for the election, among other officers, of Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Sixteenth district of Illinois, now in their custody, respectively; and that they each also bring with them, respectively, in addition to said packages of ballots, all poll books and tally sheets, and such other books and papers as relate to said election in their respective counties now in their custody or under the control of either of them, respectively; that said ballots be brought in the packages in which the same now are; that said ballots, poll books, and tally sheets be examined, and said ballots counted by or under the authority of said Committee on Elections in said case; and to that end, that subpœnas be issued to the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House, commanding him to summon said persons to appear with said papers as witnesses in said case, and that the expenses of executing such process, including necessary subsistence and mileage of said witnesses and all other expenses of this proceeding, be paid out of the contingent fund of this House; and that said committee be, and hereby is, empowered to send for all other persons and papers as it may find necessary to the proper determination of said controversy; and also be, and it is, empowered to select one or more competent committees to take the evidence and count said ballots or votes, and report the same to this Committee on Elections, under such regulations as shall be prescribed for that purpose; and that the aforesaid expenses be paid on the requisition of the chairman of said committee after the auditing and allowance thereof by the said Elections Committee No. 1."

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Is this the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, sir; the resolution is the unanimous agreement of the members of the committee. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DANIELS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have 100 copies of the resolution printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman wants to have printed 100 copies of the resolution already passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that 100 copies of the resolution be printed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FRANCIS E. HOOVER.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted a report upon the bill (H. R. 1094) granting a pension to Francis E. Hoover (vetoed by the President and referred to the committee with the accompanying veto message), and asked that the report be printed and recommitted; which was ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

DENNY VS. OWENS.

Mr. TURNER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 1. The report is in the contested-election case of George Denny, jr., vs. W. C. Owens, and is the unanimous report of the committee. I ask that the resolutions be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That George Denny, jr., was not elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Seventh district of Kentucky and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That W. C. Owens was elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Seventh district of Kentucky and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. TURNER of Virginia. I move the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were adopted.

On motion of Mr. TURNER of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL EMPLOYEES OF HOUSE POST-OFFICE.

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a resolution on behalf of the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster of the House is hereby authorized to employ two laborers at $3 per day for such time—not exceeding thirty days—as shall be necessary to distribute and deliver to the members of this House the garden and flower seeds, which are arriving in large quantities, said laborers to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is this from the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. ODELL. This is by authorization of the chairman of the committee, who requested me to offer it. I ask for its consideration.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the gentleman's statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that the resolution is not from the Committee on Accounts, but he asks unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. McMILLIN. Was not a resolution similar to this passed a short time ago?

Mr. ODELL. The resolution passed a short time ago provided for the employment of four assistants in the post-office. Only two were employed, and this is to continue those two without any extra expense beyond that provided in the first resolution. The time for which they were authorized to be employed expires to-day.

Mr. McMILLIN. The twenty days?

Mr. ODELL. The twenty days.

Mr. McMILLIN. And you want now to continue their employment for thirty days.

Mr. ODELL. This is to continue the employment of those two men.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is this reported from the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. ODELL. It has received informal consideration by the members of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think these matters ought to be a little more formal than that; but I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KEM. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5226) to give increased pension to Gen. James C. Parrott; and

A bill (H. R. 7285) for the relief of George McFarland.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 1215) granting a pension to Ellen Kingsley;

A bill (S. 125) for the relief of Elizabeth J. Cook, of Arkadelphia, Clark County, Ark., widow of Robert T. Cook;

A bill (S. 404) granting a pension to Samuel Goldwater;

A bill (S. 1044) granting a pension to Mary Newman;

A bill (S. 149) granting a pension to Helen M. Jacobs; and

A bill (S. 1837) granting a pension to Ellen Ewing, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Ewing.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6994) relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. GALLINGER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1189) granting a pension to Eliza Sanford, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendment, and had appointed Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. ROACH as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendment, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin, and Mr. BAKER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 266) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Deadwood, in the State of South Dakota;

A bill (S. 3064) authorizing the purchase by the United States and the making free of the toll roads passing over the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3122) for the relief of Bridget Lane;

A bill (S. 206) to provide an American register for the steamer Kahului; and

A bill (S. 2871) to amend "An act for the correction of the military record of Wilhelm Spiegelburg," approved July 21, 1892.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 3122) for the relief of Bridget Lane—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3064) authorizing the purchase by the United States and the making free of the toll roads passing over the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 2871) to amend "An act for the correction of the military record of Wilhelm Spiegelburg," approved July 21, 1892—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 266) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Deadwood, in the State of South Dakota—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1189) granting a pension to Eliza Sandford, with House amendment—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe, with House amendment—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1420) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth W. Sutherland, with House amendments—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CAROLINE A. HOUGH.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I move that a conference be asked for on the bill (H. R. 2604) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough, the Senate amendments to which were nonconcurred in by the House yesterday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. WOOD, Mr. SULLOWAY, and Mr. BAKER of Kansas.

IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the special order adopted yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this rule, and until 4 o'clock Wednesday, May 20, the time of the House shall be given to the consideration of such bills on the House Calendar as have been reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization; and that at 4 o'clock May 20, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the pending bill and pending amendments to the passage: Provided, however, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed as interfering with general appropriation bills and conference reports.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, allow me again to prefer a request for a reprint of the bills and reports under consideration, as I am informed that they are all exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the various bills to be before the House under the order just read and the accompanying reports. This requires unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. I object.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman in charge of this measure will pardon me for the suggestion, I think he may obviate at this time a difficulty that he will be likely to encounter later. The order was adopted in haste yesterday afternoon, and it does not provide any time for the consideration of this bill under the five-minute rule.

Now, there is danger, I fear, if the gentleman does not make some provision of this kind, that the whole time up to the last moment may be consumed by debate, allowing no opportunity whatever for amendment. I submit to the gentleman whether it would not be well to provide that the last hour or two hours devoted to the consideration of this bill to-morrow be assigned to the consideration of the bill by sections for the purpose of amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand, these bills are on the House Calendar, and are therefore subject to amendment at any moment as the debate progresses. They will not be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. McMILLIN. I did not know but that the bill carried an appropriation, and would be subject to the rule requiring the consideration of such bills in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DINGLEY. An amendment may be offered at any time and acted on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] will send up to be read the bill which he desires to have considered.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I send it to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, in amendment of the immigration and contract-labor acts, be, and hereby is, amended by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission to the United States the following: All male persons between 16 and 60 years of age who can not both read and write the English language or some other language. But no parent of a person now living in, or hereafter admitted to, this country shall be excluded because of his inability to read and write.

Sec. 2. That the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, to facilitate the enforcement of the immigration and contract-labor laws, shall apply to the persons mentioned in section 1 of this act.

Sec. 3. That this act shall take effect three months after its passage.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, a reprint of the report having been objected to by the gentleman from Nebraska, I ask that the report be now read, so that it may be incorporated in the RECORD, and that members may thus have an opportunity to see it in print to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The report may be read as part of the gentleman's remarks.

The report (by Mr. BARTHOLDT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9) entitled "A bill to amend the immigration laws of the United States," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that in lieu of House bill No. 9 the substitute do pass without amendment.

This is a bill enacting that three months after its passage no male person unable to read and write his own language shall be admitted to the United States, excepting children under the age of 16 years and parents of persons now living in or hereafter admitted to this country.

While the committee is unanimously of the opinion that good immigration is still beneficial and necessary for the development of the vast resources of our country, a regard for public sentiment as to the undesirability of certain classes has prompted them to favor the addition of the so-called illiterates, with the restrictions indicated, to the classes excluded under existing laws. A cursory examination of the figures bearing upon the question of an educational test will demonstrate that such a test will not materially affect the immigration from Great Britain, Germany, Scandinavia, and other countries of northern Europe, which countries as a rule send us the most desirable class of immigrants, while under it the immigration from southern Europe, now looked upon as more or less undesirable, will be considerably restricted.

The following table, showing the percentage of illiterates by nationalities, will give an idea of the effect of this bill on immigration from the countries furnishing the largest quota of immigrants:

Nationalities.	Percentage of illiterates in total immigration from each country.	Nationalities.	Percentage of illiterates in total immigration from each country.
Portugal	67.35	Spain	8.71
Italy	52.93	Ireland	7.27
Galicia and Bukowina	45.68	Finland	3.58
Poland	39.82	France (including Corsica)	3.50
Hungary	37.69	England	3.49
Russia (proper)	36.42	Netherlands	3.38
Other Austria	32.70	Scotland	2.83
Greece	25.18	Germany	2.49
Roumania	17.75	Norway	1.02
Belgium	15.22	Sweden	.74
Turkey in Europe	14.79	Switzerland	.60
Wales	10.43	Denmark	.49
Bohemia and Moravia	8.98

The original bill provided for the exclusion of male and female illiterates, but in view of the conceded scarcity of female white servants in nearly all parts of the country, the committee deemed it wise to exempt females from the illiteracy test and admit them as heretofore. The reason for the exemption of parents whose children have preceded them hither is obvious, and this provision requires no explanation further than that it was prompted by humane considerations.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether it would not be in order at the present time, with the consent of the gentleman occupying the floor, to move an amendment to the bill just reported, in order that the House may be fully informed as to the different propositions on which we desire a vote. If it is in order, I believe I have the consent of the chairman of the committee to offer the amendment now and have it read.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have no objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope there will be general assent to this arrangement, for then the amendment will be published in the RECORD and we can have it before us in printed form when we vote upon it.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think the amendment, if offered, had better be read.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I should like, also, to offer an amendment. I suggest that probably it would be well that the bills which it is proposed to offer as amendments to the one already read be presented now, so that the House may understand them.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There is no objection to printing all these bills and amendments if it is in order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I wish to offer as an amendment to the pending bills what is known as House bill No. 58. I wish to offer it as a third section to the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Missouri yields for the purpose——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understand that he does.

Mr. CORLISS. I ask that the amendment I have sent to the desk be first read.

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope the amendments will only be offered as they are in order, so that we may avoid confusion.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. My proposition is to insert as section 3 of the pending bill what is known as bill No. 58.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is your proposition an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, no.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then it is an amendment to the original bill?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. There can be pending but one amendment to the original bill, an amendment to that amendment, then a substitute, and an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not offer this as a substitute, but as an amendment to be inserted after the second section of the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] offers the amendment which will be read.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will offer mine as an amendment to that amendment.

The amendment of Mr. CORLISS was read, as follows:

At the end of section 2, line 4, page 1, add after the word "act" the following:

"SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any alien who resides or retains his home in a foreign country to enter the United States for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor within the borders thereof while residing or retaining his home in a foreign country: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may permit aliens to come into and enter this country for the purpose of teaching new arts or industries, under such rules and regulations as he may provide.

"SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ in any manner whatsoever in the United States any alien who resides or retains his home in a foreign country: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels navigating the Great Lakes or the rivers tributary thereto, or railroad-train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen, whose duties require them to pass over the frontier to reach the termini of their roads.

"SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any alien to enter the United States, except subjects of the Dominion of Canada and other American countries, except at the places where the United States maintain an immigrant inspection board.

"SEC. 6. That any violation of the provisions of this act shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for the term of not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. That all persons convicted under this act shall be deported to the country from whence they came."

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he has included American vessels engaged in foreign trade? I notice that he refers to vessels navigating the Great Lakes or the rivers tributary to the Great Lakes.

Mr. CORLISS. I will state that the amendment was proposed by the committee, and did not embrace all seamen, although I have no objection to the modification covering all seamen. The reason why the committee limited it to the seamen on the Great Lakes was because the lakes and rivers tributary thereto are between Canada and the United States, and are so interwoven that there might be violations which it would be impossible to reach.

Mr. DINGLEY. They are no more interwoven, I will state to the gentleman, than vessels engaged in the coastwise trade or near-by foreign trade.

Mr. CORLISS. I have no objection to striking out that provision of the bill and making it applicable to all vessels of the United States.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest that the gentleman modify the amendment by saying "vessels of the United States."

Mr. CORLISS. I will do so. I will so modify the amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Because, of course, there ought not to be such a limitation upon vessels engaged in foreign trade.

Now, do I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] has offered an amendment to the amendment or simply given notice of his intention to do so?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have offered my bill as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. It has not been read yet.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is not proper now to offer it as an amendment in that degree, is it?

Mr. CORLISS. I think an amendment to an amendment would be in order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. My motion is to amend the bill by adding three or four additional sections.

Mr. DINGLEY. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to be on an entirely different subject, as I understand it. However, it ought to be read. There may be some question as to the propriety of offering it at this time.

Mr. KIEFER. I object.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I desire to offer my bill as a substitute, then, Mr. Speaker, if in order.

The SPEAKER. It can be offered as a substitute.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I offer it as a substitute for the remainder of the pending bill after the first section.

Mr. KIEFER. I have objected——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to offer it as a substitute.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I send the bill to the desk and offer it as a substitute for the entire bill of the committee, which is offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], to follow the first section of his bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. There seems to be some misunderstanding as to the proposed action of gentlemen offering the amendments. Are these bills offered as amendments to be considered now, or are they simply giving notice of their intention to offer them when the proper time comes?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that they are offered now.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is that proper at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to know why it is not?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am asking for information.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman. The Chair thought the gentleman was making a point against offering them at this time. In the opinion of the Chair they are admissible.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, there is so much confusion it is utterly impossible to hear a sound on the floor.

A MEMBER. The storm outside is the trouble.

Mr. MORSE. I suggest that the Speaker can not control the thunder.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I am not asking him to control the thunder, but to control the members of the House.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I send the substitute to the desk and ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, in amendment of the immigration and contract labor acts, be, and hereby is, amended by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission to the United States the following: All male persons between 16 and 60 years of age who can not both read and write the English language or some other language; but no parent of a person now living in, or hereafter admitted to, this country shall be excluded because of his inability to read and write.

SEC. 2. That no alien immigrant shall be admitted within the United States unless, in addition to other requirements and provisions of law, he or she shall exhibit to the United States inspectors of arriving immigrants at the place of admission a certificate, signed by the United States consul or other authorized representative of the United States at the place nearest where said immigrant last resided, setting forth that the said consul or other United States representative has made an investigation concerning said immigrant, and that said immigrant does not belong to the class or classes of alien immigrants excluded from admission into the United States under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act in amendment to the various acts relative to immigration and the importation of aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor, its amendments or supplements," or by any other law of the United States that now exists or may hereafter be passed. Said immigrant shall, in addition, conform to all present requirements of law.

It shall be the duty of United States consuls and United States representatives in other countries to investigate and grant or withhold certificates, as shall be disclosed on investigation under the directions and instructions of the State Department, according to the laws of the United States, as aforesaid. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as in any wise limiting, releasing, or discharging any of the liabilities or obligations of any person, company, partnership, or corporation under laws now existing or hereafter enacted relative to immigration or importation of aliens.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any alien who resides or retains his home in a foreign country to enter the United States for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor within the borders thereof while residing or retaining his home in a foreign country: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may permit aliens to come into and enter this country for the purpose of teaching new arts or industries, under such rules and regulations as he may provide.

That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ in any manner whatsoever in the United States any alien who resides or retains his home in a foreign country: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels navigating the Great Lakes or the rivers tributary thereto.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any alien to enter the United States, except subjects of the Dominion of Canada and other American countries, except at the places where the United States maintain an immigrant inspection board.

SEC. 5. That any violation of the provisions of this act shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for the term of not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 6. That all persons convicted under this act shall be deported to the country whence they came.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this offered as a substitute?

The SPEAKER. This is offered as a substitute for the original bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] has included in that substitute the original McCall bill——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, and the Corliss bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS]——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. DINGLEY. As well as his own?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. MAHANY. I offer as an amendment to the amendment the bill which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] offers the following amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all contracts or agreements, express or implied, to perform labor or service of any kind by an alien in the United States, made in the United States or elsewhere, by or in behalf of such alien, with any citizen or resident of the United States or other country, knowing him or her to be such alien, prior to the coming of such alien to the United States, shall be illegal, null, and void; and the parties thereto, within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be construed as repealing section 5 of act of February 26, 1885, as amended by section 5 of act of March 3, 1891.

SEC. 2. That it shall be a misdemeanor, punishable by fine of not less than one hundred nor more than three hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for not less than three nor more than six months for each offense, for any person to perform labor in the United States who has become a citizen of the United States and returned to a foreign country, making the same his home and retaining the same as such thirty days after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That it shall be a misdemeanor, punishable by fine not exceeding $100 or by imprisonment not exceeding ninety days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, for any alien who has not immigrated to the United States, and who retains his or her home in a foreign country, to labor in the United States.

SEC. 4. That section 6 of the act of March 3, 1891, be, and is hereby, amended by adding to said section 6 the words "And any person or persons encouraging or soliciting the immigration or importation of any alien or aliens not related by ties of consanguinity or affinity to said person or persons into the United States to perform labor, either for himself or any other known or certain person or persons, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of said section of the act of March 3, 1891, and the penalties prescribed by said section shall be imposed for every such offense."

SEC. 5. That section 5 of the act of February 26, 1885, be, and is hereby, amended so as to exclude from said section 5, in the first proviso, the words "nor to persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants."

SEC. 6. That it shall be a misdemeanor, punishable by fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, for any person to enter the United States along the borders of Canada or Mexico to perform labor or service of any kind except at the places known as the United States custom ports of entry, whether by vessel or otherwise.

SEC. 7. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership company, or corporation knowingly to employ in any manner whatsoever in the United States any alien who resides or retains his home in a foreign country: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels navigating the Great Lakes or the rivers tributary thereto.

SEC. 8. That when any person has been deported from the United States under the provisions of act of February 26, 1885, and acts amendatory thereof, and thereafter returns thereto to perform labor for the person, company, or corporation whose contract or agreement with such alien had been the cause of his or her deportation, then such person, company, or corporation shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by fine of $2,000 or by imprisonment for two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, however, That this section shall not apply to cases where the alien returns to the United States under the provisions of law and becomes naturalized.

SEC. 9. That all United States immigrant inspectors shall have power to take into custody any alien convicted of a crime or misdemeanor within two years after his or her arrival in the United States and cause him or her to be deported to the country whence he or she came, and should he or she again return to the United States such officers shall rearrest said alien and bring him or her before a court having jurisdiction, and said alien shall be imprisoned for a period of not less than three months and not more than six months, and at the expiration of his or her sentence he or she shall be deported to the country whence said alien came; and any woman who shall within two years after her arrival in the United States become a prostitute shall be subject to such deportation and penalties as are herein provided for said convicted aliens.

SEC. 10. That every person who assaults, resists, impedes, or interferes with any immigrant inspector in the execution of his duties shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or be imprisoned for a term of not less than sixty days nor more than one year.

SEC. 11. That all criminal proceedings under this act shall be had and taken before any United States commissioner; and said commissioners are hereby invested, under this act and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, with power and authority to try and determine all such criminal proceedings hereunder where the fine imposed does not exceed $300 and the imprisonment does not exceed six months; and it shall be the duty of any immigrant inspector to make complaint of any violation of this act to said commissioner, who shall thereupon issue his warrant for the arrest of such offender or offenders.

SEC. 12. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty or head tax of 50 cents for each and every alien entering the United States along the borders of Canada and Mexico to perform labor, or immigrating to the United States, whether said alien comes by land carriage or otherwise. The said duty shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port to which such alien shall come, and the collector of such port shall pay the money so collected into the United States Treasury, such money to constitute a fund for the general purposes and expenses of carrying this act into effect; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby empowered to establish such regulations and rules, not inconsistent with law, as he shall deem best calculated for the enforcement of this act.

SEC. 13. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 14. That this act shall take effect on and after its passage.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I should like to offer either an amendment or a substitute.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] offered as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS]?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Strictly speaking, it is not an amendment. It covers half a dozen subjects.

Mr. MAHANY. The only part that is an amendment is the part not contained in the Corliss bill, the provisions of which are similar to most of the provisions of my bill. Therefore I can not see how my proposition can fail to be germane.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I desire to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must state their points of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I desire to reserve points of order as to all the amendments and the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must present his points of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Can not points of order be reserved without being stated now?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I think I was recognized a while ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not be recognized while a point of order is suggested with regard to an amendment already pending.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not propose to make a point of order now. I desire to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can reserve a point of order by unanimous consent only.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that will be done, Mr. Speaker, because the amendments have been read so hurriedly that it is impossible at this time for some of us to determine whether they are subject to points of order or not.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The bills have been read so hurriedly that I think half of the members of the House do not understand what they contain.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I believe, from what I have heard during the reading, that some of the bills are not germane to the main bill. That is the point of order I should like to submit.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is not a good point of order to a substitute. It may be a good point of order to an amendment. If the gentleman will state his points of order and let us understand what they are, that is one thing. If unanimous consent is asked to reserve points of order, I object.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then I think it would be well for us to vote on these amendments, so that we may get down to some single proposition. Various bills have been offered, and the members of the House can not understand what the parliamentary situation is.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is utterly impossible to understand it at this time.

The SPEAKER. The matter stands now in this way, that the bill is presented, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] has offered an amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] has offered a substitute, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] offers an amendment to the amendment. That is as far as the matter has gone now.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. In order to make the explanation of the Chair clear, I desire to know if the bill that is under consideration is the bill offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]?

The SPEAKER. That is the bill which he offers, and which was reported to the House.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Then there was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] and a substitute by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. And to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] the present amendment is now offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the amendment to the amendment is not such in reality. It is an entire bill, with 14 sections in it, with some slight reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS]; but an amendment to an amendment should be some modification of the proposition which is contained in that amendment and not a proposition covering a dozen different things.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] on the point, if he desires to be heard.

Mr. MAHANY. I have not time at the present moment to go into the presentation and discussion of the points wherein my bill does amend and modify the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. But there is a large portion of it that does not so modify and amend it.

Mr. MAHANY. There are some portions of it amplifying the principles of the Corliss measure.

The SPEAKER. That is why the point is made. If those parts are not germane, then the whole is not germane.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, I would suggest to the gentleman from New York that he should not offer this at the present time as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, but after that amendment is disposed of, or some other amendment is disposed of, then he might offer it as a substitute, perhaps, for the whole bill in some other form. While it does cover some of the points in the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, it is not an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, but covers far wider ground.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair is inclined to think, but will hear the gentleman from New York, if he has anything to offer.

Mr. HOPKINS. Just one further word about that. If the substitute or amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] should be adopted that would preclude the offering of this bill entirely, would it not?

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wanted the gentleman from New York to understand that.

Mr. MAHANY. I want to say that this is a bill that has been favorably reported by the Committee on Immigration. This is a bill that has the united indorsement of all the labor federations of this country.

The SPEAKER. But that does not have much to do with the point of order.

Mr. MAHANY. And I wish to say that it is a modification of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], since it amends that bill by adding thereto subjects which are germane to the purpose and intent of his measure, and to that degree it is in the spirit of the bill, and should therefore be regarded as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. But the difficulty about regarding this as an amendment to the amendment is that the greater part of the bill does not treat of that subject at all.

Mr. MAHANY. It treats in a general way of the exclusion of alien contract labor, which is the purpose of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Michigan, whose measure aims simply to regulate Canadian immigration along the lake frontiers, while my amendment strikes at the root of the whole alien contract evil; and it seems to me, therefore, that if any bill is germane to another, this bill introduced by me is germane to the measure introduced by the gentleman from Michigan; and I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] will withdraw his point of order. I will ask the gentleman if he has read the Corliss bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, certainly; I have read both of them. What occurs to me on the matter of its being germane is this. Of course I do not know that I have any objection to the bill proposed by the gentleman from New York, but it seems to me that it covers so many different points that it ought to be separately treated and not included with this bill, which is simply a bill dealing with the question of immigration. I think the subjects are distinctly different in your measure.

Mr. MAHANY. It covers several points of the same subject, the subject now under consideration in this House, and the very points of this measure must in the nature of things come up during the course of this debate; and I sincerely hope, in the interest of fairness, justice, and equity to the laboring people of this country that this point of order will not be insisted upon, even if by torturing the spirit of the rule the provisions of this bill might be regarded as not in accordance with the letter.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have simply to say, with reference to that, that this is a question of orderly parliamentary procedure, with which the merits of a bill have nothing at all to do.

Mr. MAHANY. But I am standing on the rights of the bill from the standpoint of that very procedure.

Mr. DINGLEY. I may be in favor of a protective tariff, but would hardly care to offer it as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. MAHANY. Very likely, because that subject has nothing to do with the present matter.

Mr. DINGLEY. And although that should even arise on the very subject, we should not enter or wander out into other fields because we should like to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MAHANY. A parliamentary inquiry. If the substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is voted down, could I then offer this in its stead?

The SPEAKER. There are circumstances under which the gentleman could and there are others under which he could not. The Chair can not anticipate at what time that would be. The gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] desires to present an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer the bill which I send to the desk as a substitute for all the pending bills, or as an amendment, whichever is in order.

The SPEAKER. One substitute has already been offered.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then I offer this as an amendment to the bill of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

The amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of California was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after August 1, 1896, it shall be unlawful for any foreign-born laborer to enter the United States. The words "foreign-born laborer" shall be construed to mean, wherever used in this act, skilled and unskilled laborers and laborers employed in mining.

SEC. 2. That all captains and masters of vessels entering the ports of the United States are hereby made responsible for the character of their passengers. It is hereby made the duty of all such captains and masters to file with the collector of the port of the United States into which their vessel enters an affidavit setting forth fully the character and names of the passengers by them brought in their said vessels, and also setting forth that none of them are foreign-born laborers and that they have not brought into the said port any foreign-born laborers on their said vessels. A violation of the provisions of this section shall be deemed a misdemeanor and shall be punished by fine not less than $500 or by imprisonment not less than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 3. That any foreign-born laborer coming into the United States after August 1, 1896, shall be subjected to immediate deportation, and shall in addition thereto be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable as provided by law.

SEC. 4. That it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and distribute to the proper officers the necessary instructions and blanks and reports for the proper enforcement of this law, and it is hereby made the duty of all United States officers to promptly and thoroughly enforce the provisions of this statute, to the end that this law may be fully complied with and foreign-born laborers be prevented from entering the United States.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $60,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses of enforcing this law.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is not germane to the original bill or to the substitute. I also make the point that it has not been reported by the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. So far as the second proposition of the gentleman from Missouri is concerned, that this bill has not been reported by the Committee on Immigration, I do not suppose that committee has any control over the business of this House or over points of order, and I do not know of any rule which makes a bill amenable to a point of order simply because it has not met the approval of the Committee on Immigration. The object of the Stone bill is to prevent foreign laborers from coming into the United States except under certain conditions, and it provides for a consular inspection, and it seems to me that my amendment is germane to that, because it prohibits foreign labor from coming into the United States. If the part of the amendment which makes an appropriation renders the bill amenable to the point of order, then I ask permission to strike out that section, so as to leave simply the question whether my amendment is not germane to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. His bill seeks to make it onerous for a certain class of persons to come to the United States, while my bill prohibits them from coming, and therefore it seems to me that my amendment is clearly germane.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I was about to raise a point of order, and I do raise it, that this bill involves an appropriation, and I object to that part of it being stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask that that section of the amendment be stricken out.

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to the proposition that that part of the gentlemen's amendment be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can modify his amendment until it is put to the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then I do modify it by striking out the section which makes an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] on the point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to state that, as I understand the rule adopted by the House yesterday, only such bills were to be considered as had been reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. Now, the gentleman from California offers as an amendment a bill which has not been so reported to the House, and under the rule as adopted yesterday I claim that this House has no authority to consider that bill. My second point is that this is not germane to the main bill pending, the measure under discussion.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As to the first point, Mr. Speaker, the committee has called up only one bill, which is, of course, subject to amendment and to have a substitute for it offered. On the second point I do not care to make any remark.

The SPEAKER. To which of the bills does the gentleman from California offer this bill as an amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I offer it as an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I understood the Chair to say that I could not offer it as a substitute, because there was one substitute already pending, but that I could offer it as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. In what shape does the gentleman propose to offer it as an amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. As an addition to the Stone bill. I offer it as an addition to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as the Chair understands it, simply provides for the method of certifying as to persons who shall be admitted into the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It also provides for a consular inspection, and it contains a provision for the exclusion of certain alien laborers. The gentleman from Pennsylvania in his bill has provided for the exclusion of certain alien laborers as well as for consular inspection. My bill provides for the exclusion of all of them.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose to add his bill to the other as an amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a bill providing that nobody shall come into the United States can hardly be germane as an addition to a bill which provides that only those who can read and write shall come in and provides for consular certificates as to those who may come in.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. All right. The Chair is the one to decide.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I wish some arrangement could be made as to the control of the time. I understand that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK], a member of the committee, desires to control the time on the part of the opponents of the measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I submit that that is scarcely fair.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is recognized to proceed with the debate.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is it understood that none of the pending amendments are to be voted upon until the debate is exhausted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no such understanding.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I should like to submit, as a request for unanimous consent, that no vote be taken on any one of the pending amendments until the debate is exhausted.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE and others objected.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I desire to ask unanimous consent to have the substitute offered by me printed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, there is no problem confronting the American people more talked about and less generally understood than the problem of immigration. In prosperous times these waves of humanity are permitted to come to our shores unmolested, but in periods of industrial depression every shipload of newcomers is regarded, more or less, in the light of a hostile invasion or a curse. Then the spirit of nativism, omnipresent, if not always active, becomes rampant, and, uniting with liberty-loving labor, asks Congress to deny the right of asylum to those who come here to cast their lot with us, and demands of us to cast away, like a worn-out garment, the traditional policy of the fathers, a pearl in the diadem of free institutions, and to adopt, under the spur of passionate impulses, plans which patriots and thinkers know can not be carried out without serious injury to the interests of our common country.

The shocking cry of infuriated Chinese mobs, "Kill the foreign devils!" is still resounding in the ears of the civilized world. No other cause can be assigned for these outbreaks than that the people of the Celestial Empire, reared in prejudice against all foreigners, were afraid of us and of our civilization and religion, which, evidently, they regard as inferior to theirs. Looking for a further explanation of these lamentable riots, we might also find a sentiment of retaliation, because we have erected the same Chinese wall against the Celestials the removal of which from their own domain compelled them to use their fists and weapons against the "foreign devils." But they are heathen Chinese, they are barbarians. They would be apt to translate the words "all men are born equal," that grandest and most fearless declaration ever made by mortal man, into "all Chinese are born equal, to the exclusion of every other human being." And what do they know of Christian love and charity and tolerance, and of the great precepts of that faith, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," or "Do unto others as you would wish others to do unto you"? And what do these barbarians know of the brotherhood of man, that beautiful dream which the annihilation of distances by modern inventions brings nearer and nearer its realization, and of the genius of an independent, free, and humane people? No, Mr. Speaker, no grosser insult could be offered to the American people than by an attempted comparison, or by the assertion that even a dozen of our citizens were animated by the same spirit that caused the Chinese riots.

Four different and distinct reasons are being advanced for the further restriction of immigration, and in a candid, dispassionate discussion of these reasons can be said all that is to be said on the subject. They are: First, nonassimilation of many immigrants and the evils resulting therefrom; second, overcrowding; third, the competition of immigrants with our own labor; and fourth, the recent increase of arrivals of less desirable elements of Europe's surplus population. After a twenty-year study of this question, extending to all its bearings and carried on here as well as on the other side of the Atlantic, during several visits to the Old World made for that purpose, I feel competent to discuss it with some degree of knowledge of detail, and while doing so I ask the kind indulgence of the House. Let me say at the outset that of all the reasons enumerated above the only valid one, in my judgment, is the fourth or last, which relates to the deterioration, so to speak, noticeable of late in the character of our immigration.

The bill under discussion and which the committee asks the House to pass is based on this point.

NONASSIMILATION.

On this phase of the question I will first quote from some remarks I made to my own constituents in the last campaign, and which, as far as I could see, had their entire approbation:

"When the plain people of all the earth, of every tongue and race and clime, were seen crowding the ocean's pathways leading to the promised land of a new dispensation, then a great problem came—how to remove the barriers which prejudice, ambition, and the tyranny of kings had erected, how to harmonize and unify where centuries of strife had nurtured only hatred? The solution of this problem was to be one of the proudest boasts of our great flag. The solution of this problem was to be worked out in the valleys of the Connecticut, the Hudson, and the Mississippi, in the shadow of the Alleghanies and the Rockies, and out upon the great and silent prairies of the West. America, true to the mission of the flag, to the genius of her people, began to grapple with the problem, and at last the light broke in. The schoolhouse was planted upon all the hillsides and in every valley of the great Republic. Education solves the problem. All our varied nationalities have been welded and blended into one mighty unit of patriotic American citizenship. We are no longer German, English, Irish, Scandinavian. Under the great flag we are nothing unless, one and all, heart and soul, we are Americans." [Applause.]

Such are the sentiments, Mr. Speaker, of a vast majority of our adopted citizens to-day. The history of the late war bears witness. Taking the Germans alone, they furnished a larger quota to the armies of the North, in proportion to their number, than did the native citizens, and if it had not been for the immigrants that fought, bled, and died for their adopted country the Union might have been rent asunder. Let us respect history. On the 10th of May, 1861, the Germans of St. Louis, by capturing Camp Jackson, frustrated the conspiracy of Governor Jackson with the rebel chiefs and saved Missouri to the Union. On the march from the city to the camp they were jeered and hooted, but these "d——d Dutch," as they were called, were inspired by love of country and devotion to the flag, and they won. And, mind you, the majority of them at that time could hardly speak the English language, which shows conclusively that patriotism is not a matter of tongue, but of heart and sentiment. It is true that these patriots and their descendants, like other immigrants and their offspring, love to speak their mother tongue to-day, but in this they are merely true to themselves; and I hold that the citizen who is not true to himself can be true neither to anybody else nor to his country. In this respect they are, unfortunately, like the only genuine Americans, the Indians, who will have to learn English before they can make themselves understood to the American people. But in this I can see no danger, for whatever tongue European immigrants may speak, they are being rapidly assimilated, and soon become thoroughly Americanized in spirit. They are almost without exception representatives of civilized nations.

They are no Chinese. Fairness will compel us to admit that they come to better their social and economic condition, or from love of liberty and to escape the despotism of the Old World, or for both purposes, but for no other. In each case they give us an equivalent for what they receive, and they certainly render us material aid in the development of the country. What these willing workers contribute to the general growth of the country by coming hither and earning their daily bread in the sweat of their brow may not be a large percentage of the grand total, but it is infinitely more than what both our own bonanza kings and the alien landowners who are living in London, Paris, and the Riviera, and are now supporting a European pauper nobility with the millions earned for them by the American people, can boast of doing for the good of the Republic. If we could stop this exodus of American dollars there would be no need of minding the influx of human beings. But perhaps we can not stop it, and in our impotent rage we turn upon the poor immigrant who comes to help us earn the money our nabobs lavishly spend abroad. And yet, Mr. Speaker, this poor immigrant in search of employment or peacefully laboring is, in my judgment, a better American from the first day than those who prefer the glitter of courts and crowns to the resplendent glory of a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people. While the latter, in drifting away from us, boast of their dissimilarity to us, the former strive to assimilate with us, and in this, as experience teaches, succeed so well that you will hardly be able to distinguish their children and grandchildren from your own. Go and see in our public schools the children of German, Irish, Bohemian, and Italian parents waving the Stars and Stripes on the glorious Fourth, and you will fully appreciate the meaning of my statement, that education is solving the problem. [Applause.]

OVERCROWDING.

There is no politics in the immigration question, and I have no hesitancy in quoting on this subject a gentleman who belongs to another party and holds political and economic views in many respects differing from my own. At a recent dinner of the Massachusetts Reform Club at Boston, Mr. William Lloyd Garrison said:

> A nation of immigrants and the children of immigrants, having obtained possession of the continent, are considering the feasibility of barring out other immigrants. They assume to have the right to determine who shall be admitted hereafter and who shall not. It is pertinent to demand the evidence of their authority. The United States is a considerable fraction of the habitable globe, sparsely settled, with a population of 21 to the square mile, compared with 311 in Great Britain, 234 in Germany, and 187 in France. Its resources are as yet measureless: and, to use Mr. Atkinson's words, it contains "incalculable room for immigrants." Indeed, he figures that all the inhabitants of the nation can find standing room in the town of Brookline, the mothers holding their babes in their arms, and still have room to spare. Conclusively, it is not on the ground of overcrowding that danger arises from the incoming of foreigners. Your authority, gentlemen of the restricted persuasion, for this enormous assumption of power. Show us your title deed. If a nation has a right to keep out aliens, tell us how many people constitute a nation, and what geographical area they have a right to claim? In the United States where a thousand millions can live in peace and plenty under just conditions, who gives to 70,000,000 the right to monopolize the territory? How few can justly own the earth and deprive those who are landless of the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness? And what becomes of the rights of the excluded? Is there any justification of such assumption except the ground of might? It is the simple power of force and not of justice.

These sentiments, Mr. Speaker, uttered by an unterrified patriot, are identical with those which inspired the founders of this Republic, when in the Declaration of Independence they hurled the following indictment against a British tyrant:

> He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States, for that purpose obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners, refusing to pass others to encourage their migration hither, and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands.

It is true that conditions have changed since the Declaration of Independence electrified the world. In 1790, when that great instrument had become the inspiration of the French Revolution, our first census was taken, which showed a population of 3,231,930. Now we have 70,000,000, but still I deny the proposition that this free country should not be able to support as many people to the square mile as the military despotisms of the Old World. I claim that that country represents the highest type of civilization which supports decently and comfortably the largest number of people to the square mile of its territory. If we are able to rise to the European level in this respect, and I insist with every patriot that we are, then we have room in this country for more than five times the present population, or 386,000,000 people. Alarmists and pessimists who are constantly at work conjuring up the specter of overpopulation and reforming the policy of the fathers will profit by a study of the following facts and figures:

According to the census of 1890 we had a population of 62,622,250. If that whole population of the country should have moved into Texas that State would not be populated much more densely than Germany and not half as densely as Belgium is to-day. Have you ever thought of that? Figure it out yourselves by dividing the population by 265,780, the area of that State in square miles. Texas has a population of 2,235,523, or eight souls to the square mile; the whole United States has 16 inhabitants to the square mile, having an area of 3,602,250 square miles, while Germany has 235, Belgium 530, and the whole of Europe 107 heads to each square mile of territory. The United States, if populated as densely as Belgium, would have a population thirty-one times the present number, or over nineteen hundred millions of people! But in order to enable gentlemen to make their own calculation I shall insert in my remarks a table showing the area and population of these countries:

	Area in square miles.	Population.	Per square mile.
United States	3,602,990	62,622,250	16
Europe	3,555,000	380,200,000	107
Texas	265,780	2,235,523	8
Germany	211,108	49,421,064	235
Belgium	11,373	6,060,043	530

The rate of our natural increase of population is, according to the census, 1.38 per cent; in other words, about a million a year. Add thereto, if the present rate of immigration is maintained, an annual increase from that source of 250,000, and we will have, with a total annual increase of 1,250,000, about 75,000,000 people at the time of the next census and the end of the present century. At this rate not less than twenty-five generations will have gone down into their graves before this country will see a population as dense as that of Belgium is to-day.

Are we not capable, I ask again, of supporting as large a population relatively as the countries of Europe; and if not, why not?

Germany is rejoicing in her lastest census returns, because they reveal an increase of population from forty-nine to fifty-two millions in five years. France has put a premium on fecundity by granting tax exemptions to fathers who are blessed with a certain number of children. Every State, county, and city in the United States is exultant over every census return showing an extraordinary increase of population. The reason for this is apparent. It is because the value of land and investments is fixed by population. Its decrease lessens that value and its increase augments it. Take away one-half of New York's population and each front foot on Broadway will lose half of its value, while land in Texas, which is now sold at $5 per acre, will gradually sell at $500 if you attract a sufficient number of people there. Our abnormal growth, the marvelous increase in values and national wealth, is due to abnormal causes, not to the natural surplus of births over deaths, but to immigration.

COMPETITION WITH AMERICAN LABOR.

If the arguments of those are correct who are advocating further restriction because of the competion of immigrants with American labor, then, Mr. Speaker, partial restriction would afford but partial protection. In that case nothing short of total prohibition would cure the evil, and as a friend of the wage worker I should be the first to advocate such radical legislation. It might be a violation of principle, of morals, of the spirit of liberty, and of international comity, but self-preservation, being the first law of nature with nations as well as with individuals, would justify the closing of the doors of the Republic. But how easy it is to prove the fallacy and absurdity of these arguments!

In the fifties, and more especially under Buchanan's Administration, when the Know-Nothing movement was at its height, this country witnessed the same outcry, even more furious than now, against the admission of foreigners. Then, as now, the country passed through a crisis, many factories were closed, and labor was unemployed. Congress was asked to stop immigration, which was erroneously regarded as the source of the trouble. But the appeal was unheeded, and how fortunate for us to-day that it was; because the forty years which have elapsed since, no one will deny, were destined to be the most glorious, the most prosperous period in our history, in spite of—some will even assert because of—the fact that immigration had practically remained unrestricted. This object lesson is within the memory of nearly all of us, and we also know that the change from hard to good times, then wrought in spite of continued immigration, was due to a change of our economic policy from free trade to protection. Since 1856 nearly 14,000,000 people came from foreign shores, and it is not partisanship, but a candid regard for facts, which prompts me to ask these pertinent questions: If their coming tends to a reduction of wages, and to an increase of the number of unemployed, and is generally detrimental to the country, why is it that during the last forty years, the period of the largest immigration, wages were higher than ever before, labor more universally employed, and the American people more prosperous than at any previous time? Answer these questions in your own mind, and you will be irresistibly led to the conclusion that the present depression, with its evil consequences to labor, must be due to causes other than immigration.

It is, perhaps, excusable in our free-trade friends, who are anxious to assign reasons other than their own policy for the recent industrial depression, to eagerly point to the influx of foreigners as one of the main causes; but an investigation conducted by the three highest officials of the immigration service, all Democrats, fails to bear them out. In his instructions to this commission Secretary Carlisle calls for information on this point, among others:

> What effect, if any, has immigration had upon the wages of labor or opportunities for employment in the United States, and whether or not the existing industrial condition of the country is attributable in any degree to the influx of laborers from abroad?

After an investigation, perhaps the most thorough ever made on the subject, the commission made a report covering 183 printed pages, and containing the following conclusive answer to the above query (page 10):

> The opinion is widespread that wages have fallen since the great tide of immigration has set in. The facts do not bear this out. The statistics of immigration already given show that large immigration has almost invariably been coincident with (not necessarily the cause of) prosperity, and the report of the Senate subcommittee of 1891, which was charged with the duty of ascertaining the course of prices and wages of labor, shows further that wages have been highest during these same periods of prosperity. Not only, according to this report, have wages steadily increased during the last three decades of steadily increasing immigration, but they have been the highest during those years in which immigration has been the largest. * * * The Commission does not believe immigration to have been responsible for the depression, except in so far as the arrival of immigrants just before it and during its continuance swelled the number of its victims. * * * But to say that a financial depression which started in South America several years back and gradually spread over the whole financial world was due to immigration to the United States is absurd.

This phase of the question, Mr. Speaker, can not be discussed without direct reference to the economic policy obtaining in the United States. When, under free trade, Europe manufactures to a greater extent for the American market, then the influx from abroad always decreases, because Europe itself furnishes better opportunities for employment, while under the protective system and the consequent better times Europe's idle laborers are naturally attracted hither. This is frequently forged into a weapon against the protective system. We exclude the fabrics, it is said, but let the hands that make them come in. Suppose this is so. Is it not infinitely better than if we were to admit the fabrics and leave the hands that make them in Europe to spend their money there? It must be remembered that every immigrant is not only a producer but a consumer at the same time. Every newcomer brings—as our great leader in the Speaker's chair once tersely expressed it—his job with him. In the first place, he will have to eat; then he needs clothing and shelter. Breathing the free air of this continent, he expands physically and intellectually; his eyes, dimmed by the narrow and perhaps unhappy surroundings of his mother country, and then blinded after his arrival here by the sunshine of free institutions, gradually begin to reflect self-assertion and manhood. How long before he thinks, acts, and lives like those who are already assimilated? The vast majority of the newcomers enter upon their new life here by performing menial labor. They work in the mines, dig ditches and canals, build railroads—in short, do work which the American and even German and Irish immigrant, after having undergone a certain Americanizing process, no longer engage in. And another very important observation is that the immigrant, as soon as he finds that he has to pay American prices for American goods, will demand American wages, even if he should have been temporarily willing to offer his own labor cheaper than others. So the competition with our own labor is ridiculously small, at least on the part of what are termed common laborers, and these form, as we all know, the great bulk of our immigrants.

The total immigration during the last fiscal year, including that via Canada, was 258,563, and of that number fully five-sixths were farm and common laborers and women and children, and only one-sixth mechanics, skilled laborers, and professionals, who, by the way, with the exception of the last named, are usually absorbed by the trades unions very soon after their arrival. If their coming does result in some competition with American skilled labor, is not this counterbalanced threefold by the fact that the needs and necessities of an additional quarter of a million of people are to be supplied by the American market?

There was a time when workingmen were inclined to smash the machines which temporarily threw them out of employment. To-day they ridicule the idea, because they have learned, first, that hands are required to construct the machines, and, second, because all labor-saving inventions have so increased the consumption of the articles manufactured by their aid as to leave just as much work to be done as before. It is exactly the same with immigration. The increase of productive power caused by it is practically neutralized by augmented consumption. So the machine and the immigrant bring their own salvation with them. When the time comes, however—and no doubt it will come—that labor-saving appliances will be so perfected as to bring about a continuous excess of the world's supply over the world's demand, then the only logical remedy is a reduction of the hours of labor. But never will I believe that the voice of labor—of intelligent American labor—will in seriousness be raised against the downtrodden of the Old World who knock at our doors, begging for the privilege of breathing under the sun of a free country. American labor cherishes its constitutional rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and will never deny them to others. It will never kick shipwrecks, while attempting to board our well-supplied craft, back into the roaring sea. [Applause.]

CHANGE OF CHARACTER IN IMMIGRATION.

There remains, then, only one plausible reason for restriction, and this is the increase of late of what are called undesirable immigrants, and the corresponding decrease of the more desirable. This change is not as marked as many suppose, last year's returns showing an immigration of about 150,000 from northern Europe, as against 100,000 from southern Europe; yet, judging from the present springtide, this year's figures bid fair to reverse this condition. Call it race prejudice or by any other name, but there is no denying the fact that the Anglo-Saxon feels an aversion against the Latin races, and their strong influx accounts, undoubtedly, for the present anti-immigration feeling. I am willing to make a concession to that sentiment. Not from race prejudice, for whoever knows me knows that that is something entirely foreign to my nature, but for another, a better, reason. My whole argument in favor of liberal immigration laws is based upon the supposition that the newcomer will soon be one of us, will have the same needs and require as much for his existence; in short, will live as we do. It is claimed that this is not the case with the man from southern Europe. While the German, the Scandinavian, the Englishman, and Irishman not only identifies himself thoroughly with our institutions, but also, and this is the point, makes the same claims upon the comforts and even luxuries of life as the average American, a vast majority of the immigrants of other nationalities, it is claimed, maintain a wretched existence and live far below the American standard of living. This undoubtedly makes them less desirable immigrants than others are, and accounts for the public demand that Congress throw new obstacles in the way of their coming. The question arose, how to accomplish this by legislation? We certainly can not, in making laws, discriminate against specific nationalities, and I take it for granted that there is no desire to bar the unobjectionable immigrant. In my judgment, the bill under discussion answers the purpose exactly. It provides, in simple, self-enforcing terms, for an educational test, and requires of each male immigrant between the ages of 16 and 60 years the ability to read and write his own language as a condition of his admission to the country.

The total number of arrivals at United States ports during the year ended June 30, 1895, was 245,581, while 4,761 came via Canadian ports, making the grand total 250,342. The countries of their nativity were as follows:

Austria-Hungary:		Russia (proper)	33,232
Bohemia and Moravia	1,973	Finland	2,675
Galicia and Bukowina	4,324	Poland	790
Other Austria	11,898	Spain	501
Hungary	15,206	Sweden	15,361
Belgium	1,058	Switzerland	2,239
Denmark	3,910	Turkey in Europe	245
France (including Corsica)	2,628	United Kingdom:
Germany	32,173	England	23,443
Greece	597	Ireland	46,304
Italy	35,427	Scotland	3,788
Netherlands	1,388	Wales	1,602
Norway	7,581	Not specified	24
Portugal	1,452
Roumania	523	Total	250,342

The following table, showing the percentage of illiterates in total immigration from each country by nationalities, will give a clear idea of the effect of this bill on immigration from the countries furnishing the largest quota of immigrants:

Nationalities.	Percentage of illiterates.	Nationalities.	Percentage of illiterates.
Portugal	67.35	Spain	8.71
Italy	52.93	Ireland	7.27
Galicia and Bukowina	45.68	Finland	3.58
Poland	39.82	France (including Corsica)	3.50
Hungary	37.69	England	3.49
Russia (proper)	36.42	Netherlands	3.38
Other Austria	32.70	Scotland	2.83
Greece	25.18	Germany	2.49
Roumania	17.75	Norway	1.02
Belgium	15.22	Sweden	.74
Turkey in Europe	14.79	Switzerland	.60
Wales	10.43	Denmark	.49
Bohemia and Moravia	8.98

A cursory examination of these figures will demonstrate that the illiteracy test provided for in this bill will not materially affect the immigration from Great Britain, Germany, Scandinavia, and other countries of northern Europe, which countries as a rule send us the most desirable class of immigrants, while under it the immigration from southern Europe, now looked upon as more or less undesirable, will be considerably restricted. The original bill provided for the exclusion of male and female illiterates, but in view of the conceded scarcity of female white servants in nearly all parts of the country, the committee deemed it wise to exempt females from the illiteracy test and admit them as heretofore. The reason for the exemption of parents whose children have preceded them hither is obvious, and this provision requires no explanation further than that it was prompted by humane considerations.

Existing immigration laws, as is well known, prohibit the admission into the United States of Chinese laborers and the following classes of aliens:

All idiots, insane persons, paupers, or persons likely to become a public charge, persons suffering from loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases, persons who have been convicted of a felony or other infamous crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, or any person whose ticket or passage is paid by the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come.

The bill under discussion adds to the excluded classes another, the illiterates. I am not unmindful of the fact that grave objections may be raised against such a provision. The illiteracy in our own country may be referred to as showing that we are trying to impose qualifications upon the immigrants which many of our own citizens do not possess; or it may be urged that education, or at least the ability to read and write, is in no wise a test of character and moral worth; but we certainly have the right to guard against the swelling of the number of our own illiterates by immigration; and as to the merits of an educational test it is fair to assume that persons who have attended school and whose parents have had sufficient regard for the requirements of civilized life to have their children educated, come from better surroundings and are more desirable immigrants than the totally illiterate.

But I sincerely trust, Mr. Speaker, that in the matter of restriction we go no further than this. Let us give this new law a fair trial before we enter upon such doubtful and objectionable experiments as consular inspection, etc. As defenders of an educational test we may face the country; but as advocates of a measure which, in its effect, will bar the bone and sinew of Scandinavia and Germany we should certainly come to grief. We are here legislating for the whole country, but what, in the matter of restriction, may suit Pennsylvania and some of the congested districts of the East will not be the fair thing and the right thing for Texas, that empire of the future, or the wide and unsettled plains of the great West and Northwest. Let us continue to adhere to the great doctrine, the genuine American doctrine, that the man who comes to us with two strong arms and a healthy mind, with a determination to better his condition in life by honest labor, and a willingness to identify himself with us and our institutions, is a valuable and welcome addition to our population. I have not the time to remind you here what we owe to immigration; how since 1840 it has changed the face of this continent; how it has turned deserts into flower gardens, forests into thriving towns; how it has removed the line of civilization from the Mississippi to the Pacific Ocean; how it has aided, by hard manual work, by energy and untiring effort, to make this nation the greatest industrial nation of the world. "The American of a hundred years from now," says Rev. De Witt Talmage, "is to be different from the American of to-day. German brain, Irish wit, French civility, Scotch firmness, English loyalty, Italian æsthetics, packed into one man, and he an American! It is this intermarriage of nationalities that is going to make the American nation the greatest nation of the ages."

Remember also that beside its brain and muscle, which represent untold amounts of capital, immigration brings millions upon millions of cash to our shores, and let no one forget that the wealth of this country in land, forest, and mountain is barely scratched; that where some now think we have room for no more will in the future be found the happy homes of hundreds of millions of people.

Just open the map of the continent—

and see how it is shaped for immeasurable prosperities. Navigable rivers, more in number and greater than of any other land, rolling down on al, sides into the sea, prophesying large manufactories and easy commercel Look at the great ranges of mountains, timbered with wealth on the top and sides and metaled with wealth underneath. One hundred and eighty thousand square miles of coal! One hundred and eighty thousand square miles of iron! The iron to pry out the coal. The coal to forge and smelt the iron. The land so contoured that extreme weather hardly ever lasts more than three days—extreme heat or extreme cold. Climate for the most part bracing and favorable for brawn and brain. All fruits. All minerals. All harvests. Scenery displaying autumnal pageantry that no land on earth pretends to rival. No South American earthquakes. No Scotch mists. No English fogs. No Egyptian plagues. The people of the United States are happier than any people on earth. It is the testimony of every man that has traveled abroad. For the poor more sympathy! For the industrious more opportunity!

[Great applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman before he takes his seat permit a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRUMM. I did not hear the whole of the gentleman's remarks; but I wish to ask him why what is known as the consular system will operate especially against the Germans and Scandinavians?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I did not explain that for this reason——

Mr. BRUMM. Will not the gentleman be kind enough to tell us why?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I intended to wait until the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] had made his argument in favor of that bill, after which I proposed to explain why the bill is objectionable and should not pass.

Mr. TRACEWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to preface the few impromptu remarks I shall make upon the pending questions by saying I am not a member of the order known as the American Protective Association. I know nothing concerning the order except what I see in the daily prints. I further desire to say that I am not in sympathy with the rule-or-ruin policy of some of our labor organizations, but I am the friend of the American laboring man here and elsewhere.

I have the honor to represent upon this floor a district more than one-third of whose voters are German-American citizens. In view of this constituency I wish now to declare that I heartily favor the passage (if it be possible under the rules of this House) of each of the bills reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The sun shines upon no better class of citizens than the German-American citizens of my district. I know that they have the same interest in the welfare of our common country that I have, and what is good for me is good for them, and what is evil for me is evil for them. They were once Germans; they are now Americans in the true sense of the word.

Being a member of the committee which reported the bills now before the House, and somewhat familiar with their provisions, I do not think I could make a better use of a few minutes of time than by briefly giving to the gentlemen who manifest their interest in this matter by remaining in the Hall to hear and take part in the debate now in progress the salient points of the different bills upon which we will be called upon to cast our votes on to-morrow.

My distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], whose name is attached to the first bill reported, and who stands as a sponsor for it, the bill being known as the Bartholdt bill, and as such it will go down into the history we are now making, has, if we are allowed to judge from the argument he has just closed, experienced a change of heart since he affixed his signature to the bill, for his whole argument has been directed against the advisability of passing this or any other bill seeking to restrict undesirable immigration to this country.

The Bartholdt bill provides in substance that no male persons between the ages of 16 and 60 who can not read and write the English or some other language shall be eligible to enter our country as immigrants, with the proviso that the parents of any person now in this country or who shall hereafter come into this country as immigrants shall not be debarred from entry.

As I understand the parliamentary situation, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] has introduced as an amendment to the Bartholdt bill his bill, which is known as the Corliss bill. I will not consume time by having this bill read by the Clerk, for I think I can in a few words give you its main features.

It provides that it shall be unlawful for a person maintaining his domicile in a foreign country to engage in mechanical labor in this country while so maintaining his domicile in the foreign country, and makes it also unlawful for anyone knowingly to employ him.

The provisions of this bill do not apply to persons employed on the steamers of the Great Lakes or the rivers tributary thereto or to the employees of railroads having termini outside of our country.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] introduced as a substitute his bill, known as the consular inspection bill, and also the original McCall bill, which provides for the educational test and does not limit it to males and makes no exception as to parents.

I presume it is known—at least it ought to be known—to the members of this body that we have in this country what are called immigrant inspection stations, the principal one being situated at Ellis Island, an island situate in New York Harbor and in plain view of old Castle Garden.

It is also known to all present that a corps of Government officers are stationed at these points, and it is made their duty and business to see that no person is allowed to land as an immigrant who is forbidden by existing law.

I shall, in the discussion of these bills, direct my principal remarks to the Stone bill, or the consular inspection bill.

Its main features can be gathered from the following extract from the bill:

No alien immigrant shall be admitted within the United States unless, in addition to other requirements and provisions of law, he or she shall exhibit to the United States inspectors of arriving immigrants at the place of admission a certificate, signed by the United States consul or other authorized representative of the United States at the place nearest where said immigrant has last resided, setting forth that the said consul or other United States representative has made an investigation concerning said immigrant and that said immigrant does not belong to the class or classes of alien immigrants excluded from admission into the United States under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891.

Under existing law, the Chinese as a class are excluded. The maimed, crippled, paupers, idiots, contract laborers, persons suffering from loathsome diseases, and the criminal classes of all lands and climes are now debarred from admission to this country. It is made the duty of our officers of immigration to enforce this law. But under present facilities the laws are not enforced, and, moreover, they are incapable of proper enforcement. The census reports of 1890 show that nearly 50 per cent of the inmates of our almshouses are foreigners, and about the same proportion of the convicts of our penitentiaries are from the same class, and the foreign population represents only about 15 per cent of the total population. This state of affairs could not exist if the immigration laws were properly enforced.

The primary consideration of this House should then be whether the great mass of the people are demanding a law for the more rigid enforcement of the laws restricting immigration and whether this demand, if it exists, is based upon right and justice.

This Congress has been flooded with petitions from every section of the country demanding the passage of legislation of this character, and it has come from every section of the country. In fact, more petitions have been presented on this one subject than all the other matters pending before Congress.

I apprehend that no man on the floor of this House, the distinguished chairman of our committee excepted, will insist that the best interests of our common country will be subserved by the dumping of a mass of illiterates upon our shores. Mr. Speaker, if it be true that illiteracy is not a curse to any country, then our idea of government is all wrong and the millions of dollars we are annually spending to educate the youth of the land and raised by taxation is wasted.

By common consent we are agreed that this class of immigration is undesirable. If undesirable it should be restricted by laws that in fact restrict. The McCall-Bartholdt bill aims at this evil in particular. These bills are drawn upon judicious and diplomatic lines. I am not prepared to say now, nor do I think I will be prepared to say in the future, that it would be in good form for our Government to say by its laws to Italy or any other power that its citizens shall not immigrate to this country. It would be such a distinction and discrimination as would be sure to offend, and rightfully, such nation discriminated against by our laws.

In my judgment all the bills reported by this committee are diplomatic in their language, excluding the citizens of no country by name, but dealing with a class.

The bills just referred to provide that no immigrant who can not read or write the English language or some other language shall be received into this country.

The Corliss bill provides that an alien who is maintaining his domicile in a foreign country while thus maintaining his domicile shall not engage in mechanical labor in this country.

Can any man who loves his country, be he native or foreign born, and who has at heart the interest of the laboring people of his country, have any serious objection to the provisions of this bill? I ask why should a man maintaining his residence in Canada or Mexico be permitted to come for the day or the season into this country and compete with the American laborer who bears his full proportion of the expense and burden of government?

He comes here only to earn American wages; he comes into direct competition with our own wage earner, and he takes his wages earned here back to his foreign home at the end of the day or season and spends them at home, where he can buy cheap foreign-made goods.

I digress for a moment to say that I am a protectionist from the crown of my head to the sole of my foot. I have not a lingering doubt as to the justness of this doctrine. I believe protection inures to the benefit of the laborer who makes the article upon which we lay a protective duty. This duty is not laid primarily for the benefit of the manufacturer. I am perfectly willing that he should have a fair and legitimate return for his capital invested and enterprise, but the primary object of all protective duties is, as I understand the theory of protection, to enable the manufacturer to pay the men who make and produce the article such wages as represent the difference in the cost of the production of the article made here and made abroad by pauper labor.

I can not have it in my heart to go back to my people and meet them face to face and say I voted to protect the article but I did not vote to protect the man who made the article. The manufacturer will procure his labor just as cheaply as he can, and the laborer will procure just as much as he can for his labor. The price will be greatly influenced by the supply of laborers and their present necessities. If a hundred men are applying for one job we can not expect the one man who receives the job to insist on large wages or to receive them if he does insist. If a man has a hundred days' work to give and there are only 10 men to do the work we would not expect the 10 men to be content with starvation wages.

We as Republicans can not go back to our people and say we are willing to protect the article from foreign competition but are not willing to protect the man who makes the article from foreign competition.

It is insisted by some that we are on the eve of a Presidential election and it is not good politics to pass legislation of this character.

The immortal Clay said he would rather be right than President. It would be better for the Republican party to go down in honest defeat than to succeed at the cost of the American workingmen. We went down in defeat in 1892 on account of the McKinley bill, but its author is now the idol of the people.

Truth crushed to earth shall rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers.

Let the Republican party heed the great heart of the people, listen to the demands of the common people, and it has nothing to fear.

We sometimes say, and I am proud that we are in the condition to say it, that this country has been the home of the oppressed of every clime. I am and have been willing to share our prosperity with the more unfortunate of other countries. The foreigners who come to our shores are laboring men, and come to better their worldly condition. They come to share our prosperity. When times are prosperous in this country immigration largely increases. But we have no prosperity for our own people now, nor have we had for some time. I could probably assign good and sufficient reasons for this state of affairs. The people in this country know what, to a large extent, has brought about this deplorable condition. Population has congested in the large cities of the country and is every day becoming more congested. Men and women have been for more than three years walking the streets of our cities, imploring work at any price. There are more laborers than jobs.

Mr. Speaker, it has resulted in this: Shipload after shipload of paupers from southern Europe have been dumped in our cities, induced to come here by the shipowners for the profit of their carriage, and they have come into competition with our own wage earners. They had to work, starve, or be fed by our people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Stone bill does not provide for any additional excluded classes. It simply provides that our consular officers shall ascertain at the port nearest to where the immigrant comes from whether he is within the prohibited class.

I have practiced law, with varying success, for more than twenty years, and our present immigration laws are the most novel in their character that it has been my good fortune to see or have occasion to examine. They stand alone in this particular, that it was left to their author to devise a law which in its administration separated the court from the vicinage of the witnesses a distance of 3,000 miles and over and left the entire fact as to whether the immigrant applying for admission to our country fell under the prohibition of our laws to be determined by the statement of the immigrant alone and unsupported.

It is utterly impossible for our immigration officers at Ellis Island or our other immigrant stations to ascertain whether the applying immigrant falls within the prohibited class. You can not always tell a criminal by his looks.

Under existing law, Mr. Speaker, we institute an inquiry by our officers of inspection at these immigrant stations 3,000 miles from where the witnesses are who are in possession of the facts which we are seeking to ascertain. What is the result? Our laws as they exist at present are a farce. The paupers, criminals, and the contract labor of southern Europe have driven our native laborer from the proud position he used to occupy to the level, in a great many instances, of those with whom he has been forced to compete.

The present system is not only unfair to the American laborer, but if it were possible to enforce the law, which it is not, it is not only unfair to the immigrant but is inhuman.

If he fails to land as an immigrant, under existing law he is deported to the country from whence he came by the steamship company which brought him to our shores.

These companies for gain and greed have induced him to sell his little all and invest it in tickets to come to this, the promised land. If the law is enforced and he is within the prohibited class he is huddled like cattle in the dark hold of some ship of the company that brought him over and returned to his native country without a cent.

The officers of immigration are human. When they see the immigrant at Ellis Island, thousands of miles from whence he came, with his wife and little brood around him and not a dollar in the world, what are the natural human instincts? Violation of law or not, it is to permit him to land. I confess, Mr. Speaker, I would be tempted to say to the poor devil, "Go your way." I saw these things with my own eyes when I visited this immigrant station during this session of Congress. The remedy for this evil is plain and simple. Pass the Stone bill. It provides for the ascertainment of these facts by our consul at the nearest point to where the immigrant lives.

If I want to ascertain whether a man is a criminal, whether he is a pauper, if, in other words, he is eligible to become a citizen of the United States, I certainly would not go to Ellis Island for this information, but I would seek it where he lived, in his hamlet, village, or city. That, Mr. Speaker, is what the Stone bill will do. It will not keep out of the country a single person entitled to land under existing laws, but it will keep out those not entitled to land under our laws.

Before this debate is over you will see more stones and clubs hurled at the Stone bill by the opponents of the restriction of immigration than at all the other bills. The Stone bill, if passed, will restrict. If you go into an apple orchard and find a great number of sticks and stones under a certain tree, you ask no questions, but know at once that that tree bore fruit, and you are able to judge of the amount by the number of stones and sticks found under its branches. The advocates of this bill are not claiming it will cure our system of immigration laws of all their defects or prove perfect in its execution, but that its passage will materially restrict the undesirable immigration flocking to our shores. [Applause.]

With these desultory remarks, Mr. Speaker, I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I regret, Mr. Speaker, that my voice will not permit me to address the House as I should like to upon this question.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to offer an amendment to his bill?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will yield to the gentleman to let the amendment be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts). The Clerk will read the amendment.

Insert in line 21, page 2, after the word "law," the following:

"And shall before he is admitted within the United States, to become a citizen thereof, pay the sum of $200 in gold to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States as a tax for the privilege of becoming a citizen of the United States."

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire whether what has just been read by the Clerk is offered as an amendment?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No; it was just read by consent, in my time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Just read for information?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As I understand, it was read in my time for information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Read for information.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has forty-four minutes remaining.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the remarks of the chairman of the committee; but when I come to consider that his speech is made in support of an immigration bill ostensibly to restrict immigration, although his speech is a very able one, I fail to see any argument in it except an argument against the restriction of immigration.

Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing in this country more than another that is burdensome to the people to-day it is unreasonable immigration. We, as a country, have been for years inviting immigrants to come here and live with us. The difficulty is that they have all accepted our invitation, and to-day there are more immigrants coming into the country than the country can assimilate. Whenever that occurs in any nation it must necessarily injure that nation. They will either assimilate us or we will assimilate them. That is the rule with all immigration movements. You can easily imagine a state of things where the number of immigrants coming into a country is larger than the natural increase of the country. In that event they would assimilate us. We would conform to their ways instead of their conforming to our ways.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that between the years 1880 and 1890 nearly as many foreigners came to this country as there were children born within the territory of the country.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman. I dislike to do so very much.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Very well; what is it you want?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will you permit me just a word?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The natural increase, according to our census reports, is a million a year exactly, or 1.38. That is the natural increase. That makes a million a year according to our present population. Now, immigration only amounts to 250,000, or a quarter of a million, and consequently your statement that the immigration is larger than the natural increase is not accurate.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I stated that during the years 1880 to 1890, those ten years, nearly as many foreigners came into this country as there were children born in the country.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Why, certainly not.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understand you have denied it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, take the gentleman's own figures. There is an increase of a million a year in population. The average immigration into this country during those ten years was nearly half a million a year instead of 250,000. So that, by the census returns for those ten years—I do not speak with absolute accuracy, but in the main—the immigration between 1880 and 1890 was nearly or quite as large as the number of births in this country, or else the census reports have stated what is not correct. During those years there was a large immigration into this country, averaging about half a million per year. Since 1890, especially beginning with 1893, the immigration largely fell off, owing to the fact of hard times in this country. The people who came here, attracted by all the advantages which the country has by the high wages which grew out of protected industries in this country, when they found the mills and workshops shut down, when they found that there were hard times in this country as well as in others, ceased to come here; therefore the immigration, beginning with 1893, fell off largely, and in the latter part of 1892. But with returning prosperity and with the prospect of better wages and better times immigration is now largely increasing to what it was during 1893 and 1894.

You will observe that the increasing immigration for the year 1895 was largely over that of 1894, and for the months of this year it is still increasing, so that this year we will have probably over 300,000 immigrants; and for next year they will approach the figures of 1891 and 1892, which was nearly or quite half a million. The question is whether, with an increase in population, counting every ten years, of a million a year, we can stand an immigration ranging from 400,000 to 500,000 annually. Why, Mr. Speaker, that question is answered in very many sections of my own State. You may go into certain sections of my State and you will find no newspapers printed in the English language; you will find scarcely any or but few people who speak the English language. They have already assimilated the people in those sections, and in those sections we are becoming like unto and of them.

Well, now, I do not object to immigration. I welcome immigration; but I stand upon this principle, that immigration faster than we can Americanize the immigrants is unwholesome in this country. [Applause.] This country is the first object of my solicitude. As far as we can assimilate the children of other countries, in God's name let them come to us; but when they come in such large numbers that we can not assimilate them and make them American citizens, why, we can not stand it. No nation on earth can stand it. No nation ever has stood it. Talk of our prairies and the places where immigrants may go! If they would only go there, Mr. Speaker, the curse of undesirable immigration would not be felt so heavily; but nearly 70 per cent of the immigrants coming into this country stay in the already overcrowded Eastern States, and a very small percentage of them go into the far West.

I admit that the very best of them do go into the far West and that the very worst of them do stay with us. Take the State of Pennsylvania. Why, sir, that State is suffering to-day in various localities from a large, a too large, immigration. Of all the Hungarians that have come to this country during the last year 54 per cent have remained in Pennsylvania. In that State we have whole towns and villages of them, and now and then in our coke regions there occurs what is known as a Hungarian riot, when they "run amuck," and no law and no police regulation can withstand them. Men are killed, property is destroyed, and there is nothing that can prevent it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to discuss the provisions of the substitute which I have had the honor to offer. I understand that my friend the chairman of the committee [Mr. BARTHOLDT] reserves his remarks in reply to what I may say upon the feasibility of this measure. I have very little to add or to offer in support of the proposition. It is not mine. It has been in this House for more than twenty years. Nearly every man who has made a study of the immigration question has presented a bill similar to this. It has been the judgment of the very best men who have investigated the question that consular inspection is almost the only remedy that can cure this evil. Of course my friend [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is opposed to it, because the difference between him and me is this: He does not recognize any evil to be corrected, and I do. There is no complaint which he wishes to cure, while I think there is one that ought to be cured.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. If I understand correctly the bill introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], it contains a requirement that no alien immigrant shall be admitted in the United States unless he shall exhibit to the United States inspectors of arriving immigrants at the place of admission a certificate signed by the United States consul at the port from which he sailed. That is the substance, I understand, of the proposition. Now, let me suppose a case. Take the case of a German citizen who has not performed the required military service, or who has been engaged in a revolution like that of 1848, which swept all over Europe, and who desires to leave Germany and come to this country, does the gentleman believe that it would be practicable for such a man to go to any United States consul in Germany and secure from that consul a certificate which would entitle him to land in this country?

Now, it occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, if this bill should become law, that, under the contingencies which I have suggested, it would be practically impossible for such a man to come to this country, whatever might be his fitness in other respects, and I would like to hear from the gentleman from Pennsylvania on that point.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that all countries, when they are engaged in war, do all within their power to prevent the emigration of their citizens who are liable to military duty.

Mr. SAYERS. But the case I have supposed may occur in the time of peace.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. In times of peace the returns of the Bureau of Immigration show that the Germans do come and have been coming to this country, and that men liable to do military duty in Germany have been coming here. Now, as I understand the gentleman's question, it is this: Will this bill which I have proposed, if it should become a law, be an obstruction in the way of a German who is liable to military duty and desires to emigrate to this country?

Mr. SAYERS. Or a German who has been engaged in a revolution in that country. And I take Germany only as an instance. My proposition applies to any other country in Europe as well.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. In the first place, the existing immigration laws do not exclude any person from admission to this country who has committed what is called a political crime in Europe. The bill which I offer as a substitute simply seeks to have the inspection, which is already made under our laws, made on the other side of the water instead of here. The gentleman asks whether such an enactment will not create an obstacle in the way of desirable immigrants coming into this country. Now, all countries, this country included, have laws which make their citizens liable to do military duty between certain ages. I do not understand that the investigation which is required to be made by the consul is to be conducted with a brass band. I do not understand that the consul is going to give public notice of days of hearing for intended emigrants. I do not see why any person should not be able to come to this country who was eligible to come, if this bill were law, as well as he can come now.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but this is a vital point in his proposition. Suppose that a person is evading the law requiring military service in his country in time of peace, or desires to evade it, or suppose that a revolution is going on in that country and a citizen desires to escape from it and come to the United States, does the gentleman believe that the Government from whom this citizen is seeking to escape would permit an American consul to remain there who should be engaged in giving certificates authorizing such persons to come to this country and live here?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Most certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman thinks so?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do think so, and I do not know of anybody who has thoroughly investigated the subject and the questions of international law involved who thinks to the contrary.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Why should not the consul, as the gentleman says, "employ a brass band" just as well as have the flag flying over the consulate? Does the gentleman suppose that the consul could do this thing in secret?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not propose to have him do it in secret. I propose to have some system by which immigration will be restricted to those who are eligible under the law. Perhaps this system may now and then act to some extent as an obstacle to legitimate immigration, but not to the extent claimed.

Why, Mr. Speaker, there will be no difficulty in a person getting to this country if he is able to come. The trouble is now that people get here who are ineligible. This whole system, as it now exists, by which we undertake to restrict immigration by investigating immigrants as they come to this side of the water—while I admit the system may be as well carried out as it can be under existing laws—is necessarily a legal farce. Apart from immigrants who are returned or debarred from entrance on account of disabilities or on account of not being qualified under the labor laws—apart from those whose entrance into the country is debarred on account of their violating the labor-contract laws, the number of persons returned under the present system are so few that the system is absolutely a farce. At the same time our poorhouses, our jails, our penitentiaries are filling up with incapables—men unable to earn a livelihood. Why, Mr. Speaker, more than 50 per cent of the people confined in our penitentiaries, according to the census of 1890, came to this country from abroad.

Now, what are you going to do? It may be that the law proposed may operate severely on some occasions; but are we to go on feeding and supporting the criminals of the world? Forty per cent, or nearly 40 per cent, of the inmates of our poorhouses and alms asylums are born in foreign countries.

Mr. Speaker, it has been the custom of European nations for years, until the last three or four years, to devote a portion of the public funds to sending to this country their paupers. Often a criminal is condemned as a part of his sentence to leave the country. You have heard of the "ticket-of-leave man." Do you not know that when a man is ordered out of his country he is necessarily ordered into another? And the only country that will receive such a one, if it knows it, is ours. We have been receiving the criminals and the paupers of Europe for years—feeding them and clothing them. Are we to go on doing it? This country of ours, lying between the two great oceans, is the rendezvous, the objective point, of all the people in the Old World who wish to better their condition.

Mr. SAYERS. Right here the gentleman will allow me to say, we have had a great deal of foreign immigration into Texas—Germans, Bohemians, and Swedes; and these people always feed and clothe themselves; they are here only but a short time until they acquire by their industry and economy comfortable homes. The great majority of them settle in the country and make most excellent and successful farmers. They constitute a splendid citizenship.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Why, sir, no one objects to that class of people coming to Texas or any other part of this country. This bill does not prevent them. It simply proposes to keep out paupers, insane people, diseased persons, criminals; that is all. Certainly they do not want that sort of people in Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly not; but are not the classes just named by the gentleman excluded by our present laws?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly our present laws aim to exclude them.

Mr. SAYERS. Do we not have all along our coasts and borders inspectors who are required to inspect every immigrant; and if any improper person presents himself, is he not excluded, and is not the ship that brought him here required to take him back at its own expense?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. He is not, under the operation of the present law, excluded with any certainty. How are you going to examine a man coming to this country in order to determine whether he is a criminal or not? He may look like a criminal; but he is going to say he is not such a person. Do you suppose he will stand up and admit that he is a criminal?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will he admit it to the consul?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If he does not admit it to the consul, the consul has the means at hand of verifying the man's statement. Under the system proposed here there will be such means at hand.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Let me say to the gentleman that an American consul abroad has no right to administer oaths. Consequently, when a man appears before him as an applicant for such a certificate as the gentleman contemplates, he can tell the consul absolutely what he pleases, and the consul, having no power to call witnesses or administer oaths, has no way of testing the truth of his statements.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. In reply to that statement I wish to have read a letter from a member of this House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT]. I ask members of the House not to be hasty in the passage of such a measure as this, but to hear what Mr. HITT says before taking the statement of a gentleman who stands here reporting an immigration bill and making a speech against it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I hope the gentleman does not mean any personal reflection.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, no; I do not think the gentleman is correct; that is all. I ask that the letter of Mr. HITT be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MOUNT MORRIS, ILL., September 5, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Your letter forwarded here after I left W. has been received. There is no more reason to believe that consular inspection of immigrants would lead to international complications than other functions of consuls. Every consul is required to have from the local government an exequatur or permission before he can exercise any consular function. I notice that this objection to your bill is not raised by the Secretary of State, who has charge of foreign affairs, but by Mr. Carlisle, Secretary of the Treasury. This also answers your second question, whether the duties conferred by the House bill would be recognized by international law. Third, as to dual administration of law, there is and has long been a dual administration of the revenue laws.

The consular certificates and the invoices of importations go to the Treasury Department officers often in the same mail in which they send their regular reports to the State Department. Then, too, the Treasury Department appoints special agents who go abroad on almost the same business as part of the consuls-general. It might be that at certain ports the consular employees would have to be increased, as there would be more to do. This will of course be resisted if there is no increase of pay; but if, for instance, a fee were attached to this duty, you would hear at once from Liverpool, Hamburg, etc., that it was an excellent, beneficient measure. I know we have some poor material just now in the consular service, but they are better than Mr. Carlisle implies in contrasting consular inspection with the haphazard inquiries of ticket agents for steamer lines.

How can it be "a hindrance to able-bodied men who desire to migrate" to enable such men to secure in advance of coming a certificate that will absolutely secure their free admission at our ports?

Very truly, yours, R. R. HITT.

Hon. WILLIAM A. STONE, Allegheny, Pa.

Mr. HENDRICK. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow a question in connection with that point, a pertinent question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. HENDRICK. Under your bill will the visitors and tourists who come from abroad simply to visit this country be required to furnish consular certificates?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No.

Mr. HENDRICK. Then what will the consular examination of immigrants amount to? All an immigrant would have to do would be to say that he was coming to America on a visit; that is all; and how can you reach that class of people under the operation of your bill?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, the gentleman makes an imaginary suggestion. The immigrant is not likely, for instance, to take a first-class or even a second-class cabin passage. As a rule they have not money enough for that.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. And if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to make an additional suggestion, your bill does not repeal in any respect the existing conditions of law which restrict certain classes of people. The immigrant laborer can not come in under the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania any more than under the existing law.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask the clerk to read now the letter of Mr. Smith upon the subject. It will be remembered, perhaps, that he was minister to Russia while Mr. HITT was secretary of legation in France for many years.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS, OFFICE OF THE EDITOR,
Philadelphia, August 28, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The imperative necessity of some more stringent measure for the inspection of immigrants has become plain within the past few years, and now commands general assent. Your bill providing for such inspection by United States consuls seems to me admirably adapted to the purpose. It has been suggested in some quarters that the inspection should be made by officers specially appointed for that purpose, but I think reflection will confirm the conviction that your proposed method is much better. Every objection as to the amount of labor involved which can be directed against the plan of consular inspection would apply with no less force to the other method, while, on the other hand, the former plan would have all the advantage of a more responsible official character. In my judgment it would be more effective and impressive. There can be no difficulty in the way of making the equipment of the consular office equal to the requirements of such an investigation; and I believe that in its moral effect and in its practical results it would be most efficacious. I earnestly hope that you will press your measure, and that it may find the general favor which it deserves.

Very truly, yours, CHAS. EMORY SMITH.

Hon. WILLIAM A. STONE.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I desire here to make perhaps a little correction in my statement in reference to the proportion of immigrations to births. I find by the report of the commission appointed to investigate immigration that the number of immigrants coming into this couutry between 1880 and 1890 (this will be found on page 8, I will say, of the report), was 5,246,613. Now, as I understand from more recent examination, the amount of increase during that decade was about twelve millions. So I was a little in error in making the statement I did. But still I think even the fact given, the corrected statement, shows too large an immigration.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. If the gentlemen will allow me. The increase of foreign population from 1880 to 1890, as shown on page 30 of the abstract of the Eleventh Census, is 2,569,604; while on page 3, of the same abstract, I find the increase of the total population is 12,466,467. In other words, the difference is four times as great as the gentleman from Pennsylvania first stated.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That would be entirely true if your statement was correct; but it is not a correct statement.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Well, I hand the gentleman the figures. He can examine them for himself. It is the abstract of the Eleventh Census.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have seen the figures, and have compared them with my own investigations, and also with the statement of the commission appointed to investigate this subject. I take the report of that commission, which was appointed to investigate this very subject, as decidedly more correct, and they report the number during that decade as over 5,000,000.

However, we will leave that, at least for the present. The gentleman from Nebraska may be right or I may be. I do not wish to spend time discussing figures. In any event, it is large enough to reduce, and it is growing steadily larger.

I desire now to call the attention of the House to the statement of the report of the commission to which I have just referred. This commission, which is opposed to consular inspection—and I may say that everyone connected with the Immigration Bureau under this Administration is opposed to it—this Commission fears a dual administration of the laws; and that the consuls under the State Department will in some manner interfere with them or their system. They have been cordial advocates of the present law; and the Stump law of 1893 is a fair sample of the thought which the Immigration Bureau entertains on the subject. That was a law which undertook to restrict immigration. The only restriction it has effected is in the claims of the Immigration Bureau, who claim that it has prevented many people from applying to come to this country; in other words, that it has scared away many who wanted to come. That is the only indication of any restriction which it has ever effected. This commission, composed of the head of that Bureau and two other people employed in the Bureau, report as follows:

It will be noticed that for the last decade, from 1880 to 1890, it was nearly twice as much as it had been for any previous decade, and over one-third what it was for the entire period. In fact, nearly two-thirds of the entire immigration movement of the world in 1890 was directed to the United States.

Now let us for a moment stop and consider that statement. Nobody denies it. Something has got to be done evidently in view of the fact. It may be that the bill which I have introduced will not accomplish it. It certainly will do no great harm. In my judgment it will have a tendency in that direction, which will restrict immigration to a certain extent. The bill of my friend Mr. BARTHOLDT, the educational bill, is a good one so far as it goes, but it will only keep out a few illiterate Italians. It is not the medicine for the disease. It will not restrict immigration.

Now, let us face up to this question. Are we satisfied that immigration ought to be restricted? If we are, then why should we hesitate? I will admit there are some localities which want immigration, but we are here to legislate for the greatest number—the greatest good to the greatest number. The Eastern States are overrun. There is too much immigration, and there is going to be more, increasing all the while.

Now, let me call your attention to another statement made by this commission. For the period from January 1 to September 1, 1895, there was an increase of 36,270 at the port of New York over the same period of 1894. My friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] does not know anything about the enormity of this evil. The people who are going to his part of the country are desirable. If we could send all these immigrants to Texas, Pennsylvania might get along nearly as well——

Mr. SAYERS. And you would not be asking the passage of this bill, I suspect.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. They probably will not do as much harm in Texas as they do in Pennsylvania.

Furthermore, the returns show an increase of 51 per cent for the month of July, 1895, over July, 1894; a little over 60 per cent for August, 1895, over August, 1894, and of more than 55 per cent for September, 1895, over September, 1894. With returning good times we have an increase of immigration. In bad times immigration decreases. This bill, reported by the Commissioner of Immigration when he was a member of this House, was only efficacious during the hard times of 1893. As soon as returning prosperity begins to appear, that moment the laws which now exist are found utterly powerless to accomplish anything.

The educational test is all right. I do not object to it. I hope to be able to vote for it; but it is evident that that will only reach a very small percentage. I think the total immigration for the given period reported here, if both males and females were excluded, which this bill does not do, would be only about 7,000 of these Italians. Nearly all the immigrants from other countries read and write. So that we are not going to reach any restriction of immigration by that test. It is going to restrict some people, but it is a very harmless bread pill, and will be like all the rest of our legislation—simply throw something out to quiet the clamor of the people and allay this demand for restricted immigration. It is a bread pill, and that is all there will be of it. It will not materially restrict immigration; but in as far as it does we all welcome it. If we can only at present keep those people out of this country who are not eligible under our present laws—and that is all I seek to do now—if we can keep out the sick, the insane, the criminals, those whom the law at present intends to keep out of this country, then we shall have accomplished something. You will see at a glance that either one of two things exists. Either the laws are deficient, or else the census reports are incorrect. If the laws were efficient, and kept undesirable people out of this country, there would not be over 50 per cent of foreigners among the inmates of our penitentiaries, and there could not be 40 per cent of foreigners among the inmates of our poorhouses, because the total percentage of foreigners in this whole country is not quite 15 per cent, and there is no reason why there should be any greater percentage of foreigners in the penitentiaries and poorhouses than the percentage of foreigners in the whole country. There should not be more than 15 per cent.

Now, this is no argument against foreigners. We are all foreigners, for that matter, and there are no Americans except those fast-decreasing bands of Indians which are mostly fed at the expense of the Government. It does not make any difference whether my friend came from Germany himself, or whether his parents came from Germany seventeen or eighteen or twenty or thirty or fifty years ago. We are all foreigners. Now, the argument is this: I do not claim that the fact that there are over 50 per cent of foreigners who are inmates of our penitentiaries is any reflection on foreigners. On the contrary, it is simply an illustration of the fact that the laws of this country do not keep foreign criminals out of this country, as they are intended to do. Foreigners are not all criminals. Their moral range is as high as our own, and if the good people would come here there would be no objection to them. But here is the fact, and I see no escape from it: If you admit that the penitentiaries contain over 50 per cent of foreigners among their inmates, and that the poorhouses contain between 26 and 40 per cent of foreigners among their inmates——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is not admitted.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If you admit that, you must admit the further fact that these foreigners come to this country—because they are not born here; and you must admit, secondly, they come in spite of the laws of this country which pretend to keep them out. All I want is to enforce the law, and I come now to the proposition, Will this substitute which I have offered do it? Will it help to do it? I claim that it will.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman does not desire to go further than to provide methods by which the present laws can be the better enforced.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is all.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand such only to be his proposition.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is the proposition in my bill. I start out with this suggestion: They are examined in this country when they come here, or are supposed to be, by the Inspection Bureau.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask that the gentleman's time may be extended ten minutes, he has been interrupted so much.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNEY. I object.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman thirty minutes of my time.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWELL] is a member of the committee and yields me a part of his time.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield thirty minutes of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey claims sixty minutes, and yields thirty minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, under the present laws an immigrant is inspected by the Commissioner or Superintendent of Immigration. He is inspected on Ellis Island, or supposed to be. That inspection takes place in our country. My proposition is to inspect him in the old country. I can see no reason why a man should be brought 3,000 miles before he can be inspected. My bill is for the benefit of the immigrant. If he is ineligible it is fair that he should be told that before he starts from home. It is not only impracticable, but it is a great hardship on the immigrant to encourage him or allow him to convert his little property into money and expend it all for tickets for himself and his wife, we will say, to come, perhaps, 4,000 miles, and then be told that he is ineligible.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the statement of my friend from Indiana [Mr. TRACEWELL] has just been made that Ellis Island is to-day overcrowded with people who have been ordered to be deported. This is not difficult to understand. They are crowded into the steerage of vessels. The average amount of money brought into this country by each immigrant is only $16. They are poor people. They go and sell their little property and invest it in tickets and come across the water. They come here after they have been kept down in the hold of a vessel, without light and without a proper amount of air, with food of the coarsest quality and most insufficient quantity, and then when they land at Ellis Island they are like all other people. A man who has crossed the water in the hold of a vessel can attribute any illness he may appear to have to seasickness. If the doctor who feels his pulse or looks at his tongue tells him he has got this or that disease, his ready answer is that he has been on the water and that he is seasick, and common sympathy admits him.

These men who inspect them have sympathies like all other people. They admit nearly all the immigrants. That is what is filling up our poorhouses and our jails. Now, why bring him all this distance? "Well," you say, "we did not invite him to come." I know; but he is being invited. We know that the steamship companies have thousands of agents in the old countries selling tickets and soliciting foreigners to buy tickets; that millions of dollars have been expended in the construction of these great vessels that bring from 500 to 1,000 immigrants at a load, and that they have their agents and their solicitors scattered all over Europe soliciting these poor immigrants to purchase tickets. The railroads carry them from New York City out on the Western prairies for a dollar apiece, and the men who own the stock in the railroads pretty generally own the stock in the steamship companies. And within the last few years they have built great steamers, and to-day are engaged in the business of bringing poor, helpless people into this country, people who are ineligible to come in under our laws, and that is what I want to stop. If you do not do it immediately, it is only a question of a few years.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes; if it is only a question.

Mr. ADAMS. I want to know if you have made any provision in your bill for the extra work you propose to put upon the consuls of our country?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I simply put into my bill a provision that the Secretary of State shall form such regulations as are necessary.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I must go on. If you do not pass a restrictive measure to-day, you will do it in the next few years. It is going to come. Here we are accessible from both sides, from the Pacific and from the Atlantic. We are a raft put within reach of a wreck for drowning men to get on. In many countries emigration to this country has only been thought of in the last few years. We have got to do something. We have got to stop it or we cease to be what we have ever hoped to be and have supposed we were—an American nation. In a few years, if immigration is not restricted, this country, of which we are so proud as Americans, will be everybody's country.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. For a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. What reason has the gentleman to expect that the duty which his bill imposes upon the consuls will be performed in any other than the perfunctory way in which the same consuls perform the duty of certifying invoices? That certification is a mere form which amounts to nothing, and which is always made whenever the $2.50 fee is paid.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I expect, Mr. Speaker, that this bill, if it passes, will furnish a very good reason and occasion for renovating our whole consular service. There is no reason on earth why a consul of the United States in a foreign country should not perform his duty as well as any Government officer performs his duty here.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does not the gentleman know that the certification of invoices, a somewhat similar duty to that which this bill imposes, is regarded universally as merely perfunctory, and that you find the certificate in full and proper form in cases where the officer has never seen the inside of the invoice or the merchandise that he certifies to?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not admit that the duties are similar. They are very dissimilar.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I can not yield, Mr. Speaker, for any more questions.

Mr. ADAMS. The only way we can get at the merits of this bill is by asking questions.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Go ahead.

Mr. ADAMS. What possible knowledge can the consul at a seaport have of an emigrant who comes from a place 300 miles in the interior, and how can he possibly obtain any trustworthy information upon which to certify intelligently, truthfully, and correctly to the standing of such an emigrant? How is the consul in such a case going to know anything about the emigrant?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The conclusion from the gentleman's question is that if the emigrant lives 300 miles away from the consul the information necessary for certifying may not be accessible, but that if the emigrant comes from a place 3,000 miles away from the inspector, then the inspector can properly certify. That is how the business is done now. Immigrants come from places more than 3,000 miles away, and the inspector has no knowledge whatever of them, yet he undertakes to inspect and pass them. Surely it would be easier for the consul to obtain trustworthy information about an emigrant living even 300 miles away from his city than it is for our inspectors to obtain such information 3,000 miles away. I admit that in some instances this bill, if it were a law, might work hardship to some emigrants, in requiring them to come 300 miles to obtain their certificates; but surely it is a great deal better to have them come 300 miles than it is to have them come 3,000 miles before they are inspected, as they do under the present system.

Mr. ADAMS. In answer to that objection I will say that if a United States consul performs his duty now under the statutes of the United States he has all he can attend to, whereas the immigration agent here has this specific duty to perform and can take time to examine into any given case. I object to this extra duty being put upon consuls of the United States, because if they attend to their duties under the laws they have all they can do.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, well, it is a very easy matter to increase the consular service.

Mr. ADAMS. No, it is not.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. The gentleman, as I understand, proposes to annihilate the distance which the emigrant must travel before he is subject to examination and inspection.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It is one argument in favor of my proposition that it does lessen the distance.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. How is the consul to ascertain intelligently and truthfully the facts? How do you expect to accomplish your object in that respect?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If the emigrant lives in the same city or town where the consul is stationed it is a very easy thing for him to ascertain the facts.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. But suppose the emigrant lives elsewhere?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then let him furnish the necessary evidence.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. In other words, the consul is to do the best he can.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, sir. And bear in mind that the fact that the emigrant brings a certificate does not necessarily admit him into this country. If he deceives the consul or commits a fraud upon him, the immigration inspectors, when he reaches this side, will still have the right to bar him out. This simply provides an additional protection to the country, an additional remedy against the influx of undesirable immigrants. And, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that the consuls of the United States do already perform this or similar service. Under the quarantine bill which we passed in 1892, we provided, in the second section, that no vessel should be permitted to leave any port when it was defective or when any disease was on board until a consul of the United States had made an inspection and had given the vessel a clearance.

Mr. SAYERS. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania sits down I wish he would inform the House as to whether or not the Bureau of Immigration makes any objection to his bill, and if so, what the objection is. I ask merely for information.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understand that in the last Congress, when this same bill passed the House and went to the Senate, the Bureau of Immigration did object to it, mainly on the ground that it created a dual service between the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury. As I have said, the law of 1892, which regulates quarantine service, already imposes a similar duty on our consuls. There is no use in sending out additional agents into foreign countries under direction of the Treasury Department; none whatever. This service can be performed by the consuls under the State Department, and the only real argument against this bill is that it does restrict immigration if I understand the definition of the words. It does throw obstacles in the way of immigration; it does put restrictions on immigration. That is one of the things I am trying to do.

Mr. HYDE. Is it not one of the strong arguments against the measure that it is not restrictive enough, but is only restrictive to a very small extent?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, it does not restrict anybody from coming to this country who is not already restricted under the law. It provides for the enforcement of the present law; it provides an additional means of enforcement. It does not repeal any part of the present law.

It is said that this measure is going to work hardship; that it is going to deny worthy foreigners the privilege of coming to this country and becoming citizens. Sir, I can see no hardship upon anybody in subjecting him to an examination on the other side of the water when under the existing law he is subjected to a similar examination on this side. If it is charged that this bill will operate to keep out any eligible person, that is another question. It does not do so. I claim that it will operate beneficially to the immigrant as well as to this country. If the man proposing to come to this country is eligible, is capable under our laws, he ought to know it before he converts his property into money and invests it in a ticket. Why, sir, these steamship agents pervade the whole extent of foreign territory, soliciting anybody to come to this country. They have solicited people to come who were excluded by law, but who succeeded in passing the examination. And such persons will always pass the examination so long as the only examination they undergo is the one on this side of the water.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply to a challenge which will be made here. I wish to give an answer to a question of my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] in reference to Germany. I have tried very hard to ascertain whether there was any real opposition to this measure among the Germans, inasmuch as it has been charged that there was. I have a large number of German-Americans in my district. There are some newspapers there published in German that have opposed this bill, one in particular, the proprietor of which—the man who furnishes the money to operate it—is and has been for many years a steamship agent, selling tickets to persons who wish to go to Europe and to the friends of those who wish to come here from Europe. I received a telegram from him dated May 7, to which I replied. His telegram and my reply were published not only in his paper, but in nearly all the principal papers of Pennsylvania. And from the time of that publication not one person has ever written to me or telegraphed me or in any manner to my knowledge raised any objection to the restriction of immigration—certainly not one German. I ask the Clerk to read that telegram and my reply.

PITTSBURG, PA., May 7, 1896.

WILLIAM A. STONE, M. C.:

You are mistaken in believing that German-Americans favor your bill. Only recently the Turners of this section, numbering over 5,000, adopted resolutions of gratitude to Mr. BARTHOLDT, and protested against restrictive measures.

VOLKSBLATT.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Washington, May 7, 1896.

PITTSBURG VOLKSBLATT:

GENTLEMEN: I am in receipt of your telegram of the 7th instant, in which you say that I am mistaken in believing that German-Americans favor my bill restricting immigration, and that the Turners of Pittsburg have passed resolutions protesting against restrictive measures, etc.

I can well understand how one of the proprietors of the Volksblatt, as agent for several steamship companies engaged in the business of bringing immigrants into this country, is opposed to restricting immigration, and I can see how, through the columns of the Volksblatt and other papers similarly interested, many honest Germans are led to oppose the restriction of immigration, but I do not believe that the majority of the intelligent German-Americans of this country desire to see the shipping of such large numbers of undesirable immigrants into this country continue. The Germans are a frugal, saving, hard-working class, and make good American citizens. The immigrant pauper laborer from southern Europe enters into direct competition with the German laborer as well as others here and gluts the labor market. This is what keeps the price of common labor down and puts it at the mercy of capital.

I, with many others who have been working to restrict immigration, am of German descent, and have a common right to speak for the German-Americans. Those engaged in the business of bringing cheap labor into this country shrewdly think that if they array the German-Americans against the movement to restrict immigration they will so frighten the two great parties in this country that they will not dare to pass a restrictive law. They have so far succeeded that if such legislation fails in this Congress it will be because the German-Americans are believed to be against it, and to that end the Volksblatt and some other German newspapers have succeeded. I do not believe that the German-Americans are against it. While there are many Germans in my district, the Volksblatt has so far made the only protest to me against such legislation, and I hereby invite the German-Americans of my district and of the State to write to me and to other members of Congress giving their views upon this question. I would like to know if they are really opposed to restricting immigration.

Very truly, yours, WM. A. STONE.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Now, I wish the Clerk to read two letters which I have received.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yours of April 14, 1896, to hand. I am at a loss how to answer your inquiries in regard to the opinions or feelings of the Germans on the question of immigration and the pending bill. I have heard very few comments or expressions in regard to the passage of such a law. There are always different opinions; some favor and others condemn, but I believe—not saying more than I can answer for—that a great many Germans who have the welfare of our country at heart are not opposed to any bill that would restrict and more safely guard against immigration that would be a detriment to the interests of our country. I am well aware that there are many Germans who are hasty in opposing every attempt at legislation of this kind, as though there was a feeling of hatred against their nationality and a reviving of the bygone nativism. I am unable to find anything in the bill proposed that would be, as far as the German element is concerned, a hardship, preventing them from emigrating this country. In regard to the German press in our section, they have not been saying very much about the proposed legislation. The German Turnverein of the Pittsburg district, at a meeting held last Sunday, passed a resolution declaring against the Stone bill and passed a vote of thanks to Congressman BARTHOLDT for his opposition to the measure. This resolution was printed in last Monday's Pittsburg Post. The Freiheits Freund, of last Monday, giving the proceedings of the Turnvereins, makes no mention of the resolution, believing that some law should be passed that will prohibit such immigration that will not be a blessing to our country, but not closing the doors against admitting all those who will make good and faithful citizens. The bill presented to the House of Representatives by WILLIAM A. STONE appears to me to be fair. It will have the effect of notifying the countries from where the immigration comes that those who wish to come to our shores must prove themselves worthy and be such as comply with our laws.

Yours, respectfully, HENRY GERWIG.

GREENVILLE, PA., May 14, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Do you remember me as pastor of the German Congregation at Warren, Pa., over twenty years ago? Well, the Pittsburg Times of May 9, 1896, contained an article, a reply to the Volksblatt. As far as I know German-Americans are in favor of restricted immigration judiciously managed. As far as I know you personally and your standpoint on this vital question, so far I would indorse your position. Educated Germans oppose the fanaticism against foreigners and so-called knownothingism, compelling a foreigner, irrespective of age or education, to wait twenty-one years before he can be naturalized. We do not want to be classed with the vilest Huns or Italians. If the law be made with good judgment, discriminating between honest and educated men and the uneducated and immoral people, then you will have the indorsement of every loyal German-American. During our civil war one-third of our Army consisted of foreigners. I, too, took part in it. We resent the tendency of the Order of the United Workmen of America. A hundred years ago and more the Government's friend sent a good-for-nothing fellow to America, which then used to be regarded as the garden spot for just such people. But this is no longer the case. Since quite a number of years the German Government has restricted immigration. Practically I believe a mistake has been and is being made. The consulates in the different foreign countries could attend to all requirements for restriction. No steamship company should be allowed to land anyone on the soil of the United States without the certificate from the consul of that district.

How much I would like to converse with you on the subject!

Another feature presents itself since about thirty years. Capitalists and corporations have sent out a host of agents inducing people to immigrate to this country, often under false pretenses. Thousands have been disappointed, but had no means to return with. This mean business of securing some of the worst population ought to be stopped at once. American greed has largely invited cheap labor.

Hoping that I may have the pleasure of seeing you some time this summer at Warren, and that these few thoughts may serve as an encouragement to you,

I am, with kindest and highest regards, sincerely, yours,

G. A. BOURGEL,
Professor, Thiel College.

Hon. WILLIAM A. STONE, M. C.

I should be glad to have what is published on the subject. Please inform Congressman Col. GEORGE HUFF, of Greensburg, of this when you see him.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow me one minute?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Are you not in receipt of a letter signed by the first speaker of the district committee of the Turners of Pittsburg, and also signed by the secretary, in which they protest energetically against your bill and make arguments against it——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No; I am not.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And in which they tell you the Germans in your district, as well as in Pittsburg, are a unit against your bill? If not, the mail has miscarried the letter, for here is a copy of it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Has the gentleman finished his question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have received no such letter. I suppose my answer settles that point. I presume that if I misrepresent the Germans in my district I am the one who will suffer by it. I will take the chances on that. I say that while some Germans may be against my bill, I have had no intimation from them, except through the Pittsburg Volksblatt, to which I have referred, which is owned by people engaged in the steamship business.

Mr. KIEFER. I have heard that statement denied.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, I have just heard you deny it. It does not change my conviction of its truth.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the broad statement that the Germans of this country are opposed to restricting immigration is a libel on the German citizens resident in our country. No more loyal, patriotic class of people exist within the borders of the United States than our German population. They are not opposed, in any sense of the word, to restricting immigration in a proper way. And I claim, sir, that while it may be that sympathy or public sentiment may be worked up in some localities in opposition to it, the Germans as a class are not opposed to restricting immigration to able-bodied, self-supporting foreigners. That is all I claim ought to be done. That, I think, the country will demand shall be done.

But incidentally let me mention the fact that, as will be seen by the statistics compiled by Senator HILL, which is a feature my bill does not take up—none of the bills do except the Corliss bill—under these statistics, which are not denied, but which are reported by this commission on investigation in this country, there was sent from the United States in the year 1893 to Italy alone, by men who came from Italy to our land and earned wages here, between twenty-five and thirty millions of dollars of their earnings. Every year this country and the industries of the country not only support the laboring people of our own land, but the laboring people to a large extent of the whole world. Our wages go to Italy and to all foreign countries; and if this country to-day should cease its industries, if it should suspend its manufacturing, its mining and railroad building, and all the wheels of industry be suddenly stopped, it is a serious question whether these foreign countries who receive so much money annually from the United States, of wages earned by their citizens, would not suffer from it nearly as much as we would.

Now, sir, our people are suffering. There is more competition to-day in common labor in this country than in any other business. Common labor stands right where it did twenty years ago. You put a tariff on a machine to keep it out of this country, so as to force its construction within our own borders and give the labor upon it to the laboring men of this country. But you put no tariff, no obstruction, no protection on the able-bodied worker from abroad. He may come in competition with our labor. You let him come here with his tools, set himself down, and come into direct competition with our own labor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He is a consumer.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. He is a consumer! Why, Mr. Speaker, nearly a hundred thousand men come annually from Canada alone into this country. They are men who are called "birds of passage." They work for a season and then go back home, taking their earnings home with them. I tell you this country is not only supporting to-day its own laborers, but to a large extent the laboring people of the world.

Now, sir, this bill does not aim at curing that condition of affairs; but I warn you that this question will never cease until you give to our laboring people that protection which you seek to give to the capital of the country. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. BARNEY. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], reserving the remainder of my time.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I shall address myself to the amendment which I propose to the original bill, offered by the chairman of the committee.

This measure is intended as a protection to American labor.

It seeks to preserve the fruits of our labor for those who carry the burdens of American institutions and stand ready to defend the honor of the nation.

It does not affect any man, woman, or child who now lives in this country, nor does it prevent any person from seeking and securing a home on American soil and enjoying the blessings and advantages of the labor markets of this country.

It is estimated that from 50,000 to 100,000 human beings every year leave their homes and families in foreign countries and come to the United States with no intention of making this country their permanent home, and engage in competition with our laboring men during the most active business periods and building seasons in all the avenues of labor, and at the end of the season or prosperous period return to their foreign homes and there spend with their families the fruits of American labor.

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Treasury appointed a commission to investigate and report what changes were deemed necessary in the rules and regulations in force with reference to immigrants, and I find on page 40 of that report the following recommendation:

Your commissioners would respectfully suggest that Congress should by appropriate legislation enact laws for the following purposes:

1. A law regulating immigration into the United States from contiguous foreign countries by water or land carriage, which will protect our workmen from the importation of transient cheap labor across the frontier.

Provision should also be made therein to exclude aliens coming year after year to perform labor in the United States with no intention to settle therein.

I desire to say that in my judgment the present administration of the Immigration Bureau is the one bright star in the unfortunate Cleveland Administration. It stands out as the one department of this Government seeking earnestly and faithfully to execute the laws with reference to immigration; and I want to congratulate my Democratic friends that they have, in this department at least, worthy and efficient men.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for the information of members of this House I will ask the Clerk to read two letters, one of them addressed to the Commissioner-General from his subordinate officer at Sault Ste. Marie and the other from the inspector at Boston, with reference to the very subject I am discussing. I want to say that every inspector of immigration in the United States has appealed to the Commissioner-General for a correction of this evil.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES IMMIGRATION SERVICE,
Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., April 29, 1896.

SIR: While we on this side of the border of Canada are praying for Congress to relieve us from the influx of alien labor, at the busy periods of the year here, the Canadians (not by any legislative action, but actuated by a hostile feeling toward United States citizens) are discharging and excluding our mechanics and laborers from their country very effectually. For example: A few days ago a Canadian steamer was fitting out at Owen Sound, Ontario. One of the firemen, engaged for the season, was discovered to be a United States citizen, and was promptly discharged, for that reason only.

Again, directly opposite this city is situated the town of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, where a Philadelphia syndicate are developing the water power. The syndicate built a wood-pulp mill there last year and have last week let a contract for the building of another mill. The contractors will not and do not employ any United States citizens as bricklayers, stone masons, or laborers. On the other hand, Canadian carpenters, masons, and laborers flood our home market and, as they work cheaper, take the work away from our residents. Even the United States Government public work is being done by dredges, drills, and tugs manned almost entirely by aliens. The above is a mild statement of the situation, for I have said nothing about the numberless clerks, stenographers, school-teachers, and bookkeepers, both male and female, who annually invade the United States.

If consistent and in your opinion proper, I should like this statement of the situation to be laid before the Committee on Immigration of the House of Representatives.

Respectfully, CHAS. C. WILLIAMS,
Immigration Inspector.

Hon. HERMAN STUMP,
Commissioner-General of Immigration, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION,
No. 70 Long Wharf, Boston, May 13, 1896.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of yours of the 11th instant, requesting me to write you, giving the evil effects, as observed in this section of the country, in consequence of the lack of restriction of immigration affecting what is known as "birds of passage," parties seeking admission into the United States with no intention of making it their permanent abode.

In reply, I beg to inform you that about 35,000 passengers arrive at this port from Halifax and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, annually by water, all of whom have to pass the inspection of the immigration officers under my direction. Of this number about 25,000 are aliens, some of whom are permanent residents in this country, returning home after visiting their native country.

From February 1 to May 13, inclusive, of this year 4,792 aliens arrived at this port by these two lines, about 75 per cent of whom would come under the head "birds of passage." Their occupations, principally, are fishermen, farmers, carpenters, masons, and stonecutters, whose domicile is Nova Scotia, and who have no intention of making their abode in the United States, and who come in direct competition with our native-born citizens and those who have adopted this country as their permanent abode, and whose coming has a tendency to reduce the rate of wages, especially those employed in the building trades.

They come year after year in the spring and return in the fall when the season is over. This class of men thoroughly understand the contract-labor laws of the United States and know how to evade them upon their arrival.

A number of others who are classed as American citizens come here annually, having taken out naturalization papers for the purpose of getting employment as masters of American vessels and at other occupations which none but American citizens can occupy under our navigation laws, whose families are domiciled in Nova Scotia and who have no permanent abode in the United States. This has become a common practice, and is a menace to our citizens. In addition to the above, large numbers of these classes come to this section of the country by rail.

Respectfully, yours, THOMAS F. DELHANTY, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN B. CORLISS, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, those letters indicate the opinion of men who have had experience with reference to our immigration laws. I hold in my hand copies of resolutions certified to by the president and secretary of every labor organization in my city, embracing a membership of 15,000 American citizens who have asked this Congress to adopt this particular measure for their protection. They ask it for protection to American labor.

This class of competition with American labor is not confined to the subjects of Canada.

They come from Italy, Austria, Hungary, and other foreign countries. They bring with them nothing but physical force, capable of performing work upon the low standard of other countries, and prey upon the labor markets until they have accumulated a goodly sum for a laboring man in a foreign country, and return to their homes and families abroad.

While here they add nothing to the value, prosperity, progress, or genius of the people of this nation.

In advocating this measure I desire to most emphatically disclaim any intention to prevent any capable, honest, industrious, law-abiding person from seeking a home on American soil and obtaining the blessings and advantages of this country for himself and his family.

The associations of my life have been among an admixture of foreign-born and native citizens.

My affiliations in social, business, and secular life have never been determined by any test of nationality.

Many of my closest friends and companions are of foreign birth.

I believe our foreign-born citizens who have come to this country and adopted it as a home for themselves and their families are as loyal to the flag of their adoption as the man who was born beneath it. [Applause.]

The foreign born have added to the material wealth and prosperity of the nation, and, what is of far greater value, they have contributed to its moral and intellectual welfare.

In my judgment the genius of the American people, the prosperity and liberality of American institutions, and the superiority of the American nation has been achieved by the association of the best physical, moral, and intellectual men and women of all nations.

But the sad experience of our people in want, idleness, and misfortune during the past three years under the free-trade provisions of the Wilson bill has demonstrated the wisdom of the Republican principles of protection.

Protection not only to American manufacturing industries and farm products, but protection to American labor. We have always contended that the protective tariff maintained high wages and benefited the laboring man as well as the capitalist. If that be true—and I am one who believes in the principles of protection—then we should assure the laboring men of our fidelity to their interests by the adoption of this measure.

By this law we would stop the skilled mechanics and laborers from annually coming into the large cities along the Canadian border and competing with our artisans in the building and other trades.

This bill in no way affects the Canadian who has or may hereafter come to this country with the intention of making it his home.

I recognize the value and intelligence of the Canadian people, and hope that our country may be blessed with more of them.

I number among my best friends and business associates American citizens born in Canada.

In the city which I have the honor to represent, there are many thousands of noble men and women born in Canada who are loyal American citizens, and by their thrift and natural genius have become successful merchants, bankers, lawyers, doctors, and mechanics, and in recognition of their value as citizens many of them have been honored by my city and State with public office, and one of them to-day honors my State as a Senator of the United States.

Every protective barrier that is erected by this country for the welfare of the people helps to advance the spirit of freedom that is lurking in the hearts of the Canadian people.

The tariff law of 1890, embracing the most wise provisions of reciprocity incorporated therein by the plumed genius of this age, Hon. James G. Blaine, was rapidly forcing the Canadian people toward annexation and away from the influence of England.

The election of 1892 and the adoption of the free-trade Wilson law has opened our markets to the Canadian lumber and farm products, restored England's influence, and sent the lumber barons of my own and other States with their capital into the pine woods of Canada to feed the cheap labor and give prosperity to the Canadian people, to our great loss and detriment.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said by some sapient economist, "Show me the laws of a nation and I will tell you the condition of its people." How clearly this wise saying has been demonstrated during the past three years under the evil effects of the Wilson-Gorman free-trade act, repudiated and condemned by the people in the election of 1894.

The same demoralizing free-trade principles have heretofore permitted the indiscriminate immigration of the degraded classes of other nations into our fair land.

The effect upon American character may be likened to the effects upon a great river of pure water which has poured into its depths the refuse and débris that flows from the sewers of our large cities. At first its effects are not noticed; the decayed, poisonous matter naturally sinks and is scattered along the bottom of the river unobserved; but in time the people along such streams will begin to find among the rocks and stones on the bottom and along the shores a dark, unhealthy, fungous growth containing dangerous poisons. Life will be gradually exterminated from such waters, and disease and death will at last arouse the people to action and compel a remedy for such evils. Already a measure is pending in Congress looking to the investigation and correction of these evils.

How much more important is it to preserve the human blood and manhood of the American character by the exclusion of depraved human beings.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in a pedigree not only in the animal, but in the human family, and I hope to see some day a law enacted prohibiting the marriage of any person who has been convicted of a heinous crime or who is afflicted with an incurable or hereditary blood disease or insanity.

Why is it that we find the prisons, asylums, and almshouses throughout our land filled to overflowing? Why is it that these menial institutions have been flooded with unfortunate humanity in recent years until the maintenance thereof has become a burden to the cities, counties, States, and nation? Why is it in all our large cities we find a large increase in the beggars, paupers, and criminals preying upon the people and demoralizing by their influence and association the character of American manhood? In my judgment it is because the Old World has been forcing upon us every pauper, criminal, and degraded human being that was within their power to control, and using this fair and enlightened country as a dumping ground.

Mr. Speaker, I most heartily favor the educational test proposed to be adopted by this Congress. In this country we maintain public schools and in most States compel the education of all children, and thus elevate mankind by the most powerful means known to civilization.

In my judgment the enlightenment of the people, the liberality of the public institutions, and the power and prosperity of the nation are largely due to the associations of the best blood and character of all nations under the elevating influence of the free public schools of America.

I do not believe in upholding the maintenance of foreign missions. My method is to foster, care for, educate, civilize, and Christianize the people of America, and thereby so exalt the American character and the American nation that by its enlightened people and the noble character of its citizens it shall civilize and Christianize by example and contrast the people and nations of the earth. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I repeat, that I believe in the principles of protection to American industries, protection to American labor, and also protection to American character and humanity. I would not weaken the power of the Republic by the adoption of monarchical laws and customs.

I would not injure the industries of this nation by opening its commercial doors to the competition of the manufactured products of cheap labor of foreign nations.

I would not reduce the wages of our working people by longer permitting the transient birds of passage from other countries to periodically infest the labor markets, steal its fruits, and return to foreign lands with the bounty that belongs to American labor.

Mr. Speaker, I would to God that the large number of our best citizens, who yearly go to Europe and spend an average of $500,000,000 in recreation throughout European countries, thereby fostering the people of the other nations, adding to their wealth, and taking the gold that is needed to conduct the business affairs of this nation, might be prohibited from such pleasure and recreation for a period of at least three years and induced to expend the same amount of money viewing the beautiful scenery, examining the vast resources, and exploring the wonderful natural advantages of our land, and give to the people of this country the benefit of such expenditures for the prosperity and happiness of our own people. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I realize that this country has vast uncultivated fields, wonderful natural resources, and boundless undeveloped wealth; that we could with proper laws for the protection of American labor double our population and thereby enjoy greater prosperity. But, sir, the barriers of protection have been torn down; the doors to immigration have been indiscriminately left open, until suffering humanity cries for relief. [Applause.]

Under the present conditions and unwise laws the laboring masses are gradually being driven into idleness, want, and misery.

The gold-bond brokers and money lenders are stealthily obtaining supremacy and silently directing measures in their interests with heartless energy, while the devil of bankruptcy is gradually absorbing the lifeblood of the business men, and driving the workingmen into idleness and want.

Some one has said: "To enjoy a good reputation give publicly and steal privately." The bond brokers of Wall street, under the present Administration, have been using this principle and proclaiming themselves philanthropists while robbing the Treasury of our nation.

Laws should be enacted for the elevation of the masses and not the classes, laws that will destroy special privileges in the hands of the favored few and level them to the plain of equity and justice to all humanity.

The people of this country love courage and action upon honest conviction, and with divine charity forgive an honest error of judgment; but, sir, they despise a coward, a straddler, or sycophant in public life.

Oh, ye representatives of the people, I beseech you to pause; hark! put your ear down to the ground and listen to the tramp of the footsteps of the army of honest, industrious people wandering through the streets earnestly seeking employment. [Applause.]

The primary cause for this idleness is not, in my judgment, the invention of new mechanical devices, labor-saving machinery, overproduction, or overpopulation, but rather the bad effects of evil legislation and want of good laws.

Mr. Speaker, the test that should be applied to every human being seeking a home upon American soil should be: Does this human being possess a character and mind sufficiently honorable and intelligent to become amalgamated with the spirit of American institutions and American manhood?

We want no half-baked characters—human beings who are seared and scorched by contact with hot, withering sin, who are blasted with blood taints, cradled in degradation, or cursed with hopeless ignorance. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, when the Lord commanded to "love thy neighbor as thyself" He evidently had in mind a man who had some respect for himself and love of his own character, intelligence, and manhood; otherwise the love for the neighbor would be unworthy, and in my judgment the Grand Architect of the Universe never intended that this divine doctrine should be extended by the enlightened people of this nation to the hopelessly ignorant and depraved human beings of all the world.

Mr. Speaker, the destiny of a nation must depend upon the character of its people, and our greatest duty is to preserve by wise laws not only the honor and prosperity of the nation, but the intelligence and character of American citizens and American workmen, and the adoption of this measure is a noble step in the progress of humanity. [Applause.]

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I have never seen a parliamentary tangle like the present during my service in Congress.

It seems to me as though the Committee on Immigration had made a serious error in bringing in three bills here to be voted on at the same time.

If we desire to pass any of them we must concentrate on some one of the pending bills. Undoubtedly they all have merit, but to divide between all the bills offered means the passage of none.

It seems to me as though the friends of this important measure should concentrate their votes upon one measure to save any of them. Which measure shall it be?

I am sure the McCall bill will command more votes than any other. I trust, therefore, that the House will vote down all amendments and pass that bill.

Mr. Speaker, in these closing years of the nineteenth century we are witnessing an influx of peoples, nations, and tongues such as the world never saw. Fully half a million of immigrants, enough to people a large city, are yearly coming to these shores.

Wise, thoughtful, and patriotic men are justly alarmed at this wholesale immigration, which many believe to be a menace to our free Government and free institutions. It is important to notice that the voice of the people has found expression not only on the rostrum, in the pulpit, and in the press, but political conventions as well in many parts of the country have repeatedly memorialized Congress upon this important subject.

Mr. Speaker, it is not words that the country wants upon the subject now under consideration, but it is action. I believe there is a loud, long, earnest, importunate demand throughout the country for radical legislation for the restriction of immigration.

The substitute now under consideration for the bill (H. R. 9), known by the name of my honored colleague, Representative MCCALL of Massachusetts, was introduced early in this session by Congressman MCCALL of Massachusetts and by myself December 6, 1895—H. R. 168. It originated with the Massachusetts Immigration Restriction League, and at their request we both introduced it.

The bill is the result of much careful and thoughtful consideration which that society has given the subject, after exhaustive examination and extensive correspondence, and was thought by the officers of that society to be the most feasible and practical method, and one that was likely to succeed if it should reach consideration in the House.

One has only to examine the statistics of the class of immigrants that are now coming to these shores—enough to create a large and first-class city every year—to be convinced of the necessity of the pending legislation.

The Fourth of July orators in my boyhood used to declaim about this glorious land of liberty and asylum for the downtrodden and oppressed of every land; but in these later years it has come to be the dumping ground for the scum of all God's creation.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we have as many Mormons, communists, anarchists, nihilists, bomb throwers, paupers, idiots, lunatics, criminals, and illiterates as we can digest at present; and it is believed that the educational qualifications, as contemplated in what is known as the Lodge-McCall bill, added to the existing restrictions, if rigidly enforced, would exclude a large number of these undesirable immigrants.

There are grave reasons why this legislation for the further restriction of immigration should be had. A fountain will not rise higher than its source, and under our free republican form of government the citizen is the ruler, and upon the character of the citizen depends the character and stability of the government; and surely it is a question deserving the serious attention of the patriot, philanthropist, and statesman as to how much further our country can go in incorporating into its body politic the ignorant, criminal, dangerous, and hostile elements that are now being emptied upon these shores.

All history confirms the lesson that our form of government can not continue to exist except upon the basis of the education and intelligence of the people.

The experience of France, Spain, Central America, the South American Republics, and Mexico, where republics have frequently gone down in blackness, darkness, blood, and shame, and where the chronic state of many of these countries is revolution—I say these illustrations admonish us of the foes of the Republic and that our form of government can not long continue with an ignorant, criminal, vicious, and degraded populace.

The Apostle Paul said that "He who refused to provide for his own household was worse than an infidel and hath denied the faith." What is true of the family, the individual, is true of the community, the town, city, State, and nation.

And that brings me to my second argument in favor of the restriction of immigration; that is, we owe this legislation to the country for the protection of the American home, for the protection of American labor from the competition of the pauper labor of Europe as well as the Mongolian labor of China.

It is a beautiful theory that all the world is a band of brothers, and free trade and unrestricted immigration would be a good doctrine if the wants and living necessities of all peoples, nations, and tongues were alike.

But they are not. A Chinaman can live on a little rice a day; an Italian can live on a piece of dry bread without meat or butter. The American laborer has been accustomed to wholesome food, education for his children, comfortable raiment, medical attendance when sick, and ten thousand comforts and luxuries that are unknown to these degraded people who are now competing with him in the labor markets of the country.

When the wants and mode of living of these foreign immigrants has reached the American standard, then it will be time, and not till then, to throw down the bars to unrestricted immigration.

On the one hand, it is argued that the Stone bill, which proposes consular inspection and certification before the immigrant starts, would prevent his being turned back thousands of miles after reaching this country, and he would know before he started whether he was admissible or not.

On the other hand, it is claimed, and I think with a good deal of force, that the consular inspection would give notice to foreign governments of the intended immigration of the young men liable to military duty, and would prevent their leaving the country, and thus deprive us of the best and most desirable class of immigrants.

So, on the whole, I incline to favor the McCall bill, on the ground of success and expediency, as the most simple, feasible, and practical restriction upon objectionable immigrants. [Applause.]

To my mind the following are some of the advantages of the educational test as a measure to restrict undesirable immigrants:

1. It excludes the people we wish to exclude; i. e., those who are degraded, ignorant alike of their own language and of any occupation, incapable of appreciating our institutions and standards of living, and very difficult of assimilation.

2. It adds to the excluded classes.

3. In practice it would be applied at places where tickets were bought and applied by steamship companies, therefore

4. It does not imply any great change in existing machinery or any large increase in consular service and expense.

5. Inspection is not committed to persons in remote countries, where surveillance is difficult, but remains a uniform system, which is public and easily controlled.

6. It is exact and definite in its operation; easily and simply applied, and therefore

7. It diminishes the labor of the boards of special inquiry and gives the immigration officials opportunity for a more thorough inspection.

8. It secures rudimentary education on the part of all foreigners applying for naturalization papers and American citizenship.

9. It promotes education among those who desire to emigrate, and to that extent improves the social condition of Europe.

10. It saves the hardship to the immigrant of making the voyage in doubt as to his admission or exclusion, and therefore

11. It does away in large part with the separation of families and with a temptation to a lax enforcement of inspection in order to prevent such separation. Intending immigrants can tell before starting whether they are eligible or not, and can decide whether to separate or not. [Applause.]

Mr. BARNEY. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The gentleman has twenty-five minutes remaining. The Chair will now recognize some gentleman in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BUCK Mr. Speaker, I have yielded fifteen minutes of my time to other gentlemen. I do not think I shall consume all of the remainder, but if I should be tempted to go beyond the limit I desire to be reminded of it by the Chair.

Mr. Speaker, when the naturalized citizen of this great Republic presumes to rise in the House of its Representatives to discuss a question of this kind, I fear that whatever he may say may perhaps lose what effect it might otherwise be entitled to by two suggestions that may naturally come to the mind of the American-born citizen. The first is that, being himself a foreigner, his sense of duty to this country may be clouded, even unwittingly, by the sympathy which he naturally may feel for those who, like himself, may wish to come and reap the benefits and enjoy the glories of this country. The other is that his natural devotion, springing from the instincts of blood, may prevent him from the performance of the fullest and most unimpaired duty to the country of his adoption. I make reference to this, because I wish to emphasize the sentiment and the fact that if there is any citizen in the United States of America who values the glory and the grandeur of our citizenship it is the foreign-born citizen, and the more so because he has it not as a matter of right, but by the grace of the laws and the humanity of the people of these United States. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, coming to the subject before the House, one would think from the expressions of alarm and dread that Pyrrhus was at the gates of Rome. The argument is presented that the Republic is in danger; that our laboring men are clamoring for protection; that our morality is about to be impaired and degraded; that our citizenship is to be lowered in its standard; all by the coming of new immigrants to this land. I will not weary this House with statistics. The history of this country furnishes statistics grander than the dome of this Capitol; and when you reflect for a moment, gentlemen, that in a period of one hundred years the original population of this country, which was 3,000,000 in 1790, has increased twenty-one fold, without detriment to our institutions, without degradation of our morality, without impairment of our standard of education and of civilization—I say there is something more than the good of the Republic behind the arguments that are now made here to exclude the poor and the labor seekers of other countries, who, like ourselves and yourselves, see across the Atlantic the rising star of the West, which bids them elevate themselves, emancipate themselves, and seek to find there a field where they can apply the energies of their hearts and the light of their intelligence. [Applause.]

There is no need for statistics. Forty millions of the 70,000,000 white people of this country have come here since 1790 and are foreigners or the descendants of foreigners. The immigration ten, twenty, thirty, or forty years ago was, in proportion to our population, greater than it is now. Where is the danger? There is no danger. Why? Because the principles upon which this American Government rests are the principles of all humanity; and every man who comes here comes to be an American, because to be an American is to be a citizen of the world—a cosmopolitan. [Applause.]

It is said that the German-American citizens are not opposed to restriction of immigration from southern Europe. I know the Germans; they are sometimes clannish and selfish, but for myself I would be untrue to my humanity as a German-American citizen if I were to utter a sentiment or make a stroke of the pen that would deny to the humblest lazaroni in the streets of Venice the privileges and the benefits that I have acquired at the hands of the people and the institutions of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, we are told that an educational test is the panacea for the evils of immigration. Why, sir, what was it with which the serpent tempted the woman in the Garden of Paradise? "Erites sicut Deus, scientes bonum et malum"—the knowledge of good and evil. Knowledge is not a protection against immorality; it is not a "test of character." The man who knows not how to write and read—who has grown up under those ancient and oppressive institutions which forbade his development—may have the heart of a Julius Cæsar in his breast, and, coming to this country, become one of its great achievements—one of the manifestations of the civilization of the New World. [Applause.]

My friend the gentlemen from Michigan said: "We need send no missionaries abroad." True. I tell you, sir, that American Christianity enlightened by American principles of humanity—the two going together—will emancipate the world. And those poor devils that you speak of—those Italians, Hungarians, Poles, Russians, or whatever they be—may reap here the benefits of a civilization which is for them as well as for you and for me. [Applause.] "America for Americans" is all well and good; but it is a barbaric heresy. "America for the world" is what Washington and Jefferson taught. We are big enough to take in all who want to come.

Mr. Speaker, this educational test (which, by the way, Mr. William Lloyd Garrison says is "no test of character") is aimed at the races of southern Europe. My friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], whose argument I admired and watched with intense interest to see how he would apply his conclusion to his reasons, said that there may be a just prejudice between the Germanic and the Latin races. No; there is no prejudice in the heart of the Germanic races against the prosperity, much less against the aspirations, of any people; and if we are to go into the ethical history of the nations of the world it would be an easy matter to prove that Italy and Hungary and Poland and any of those nations have produced specimens of the highest standard of humanity—equal in their possibilities to the greatest of the earth.

It is wrong, sir, to reason from special cases. Exceptions but intensify the rule. It is a paradox in the history of the world that the two great Republics, France and the United States, should have furnished the assassins of Presidents who were the chosen representatives of the people. Yet would it occur to any man to say that the Americans are a nation of assassins because a Lincoln and a Garfield and a Carter Harrison died by the hand of the assassin?

There is no just way to look at this question except by the rule of principle. Why should we depart from that and inaugurate this discriminating legislation of educational tests and consular inspection? Why, gentlemen, let us be candid. Let us say at once that the American people are great enough unto themselves; that they are ready to defy the providence of God and say: "This country shall belong to us alone; we want no others to feed upon our soil and clear our forests and build new railroads; we have enough of all." There is an absurdity in the very statement of the proposition.

The relations of the American laborer and the different classes of labor adjust themselves. You want the scavenger in the streets as well as the skilled secretary and the stenographer and the telegraph operator. You must have them all. They are all "logical necessities," as has been said, in the various stages of our civilization. And each man will find his place; each one will take his station according to his ability, according to his light, according to his environment and his opportunities.

There is no danger to us. Is there danger to any of you or to your wives and children? Are you not so far above any such considerations that you are bound to confess that what you talk about lives but in your imagination, that it is what you think and not what you know. The American laborer! There is one way to protect the American laborer greater than that of keeping out his brother, which he himself does not ask. The honest American laborer is a cosmopolitan; he sympathizes with his brother wherever he comes from, and history and statistics prove it. I deny the assertion made here that the laborers of the United States of America demand the restriction of immigration because it impairs their chances for livelihood, their opportunities in the race for life. [Applause.]

It has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], "Give to the American laborer the same protection that you give to American capital." Yes, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen; the capital that comes from the other side is an infinitely greater menace to our liberty and to our prosperity than the labor that comes with its "toiling masses." [Applause.] What is it that drains our Treasury? Why is it that our Government issues its bonds from month to month, or from year to year, if it be not that foreign capitalists drain our Treasury by the interest they take upon our securities, by the revenue they get from our property, and from the investments which they have made in our railroads, and other great enterprises? Cure that evil, keep that money in our country, and you will build up a prosperity that will rival the beauties of a paradise of glory and peace. Educational tests!

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BUCK. Certainly.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I understand you oppose this measure because it restricts foreign immigration by applying an educational qualification test before the immigrant can be admitted?

Mr. BUCK. That is right.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. How does the gentleman reconcile that with the proposition that the several Democratic States of the South impose an educational qualification upon their own citizens, who are born and reared on the soil, before they are permitted to vote?

Mr. BUCK. The question of citizenship is one thing, and the question of immigration is quite another. And whatever sentiment may exist with reference to the question of which the gentleman speaks, or whatever political conventions may have declared, I am now stating my own sentiments before the House.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that an educational test accomplishes no purpose. If the immigrant is educated, so much the better; if not, he still brings his labor and his honest purpose, and these have their value. However ignorant a man be, provided he be healthy, sensible, and willing to work, the statistics show that he is worth to this country $800 on an average. It has been calculated, as nearly as it is possible to calculate such things, that the 200,000 or 300,000 immigrants that came to this country in 1895, for instance, represented a value to this country of $285,000,000, and those of the half century over $6,000,000,000, twice as much as the products of the gold and silver mines of the entire country. And as to education, do these poor men who have grown up under systems of European oppression live forever?

Why, Mr. Speaker, they rapidly pass away or assimilate themselves with our population; and if not, their children do. These go into our public schools—our public schools our grandest institution—the workshop that turns out the great American citizen; and in these schools, which are great enough and big enough for everybody, they imbibe an infinite love of country and an admiration of its institutions and of its greatness which breeds in their heart a loyal patriotism that perhaps does not exist so keenly in the heart of the native citizen—for to the foreigner citizenship involves at once duty, consecration, and gratitude.

It is said our prisons and our charitable institutions are taxed for the criminal and the needy of other countries.

America is great in her material industries and in all the development that make up an advanced civilization, and she is as great in her charities as in her power. These charities are the growth of her humanity; they have made her the great civilizer of the world, the vanguard of all the nations of the earth. In doing this "charity," gentlemen, do not forget, when you cast your votes on these measures, that you are following out and realizing the logic of history.

You are but paying your obligation to mankind. It is true that the Declaration of Independence went out from American soil, but it is equally true that its spirit goes far back into the history of the world. It is equally true that the emancipation of the human race began after the light of Christianity was thrown on the world; when Æminius defeated the Roman legions in the German forest; and it grew from the valley of Runnymede, in England; it had found its most emphatic expression when a German monk in the little village of Wittenburg posted on his church door the theses and philosophy of the liberty of human thought. [Applause.] You have it not all from yourselves. Do not forget those from whom it came.

The Congress of the United States sits twice every twelve months, and if a great wave of migration should come and threaten to engulf us—in other words, if "Pyrrhus reaches the gates of Rome"—it will be time enough for us to close them. [Applause.] If the flood comes, if we ever see cause enough to withdraw the hand we have extended to the whole world, we shall have time, right, and power to say, "Now let it stop." But to stop at this time for no urgent reason but, as the committee gently and delicately express it, in honor and "regard for a public sentiment," what kind of statesmanship is that? Public sentiment may be as wrong as it may be right. Vox populi is vox Dei only when the voice comes spontaneously from some great demand of the human heart. [Applause.] It is an evil and treacherous sophism when it comes up as an appeal to selfishness. [Renewed applause.]

I have abstained from wearying the House with statistics and figures. They prove nothing.

I have shown that the history of the nation is an argument greater than all statistics, and the facts before our eyes provide an argument which we can not ignore—which duty to our fellow-men and to humanity forbid us to ignore—that this country, with a faculty of absorption and assimilation of which the history of the world knows no parallel, and furnishes no similar example, has grown great by absorbing more than forty million of foreigners who came here after 1790—I may say after 1820—because foreign immigration up to that period was substantially insignificant.

A nation that could do this, a manhood that combines within its great heart and its brilliant intellect the faculties of the American people, is great enough to absorb more and grow in the absorption. Do not believe, as has been said, that contact with so-called inferior races will degrade the superior. They are not inferior races. They are lower in the standard of intelligence and the measure of actual achievement, but they are not lower in the possibility of development. The very moment the light of your liberties and the philosophy of your great promises and teachings enter into their hearts, there are born upon these shores new men, new beings, with new aspirations and new hopes.

Do not cut them off. There may be failures as there are everywhere. There are failures in great families and in great nations. The laws of God are miraculous and inscrutable to us, and many who stand to-day in the pride of intelligence and achievement may mourn in their own decendants a decay which is inexplicable to us, but which for some wise providence is put there to place us upon our guard and put a check upon the pride which otherwise human nature would arrogate to itself. So it is a panorama of progress and of decay. It is a constant ascending stage, ever, toward which all in this world who have the instincts of humanity aspire. In God's economy this Western Continent was given to the world by Columbus, the compatriot of those whom you say you would exclude, as if to open not only new fields for bread and meat but the avenue of a new civilization through which the millennium must come of a regenerated and enfranchised world.

The gentleman says we need no missionaries, but you do send them abroad. You send them to Africa and to China and to Persia, and everywhere to preach the Gospel in obedience to the command to spread the Word of God "among the nations of the world." How inconsistent is it, if you do that, to do no charity and no missionary work at home by refusing to receive into the bosom of your family those whom you should help to elevate and those whom you should help, not with your own, but with that which has come to you through the efforts of centuries and the ambition of men like yourselves before you.

I know, gentlemen, that this is perhaps merely an appeal to sentiment, and it may have little effect upon the final vote; but practically an educational test is absolutely valueless. I do not think there is a man upon this floor who values more highly than I do the benefits of an education; but I am willing to enter the library and the domain of statistics and contend with any man upon this floor and prove that the great crimes of the world, the assaults upon civilization, are committed not by the ignorant, but by those whose vicious tendencies and natures are made more powerful by the light of knowledge. Not to speak of the anarchist and the socialist and those "unhinged," people who are highly educated, but who have that education which only furnishes a dangerous power, I appeal to my friend the gentleman from Missouri if it be not his experience, as it is mine, at home, there is barely a week, not to say a day, that some genteel, educated German, who has his knowledge of Latin from the gymnasia, and perhaps has been a teacher or a professor, comes and pleads that he is in poverty and want, because he finds no employment suitable to his education and condition? He is a pauper and a beggar until charity finds a place for him in some church or parochial school. Those men are the most miserable of the people who come here.

The man who expects nothing, who comes with nothing but his stout heart and his strong arm, gets work upon the streets if necessary, and makes a beginning, from which he and his descendants at once grow into American life.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that pandering to this so-called sentiment which requires the restriction of immigration will turn out a fallacy and a misfortune, because in the first place it is wrong and no wrong can ever lead to good. If it could be demonstrated that immigration is practically injurious, that it does threaten the labor or the capital or the morality or the civilization of the United States, I should not have one word to say; but how is it that when immigrants came to these shores at the rate of 400,000 and 500,000 a year, nothing was ever said or done, and there were no fears abroad that the liberty of the country or the morality of the people were in danger? It is a mere sentiment. It is a mere notion, impracticable, injurious to the interests of the country, and hostile to the spirit of our institutions and to the civilization of the age.

I wish to say but one word more. I am told that this is not a party question. True, it may not be, and I have no desire to offend the most delicate sensibilities of any man upon the floor of this House, be he upon that side or upon this; but the fact is, and I as a Democrat, and a German-American Democrat, must bear witness to the truth of history, that under Democratic administration and Democratic government the shores of this land have always been open to the foreigner, and he has come here ever since the day that Thomas Jefferson in his great and magnificent fight against the "alien and sedition laws," under the Administration of Adams, established the principle in this country that the foreigner was welcome, and after a probation of five years should be entitled to the privileges of American citizenship.

Under that privilege you have grown great, and you can not deny it. Therefore I say it is wrong in principle, and for that reason must be bad statesmanship, to legislate against the course of the movement of the history which has developed this country, made it great, and promises to make it greater—so great that nothing in the history of the human race can compare with or aspire to it. This is not a mere compliment. It is a truth taken from the logic of events. This continent, with all its resources, as shown by the chairman of the committee to be sufficient for a billion or two of people, is yet in its infancy.

When Herodotus, in the very prime of Grecian civilization, returned to Athens from his voyage among the Egyptians, the only compliment he gave to his countrymen was, "Athenians, you are yet children." Who will say that this country, with the history of but a century, is not still in its infancy? And who would cripple its possibilities and its great, enormous, and unbounded opportunity for good to the whole human race by closing the shores of this bounteous, God-gifted land to the peoples of the earth who wish to come here to benefit themselves? And let me say, too, in conclusion, of those people who do come, be they Italians, Polanders, Hungarians, Russians, the sturdy Swede or Norwegian, or the patient and industrious German, no matter who they may be, they are, as a rule, of the stuff of noble manhood. Imagine yourselves in the condition of thinking of emigrating from your homes, from the memories of your childhood and the surroundings of a lifetime, to look for your fortune and new destinies in foreign lands!

It takes a stout heart and a strong will and a faith in God and one's own ability to undertake the task. I stood some years ago on the gallery of Castle Garden in New York and saw these poor families—fathers and mothers, with their little ones huddled about them—having left the home of their birth, left the memories of their youth and childhood, coming here to this great God's land of liberty. Was it pleasure to them? Was it happiness? It was to them a tragic climax in the history of their lives that forced them, the old people, not for themselves but for love of their little ones, to come to this country. They knew that their sand was soon to run out; but they saw for their children a future and a hope which they never could realize or could expect at home.

I say, therefore, that as to criminals and beggars and paupers the laws are already sufficient, and properly so, to exclude them. But for the rest, Mr. Speaker, their work proves what immigrants have done in and for this country, and it is a testimonial and object lesson that can not be forgotten when the vote is taken on this question. What they have done shows the purpose for which they came, and the spirit which animated their souls and nerved their arms. They came to give work, and work is the highest capital of the human race. Work is the dignifying grace and crown of the efforts of mankind; work in all avenues, be they low or high, in which man happens to be cast. And he who faithfully cleans the streets of Washington and is honest and honorable is as worthy as the man who cashes bank checks or keeps the Treasury of the United States of America. [Loud applause.]

Work is what these people came for. They did not come to beg. There are unfortunates among them, but they came not to beg. They came to work, and they came to be made men, because they have heard of our manhood; they have learned of our country; they know its promises and its greatness, and they came to us and are grateful to us for having received them; and the foreign citizenship of this country has proved this from day to day and year to year as the waves of progress have rolled on and the principles of government have developed and the manhood of America has become grander and become more exalted than that of all the nations of the world; and we have the faculty and the breadth and the scope to continue, to develop, and absorb, and yet retain and build up a characteristic individuality embodying within itself the ultimate and greatest possibilities of the human race. I thank the House for its attention. [Loud and long-continued applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On May 18, 1896:

An act (H. R. 953) for the relief of William Gray;

An act (H. R. 1602) for the relief of A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Le Mars, Iowa;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 167) authorizing foreign exhibitors at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition, to be held in Nashville, Tenn., in 1897, to bring to this country foreign laborers from their respective countries for the purpose of preparing for and making their exhibits, and allowing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury;

An act (H. R. 7865) to allow the return free of duty of certain articles exported from the United States for exhibition purposes;

An act (H. R. 1980) to provide a life-saving station at or near Point Bonita, at the Golden Gate, in the State of California;

An act (H. R. 6) constituting Syracuse, N. Y., a port of delivery;

An act (H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. 3448) authorizing the county of Navajo, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a courthouse and jail at the county seat thereof; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 180) for the relief of Ex-Naval Cadet Henry T. Baker.

VETO MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following message of the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 1139, entitled "An act granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt."

The beneficiary mentioned in this bill was married in 1858 to Alfred B. Soule, who served as major of a Maine regiment of volunteers in the war of the rebellion from September 10, 1862, to July 15, 1863, when he was mustered out of the service. He died in February, 1864, and in 1866 a pension was granted to the beneficiary as his widow at the rate of $25 a month, dating from the time of her husband's death, two years before.

The widow continued to receive the pension allowed her until June 17, 1869, when she was married to Henry T. Mowatt, which, under the law, terminated her pensionable right. It appears, however, that a small pension was allowed two minor children of the soldier at the time of their mother's remarriage, which continued until 1876, more than seven years after such remarriage, when the youngest of said children became 16 years of age.

In 1878, nine years after he became the second husband of the beneficiary, Henry T. Mowatt died.

Though twenty-seven years have passed since the beneficiary ceased to be the widow of the deceased soldier, and though she has been the widow of Henry T. Mowatt for eighteen years, it is proposed by the bill under consideration to again place her name upon the pension roll "as widow of Alfred B. Soule, late major of the Twenty-third Regiment Maine Volunteers."

Of course the propriety of the law which terminates the pension of a soldier's widow upon her remarriage will not be questioned. I suppose no one would suggest the renewal of such pension during the lifetime of her second husband. Her pensionable relation to the Government as the widow of her deceased soldier husband, under any reasonable pension theory, absolutely terminated with her remarriage.

If she is to be again pensioned because her second husband does not survive her, the transaction has more the complexion of an adjustment of a governmental insurance on the life of the second husband than the allowance of a pension on just and reasonable grounds.

Legislation of this description is sure to establish a precedent which it will be difficult to disclaim, and which, if followed, can not fail to lead to abuse.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 19, 1896.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the message and bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the message and accompanying bill will be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 61) for the relief of Frederick Gramm;

A bill (S. 2508) to establish customs ports of delivery at Pueblo, Durango, and Leadville, Colo., and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 1865) to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, and cannon balls in their respective Departments;

A bill (S. 2514) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Annie E. Colwell;

A bill (S. 1924) granting a pension to Carrie L. Yeaton;

A bill (S. 1522) granting a pension to Catherine Smith;

A bill (S. 1493) granting a pension to Mary Clare Kelly;

A bill (S. 1435) granting an increase of pension to Nathan Kimball;

A bill (S. 1215) granting a pension to Ellen Kingsley;

A bill (S. 1100) granting a pension to Russel N. Reynolds;

A bill (S. 1044) granting a pension to Mary Newman;

A bill (S. 739) granting an increase of pension to C. E. Philbrook, widow of Alvah Philbrook, major of Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers;

A bill (S. 616) granting a pension to Matilda Gresham, widow of the late Walter Q. Gresham, at the rate of $100 per month;

A bill (S. 404) granting a pension to Samuel Goldwater;

A bill (S. 149) granting a pension to Helen M. Jacob; and

A bill (S. 125) for the relief of Elizabeth J. Cook, of Arkadelphia, Cook County, Ark., widow of Robert T. Cook.

REPRINT OF IMMIGRATION BILLS.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the several bills reported by the Committee on Immigration and the reports thereon, as they seem to be exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the several bills reported from the Committee on Immigration and the reports thereon. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. I object.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7044; and it was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

REPRINT OF IMMIGRATION BILLS.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have sent a joint resolution to the Committee on Printing for a reprint of the several bills now under consideration, and have asked that committee to have a meeting, if possible, so that the matter will be privileged in the morning.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. STEELE, Mr. COUSINS, and Mr. MCCLELLAN as the Board of Visitors to West Point.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. MILLIKEN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, presented the following report:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, having had under consideration the joint resolution (S. R. 126) requiring the roof of the new post-office building, Washington, D. C., to be fireproof, report that the roof above referred to, as now being constructed, will be practically fireproof when finished; that the expense to the Government of changing it to a metallic or noncombustible roof would be, as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, approximately $300,000, and that the change in the construction contemplated by said resolution would cause a delay of at least six months in the completion of the building. We therefore report that the resolution ought not to pass.

On motion of Mr. MILLIKEN, by unanimous consent, the joint resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CRISP, indefinitely.

To Mr. HILL, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GOODWYN, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOWERS, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

The motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE was then agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 20, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

VISITORS TO ANNAPOLIS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, public duties that I can not control make it impossible for me to discharge the duty assigned me as a member of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to the Naval Academy at Annapolis. Whilst I very much regret this, I feel impelled to ask the Senate to excuse me from service on that Board, in order that the Vice-President may indicate some other Senator to take the place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Kentucky is excused.

CAROLINE A. HOUGH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2604) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and accede to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. VILAS, and Mr. CANNON were appointed.

STANDARD FOR DRY MEASURES IN THE DISTRICT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6833) defining the standard shape and size for dry measures in use in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and accede to the request of the House for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. BACON, and Mr. PRITCHARD were appointed.

LICENSING OF BILLIARD AND POOL TABLES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5490) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. WETMORE were appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Union Congregational Church, of Jacksonville, Fla., praying for the speedy recognition as belligerents of the Cuban patriots in their struggle for freedom; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GORMAN presented a petition of the Baltimore (Md.) Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Baltimore (Md.) Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying for the enactment of legislation raising the age of consent from 16 to 18 in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Baltimore (Md.) Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent nullification of State anti-gambling laws by extending to interstate gambling by telegraph the penalties provided for interstate gambling by mail and express; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of the Baltimore (Md.) Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, remonstrating against the appropriation of money for sectarian institutions; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FAULKNER presented a petition of Local Union, No. 59, of Wheeling, W. Va., praying for the Government ownership and control of the telegraph lines; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Bridgeport Council, No. 30, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Bridgeport, W. Va., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the Government control and ownership of the telegraph lines; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CANNON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Utah, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. 4566) to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a memorial of the Anthropological Society of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 1552, relating to vivisection; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PROCTOR presented a memorial of the Medical Society of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 1552, for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association of the District of Columbia, relative to the price of gas in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association of the District of Columbia, relative to party walls in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of Dr. Walter Wyman, Supervising Surgeon-General Marine-Hospital Service, relative to Senate bill No. 1552, for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I present a communication from Charles W. Dabney, jr., Acting Secretary of Agriculture, calling attention to certain provisions of the bill (S. 1552) for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia. I move that the communication lie on the table and that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2777) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to certain posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1529) for the payment of arrears of interest on Chickasaw trust funds, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 423) to amend section 7 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment; which was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, the amendment authorizing the Auditor for the Post-Office Department to credit the account of John W. Ross, late postmaster at Washington, D. C., with the sum of $141, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On the 3d day of December, 1895, a resolution was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia in reference to farmers and truckmen in the city of Washington. The committee have given consideration to the matter, and submit a written report with an accompanying joint resolution, which they recommend for adoption.

The joint resolution (S. R. 148) for the relief of farmers and truckmen in the city of Washington, D. C., was read twice by its title.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4910) granting a pension to Cyrus Thomas, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1436) to quiet title to lands in persons who purchased the same in good faith without notice and for a valuable consideration, and to enable the Government to issue patents on such lands, and that commutations of homestead entries shall take effect from date of settlement, and not from date of entry, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7919) granting a site for the erection and maintenance of a charity hospital by the city of Biloxi, Miss., reported it without amendment.

Mr. BACON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2054) to correct the military record of Charles W. Reinhardt and to grant him an honorable discharge, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

VICTOR HUGO M'CORD.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States, transmitting in response to a resolution of December 18, 1895, a report of the Secretary of State, with the accompanying correspondence, in relation to the arrest and imprisonment of Victor Hugo McCord at Arequipa, Peru, reported the following resolution; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Be it resolved, That the President is hereby requested to continue the investigation and efforts heretofore made by the United States in the matter of the claim of Victor Hugo McCord, a citizen of the United States, against the Government of Peru, to the end that such an adjustment of said claim may be made as may be warranted by the facts in the case and by the law applicable thereto.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLEN. I introduce a bill which I ask to have read at length and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 3179) defining the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in the determination of constitutional questions was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act no bill or joint resolution that has passed Congress and received the approval of the President and become a law, or that has become a law by not being returned by the President with his approval to the House of Congress in which it originated, within the time prescribed by the Constitution, or that has become a law by Congressional action, notwithstanding the President's veto thereof, shall be held or adjudged to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court except where all the judges concur in an opinion to that effect.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 3180) relating to the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRILL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3181) granting an increase of pension to Annie J. Bassett, widow of Lieut. Commander Wesley W. Bassett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GORMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON (for Mr. HANSBROUGH) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BIOGRAPHY OF CONGRESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Benjamin Durfee be, and he is hereby, directed (in addition to his other duties and without extra compensation) to prepare an alphabetical biography of Congress from the foundation of the Government to the present time.

Mr. MORRILL. The dictionary of Lanman was brought down to 1876. Since that time some person in New York, I think, has published a later edition, a copyrighted edition, but there is no necessity to have a copyrighted edition, as all or nearly all the biographies have been published in the Congressional Directory from year to year. The resolution proposes to authorize a clerk now in the employ of the Senate to compile this work with no addition to his salary, and when it is completed all the cost will be merely that of having it printed at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the resolution may lie over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and hereby is, requested to transmit to the Senate the report of the commission appointed under the resolution unanimously adopted by the Board of Visitors of the United States Naval Academy, 1895, "to examine and report upon the condition of the grounds and buildings and sanitary condition of said Academy," and that said report, when received, together with the report of the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy for 1895, and appendix thereto (pages 61 to 74, House Document No. 3, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session), be printed as a Senate document.

ADDITIONAL MEN FOR THE NAVY.

Mr. GORMAN. Some weeks ago I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 1404) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to enlist additional men for service in the United States Navy, and for other purposes. I desire to have that motion now taken up and agreed to so that the bill may go upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the object?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senate passed the bill authorizing an increase in the number of the enlisted men in the Navy. Since then the naval appropriation bill provided for an increase of 1,000 enlisted men and 500 marines. I desire to have the bill reconsidered, that it may go on the Calendar to be taken up later. If it ever does come up for consideration I want to discuss it and to offer some amendments to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not object to the motion, but the Senator well knows that there are other provisions in the bill which were not incorporated in the appropriation bill. I supposed the Senator had been able to make upon bills that have already been considered by the Senate the remarks which he so long intended to make upon this bill. This is a very important measure. I believe it ought to be made a law and go upon the statutes.

Mr. GRAY. The bill has passed the Senate?

Mr. CHANDLER. It has passed the Senate. If it is reconsidered the Senator knows very well how little opportunity there will be to give it consideration at this hour in the session. It seems to me the Senator ought to have pressed his motion earlier.

Mr. GORMAN. I did not press it because the main features providing for an increase of enlisted men in the Navy had already been disposed of. There are other features in the bill that I desire to discuss, and I wish to offer some amendments to it. I trust there will be no opposition to having it reconsidered and placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not object to a reconsideration. Let the bill go upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was passed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

PROPOSED SUNDAY-REST LAW.

Mr. KYLE. I ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the petitions on the Sunday-rest bill before the Committee on the District of Columbia were transferred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I have since understood from the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] that those petitions refer to a different bill. There were two orders adopted yesterday. The latter order may stand. I move a reconsideration of both orders, and that the first order relating to the petitions before the Committee on the District of Columbia be stricken out.

Mr. FAULKNER. We have two bills on the subject before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and there has been considerable investigation already and a report from the Commissioners of the District as to the propriety of passing such a bill. I hope the motion to reconsider will be passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion to reconsider is agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I move, then, the adoption of the second order as printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLS. What is the order?

Mr. KYLE. To transfer all the petitions relating to a Sunday-rest bill that are now in the office of the Secretary of the Senate to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to ask whether anybody has ever petitioned for a Monday-rest bill or a Tuesday-rest bill or a Thursday-rest bill?

Mr. KYLE. The bill is before the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MILLS. I just wanted to know why it is that Sunday has been set apart as a day for a rest bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will request the Senator from South Dakota to state again his motion, so that it may be understood.

Mr. KYLE. I merely request that the petitions relating to a general Sunday-rest bill which have been filed during the past two or three years in the office of the Secretary of the Senate be now transferred to the Committee on Education and Labor, where the bill is under consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COURT ROOM AT HARRISONBURG, VA.

Mr. DANIEL. I move that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 174) granting permission to the circuit and county courts in Rockingham County, Va., to occupy the Federal court room in Harrisonburg, Va., and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

W. R. AUSTIN & CO.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1822) for the relief of W. A. Austin & Co.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, in line 4 to strike out the initial "A" and insert the initial "R"; in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-five"; and in line 7 to strike out the initial "A" and insert the initial "R"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W. R. Austin & Co. the sum of $35,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for materials furnished to the Interior Department by said W. R. Austin & Co. for use in the Eleventh Census of the United States, the same to be in full for all said materials and all vested rights.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of W. R. Austin & Co."

MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD BRIDGES.

Mr. BACON. There are three little bills on the Calendar which have been reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce, authorizing the Mobile and Ohio Railroad to build bridges across certain rivers in Alabama. There is no objection to the bills, and there will be no debate upon them. I ask that they may be taken up. They should be acted upon, because it is important that the work should be done without delay.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and the bills will be proceeded with in their order.

The bill (S. 2943) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Warrior River by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following additional section:

SEC. 13. That the act approved February 9, 1893, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Warrior River by the Montgomery, Tuscaloosa and Memphis Railway Company," is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 2944) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Cahaba River, in Bibb County, Ala., by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to add as an additional section:

SEC. 13. That the act approved February 11, 1893, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Cahaba River, in Bibb County, Ala., by the Montgomery, Tuscaloosa and Memphis Railway," is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 2945) to amend an act approved August 6, 1888, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Alabama River," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 7, after the words "eighteen hundred and eighty-eight," to insert "together with all the duties and conditions thereby imposed"; in line 9, after the word "hereby," to insert "taken from the said railway company and"; in line 10, after the word "to," to strike out "and"; and after the word "in," in the same line, to insert "and imposed upon"; so as to make the section read:

That the rights, powers, and privileges granted to the Alabama Great Northwestern Railway Company by the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Alabama River," and approved August 6, 1888, together with all the duties and conditions thereby imposed, be, and the same are hereby, taken from the said railway company and in all respects extended to, vested in, and imposed upon the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "time," to strike out "within which said railway company was authorized to complete" and insert "for completing"; in line 3, after the word "of," to strike out "said" and insert "the"; after the word "bridge," in the same line, to insert "authorized by said act"; and in line 4, after the word "begun," to strike out "in accordance with the provisions of said act"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the time for completing the construction of the bridge authorized by said act, which construction has already been begun, be, and the same is hereby, extended for three years from the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as an additional section, the following:

SEC. 3. That section 3 of the said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, upon receiving any such plans and map and other information, and upon being satisfied that a bridge built on such plan and with such accessory works and at such locality will conform to the prescribed conditions of this act, to notify the company that he approves the same; and upon receiving such notification the said company may proceed to an erection of said bridge, conforming strictly to the approved plan and location, but until such notification has been received the bridge shall not be commenced or built; should any material change be made in the plan of the bridge or said accessory works during the progress of the work thereon, such change shall be likewise subject to the approval of the Secretary of War. The Secretary may at any time, when, in his judgment, necessary, require the company owning or controlling said bridge to change the same in any respect, or to entirely remove the structure, all such changes or the entire removal to be at the expense of said company."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Alabama River by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company."

WASHINGTON AND GREAT FALLS ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to call up the fortifications appropriation bill, but at the request of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], I yield to him to call up a bill which I am assured will give rise to no debate.

Mr. HARRIS. I am greatly obliged to the Senator from California. I had risen to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill (S. 2499) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company" be now considered. I do not think it will lead to any debate. I think a statement I can make in two minutes will satisfy the Senate as to the propriety of the passage of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be read as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. Before the reading of the bill, I will make a brief statement.

The bill proposes to amend the charter heretofore granted to what is known as the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company. That company has an act of incorporation within the limits of the District of Columbia from Congress. The railroad is already constructed some miles beyond the limits of the District and the only interest the District has in this bill is that it provides for granting the company a little short branch running from a point opposite the Chain Bridge, some 2 or 3 miles west of Georgetown, to a junction with the Tennallytown road. But as this road parallels the Conduit road clear to Great Falls, the Government is interested only to take care of the conduit that is owned by the Government.

The bill was referred to the War Department and amended in many respects by the engineers of that Department looking to the care of the Conduit road. The bill is reported in the exact form in which the engineers of the War Department returned it to the committee.

That much I deemed it proper to state.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia may be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, line 18, after the word "route," to insert "exterior to and"; in line 19, after the word "road," to insert "except in the vicinity of Washington Aqueduct boundary stone No. 31, as hereinafter described"; in line 4, on page 3, after the word "road," to strike out "on grade" and insert "at right angles and on the grade of this road"; so as to read:

Section 1 shall be amended to read as follows, commencing with the word "beginning," in line 17:

"Beginning at a passenger station to be erected and maintained on the square bounded by Prospect, Thirty-fifth, M, and Thirty-sixth streets northwest, as hereinafter provided for; thence westerly along Prospect street to or near Thirty-eighth street northwest; thence westerly and northerly on land to be acquired, except at street crossings, by said company, to and across the Foxhall road; thence westerly along the top of the bluff on the north side of the Canal road, and outside and south of the southern boundary of the land of the Washington Aqueduct pertaining to the distributing reservoir, to a point on said boundary not more than 600 feet from the western boundary of said land; thence across said land, but at no point less than 200 feet from the outer crest of the dam of said reservoir, to said western boundary; thence westwardly on a route exterior to and on the south side of the land of the United States pertaining to the Conduit road to the land of the said aqueduct pertaining to the receiving reservoir; thence through said land to a point on the land of said aqueduct near the westerly foot of Dalecarlia Hill; thence westwardly on a route exterior to and on the south side of the land of the United States pertaining to the Conduit road, except in the vicinity of Washington Aqueduct boundary stone No. 31, as hereinafter described, to Cabin John Creek, returning thence along the same line by return tracks to the place of beginning, with the privilege of constructing a branch line, with a single or double track, from the Conduit road lands south to Chain Bridge, and a branch line north, beginning and connecting at a point on its main line, about opposite said Chain Bridge; thence running northerly on land to be acquired by said corporation to the Conduit road; thence across the Conduit road at right angles and on the grade of this road."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 13, after the word "and," to strike out:

For that purpose said railroad may run over and across any of the lands of the United States, or any accessory works of the Washington Aqueduct, upon such conditions as shall be approved by the Secretary of War and accepted by said company.

And insert:

The said railroad may cross, under such conditions as the Secretary of War may impose, the lands of the United States at Chautauqua, between Washington Aqueduct boundary stone No. 31 and a planted stone south 36° 43′ west, and distant 206.5 feet from Washington Aqueduct boundary stone No. 67, at which place the inner rail of the tracks shall be not less than 65 feet from the middle of the paved portion of the Conduit road.

So as to read:

The inner rail of said Washington and Great Falls Railway shall not, at any place on the line of said railway, be less than 100 feet from the middle of the paved portion of the Conduit road, except in the county of Montgomery, in the State of Maryland, in which county said inner rail shall not be less than 50 feet from the middle of the paved portion of the Conduit road; and the said railroad may cross, under such conditions as the Secretary of War may impose, the lands of the United States at Chautauqua, between Washington Aqueduct boundary stone No. 31 and a planted stone south 36° 43′ west, and distant 206.5 feet from Washington Aqueduct boundary stone No. 67, at which place the inner rail of the tracks shall be not less than 65 feet from the middle of the paved portion of the Conduit road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert "or such other sum as the Secretary of War may deem proper"; so as to read:

Said company shall, before commencing work on said railway, deposit with the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of the Washington Aqueduct the sum of $5,000, or such other sum as the Secretary of War may deem proper, to defray all the expenses that may be incurred by the United States in connection with the inspection of the company's work on the lands of the United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 18, after the word "State," to strike out:

And the said Washington and Great Falls Railway may cross the projection of the United States land at a point on the south side of the Conduit road just west of the distributing reservoir.

So as to read:

The provisions of this act, as far as applicable, shall apply to any extension of this railway in the State of Maryland that may be granted by said State; and the provisions of section 15 of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1891, entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Arlington Railway Company, of the District of Columbia," shall control and govern all the privileges granted by this act to the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 18, after the word "across," to insert "the Conduit road or"; and in line 19, before the word "road," to strike out "other"; so as to read:

And the said Washington and Great Falls Railway Company shall, where its tracks run on or across any street or road which is under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or across the Conduit road or any road outside of the District of Columbia, pave the same between the rails and sets of rails and 2 feet outside thereof, with such material and in such manner as shall be approved by such proper authorities, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 23, after the words "United States," to insert "and also at such places along the Conduit road as the Secretary of War may deem necessary"; and on page 10, line 1, after the word "suitable," to insert "cattle guards"; so as to read:

The said corporation shall erect and maintain, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, at its own expense, a neat, well-painted, and substantial fence, 4 feet in height, on each side of its tracks, through the lands of the United States, and also at such places along the Conduit road as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, with suitable cattle guards, openings, and crossings for roadways, and at such places as the Secretary of War shall consider to be required for the safety of the use of said roadways.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 9, after the word "which," to strike out "it shall pass" and insert "the railway shall pass and such other points along the proposed route as the Secretary of War shall direct"; so as to read:

That the said corporation shall, at its own expense, maintain electric lights during the hours after nightfall that its cars shall run, and at least until 12 o'clock a. m., which lights shall be located so as to light all roads on and across which the railway shall pass and such other points along the proposed route as the Secretary of War shall direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 13, after the word "act," to insert:

The crossings over the Conduit road shall be made to conform to all changes of grade of this road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 3, after the word "apparatus," to insert:

Efficient signals, by gong or bell, shall be made by every car before and during the crossing of the Conduit road, and, if the Secretary of War shall deem necessary and shall so direct, every car shall, before crossing this road, be brought to a full stop.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 7, after the word "Foxhall," to strike out "road" and insert "and Conduit roads"; so as to read:

The said Commissioners shall also have the power to make such regulations as to the rate of speed, the use of tracks, the removal of ice and snow from off the tracks, as the public interests may require; failure to comply with any such requirement or regulation, or failure to stop cars before crossing the Foxhall and Conduit roads, shall subject the company to a fine of $50 for each such failure, which fine may be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to amend by the addition of a new section, as follows:

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section:

SEC. 3. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the provision of the bill on page 4, where it is provided that "matters in dispute between the companies respecting railways on the Canal road shall be determined upon the application of either road to any court in the District of Columbia having competent jurisdiction." The road runs into Maryland. Is the Secretary of War to have authority to determine questions arising in Maryland?

Mr. HARRIS. This road is to be constructed under a charter granted by Congress out to the District line, and the remainder of it is to be constructed under a charter granted by the State of Maryland. I have no objection to an amendment that questions in dispute may be referred to any court in Maryland upon that part of the road in Maryland, and think such an amendment would be proper; but if any controversy arises between the companies occupying the same line of road within the District, of course it would be referred to the District court. If the Senator will suggest some amendment which will refer to a court in Maryland any question that occurs in that State, I shall consent to it.

Mr. GORMAN. I would suggest to simply strike out the word "whether," on page 3, line 25; and also the words "or in Maryland," in line 1, on page 4.

Mr. HARRIS. Let those words be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 25, after the word "same," it is proposed to strike out "whether"; and on page 4, line 1, after the words "District of Columbia," to strike out "or in Maryland."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state that I will yield the floor for a time, but I want to premise that by saying that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who has taken a deep interest in the fortifications appropriation bill, will be obliged to leave the city this afternoon, and we wish to consider the bill before he leaves. Therefore I trust Senators will not call up other bills until we dispose of the appropriation bill.

Mr. FRYE. I submit the conference report on the river and harbor bill, and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Maine, to save time, that the report be printed.

Mr. FRYE. There is no necessity of that. I think I can explain to any Senator who desires to make an inquiry about any particular item in the report, and I do not wish the delay of printing.

Mr. GORMAN. The only reason I have in making the suggestion is that the fortifications appropriation bill is now before the Senate, and for reasons which the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] gave, but which perhaps the Senator from Maine did not hear, I should like very much to have that bill disposed of to-day. I suggest, therefore, that the conference report on the river and harbor bill be printed, as its consideration may consume considerable time.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can not hear what is said on the other side of the Chamber, but I suggest that the conference report had better be printed.

Mr. FRYE. There is no need, let me state to the Senator from Ohio, for printing the report. Two-thirds of the amendments are mere amendments of form, and I can explain to any Senator if he desires to make any inquiry as to a particular improvement. It is very important that this conference report should be promptly disposed of.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to delay, but only wish to expedite it. I think the report should be printed.

Mr. FRYE. The conference committee has disagreed and there has to be a further conference, and I want to dispose of the amendments as to which we have agreed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to make an explanation.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand, there is a necessity for a further conference.

Mr. FRYE. There will be a necessity for a further conference, because we have disagreed as to some items.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Maine to make an explanation as to how far the conferees have agreed.

Mr. FRYE. The conferees have agreed as to everything except the San Pedro continuing contract, the Senate amendment in relation to Santa Monica, and the item for a further survey of Wilmington Harbor. Everything is agreed to with the exception of those three items.

Mr. GRAY. Those in California?

Mr. FRYE. Those in California. It is all really the Santa Monica question.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand, it is a disagreement as to the matter of the inner harbor at San Pedro?

Mr. FRYE. A disagreement as to that.

Mr. WHITE. And even as to the proposed survey there is a disagreement?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. I have nothing to say at present.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not know what time would best suit the convenience of the Senate and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce, but if my information is correct as to one item upon which the conference committee has agreed, I shall certainly ask the Senate that I may be heard in opposition to that agreement. I simply make that statement as the chairman speaks of it as a mere matter of form.

Mr. FRYE. No; what I said was that there was no necessity for printing the report, because whatever any Senator desired to know in relation to any particular amendment, in my opinion, I could inform him. As to the amendment of which the Senator speaks, I can inform him in relation to that. So there is no need of printing the report. I do not want the delay of printing, because it is very important that this bill shall be finally passed, if it is going to pass at all, before a great while.

Mr. BACON. I should very much prefer not to have the report taken up to-day, if I can avoid it. I had no anticipation that such would be the direction given by the Commerce Committee. I supposed from the action taken by the Senate Committee on Commerce and by the action of the Senate that the provision made for Brunswick Harbor would be very strenuously maintained on the part of the conferees representing the Senate. As it is a matter of extreme importance to my State, not only to the immediate harbor of Brunswick, but to the State at large, I shall ask to be heard at length on it. I have not had the opportunity to gather the data which I wish to present to the Senate on that subject. I regard it as something very much more than a matter of form. Of course, if the Senator from Maine insists upon going on with the report to-day, I shall ask to be heard; if he does not, I shall ask to be heard at such time as the report is taken up.

Mr. FRYE. It seems to me to be my duty to insist on going on. Every Senator here knows why this bill ought to be disposed of, without my saying it.

Mr. BACON. I presume that the same reasons which relate to this bill relate to all others on the question of expedition.

Mr. FRYE. No; I think not.

Mr. BACON. There are other important bills beside this one, and it ought not at any time, if the Senator from Maine will pardon me, to be disposed of improperly. Why ought the Senate be called upon to dispose of it until it shall have opportunity to judge of what is proper to be done in the matter? I do not understand that there is any such great public exigency, or private interest, as demands the immediate and hurried adjournment of this session of Congress before it shall have properly discharged the grave duties which devolve upon it. I understand, of course, that we all have private interests, which make it important that we should adjourn, and we also have some public interests which make it desirable that this session should not be unnecessarily prolonged, and they vary in degree in the cases of different individuals. But at the same time, I do think that in a matter which relates to the second harbor in my State and to one of the best harbors on the whole Atlantic coast, one which has commercial relations with every important commercial harbor or city upon the Atlantic Coast—I do think that it ought not to be disposed of hastily nor as a mere matter of form, and I think I ought to have the opportunity to be heard.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator is misquoting me. I said two-thirds of the amendments made to the bill were mere matters of form, and that as to the remainder I could inform Senators if they desired to know what disposition had been made of them. I never said all the amendments were matters of form. I do not understand that the amendment to which the Senator from Georgia refers is a matter of form.

Mr. BACON. I do not recall the Senator's language, but that was the impression made upon my mind. I do not know that this bill is any more important than the fortifications appropriation bill, especially in view of the notice which has been given by the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] as to amendments which he intends to offer to it. I simply ask, as this is a matter which I understand the conference committee have agreed upon adverse to the interests which I have the honor to represent here, that I may have a reasonable opportunity to present it to the Senate. I can not very well do that to-day. I shall do it, however, if required.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the river and harbor bill.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 13; no quorum voting.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No quorum having voted, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Cullom,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Bacon,	Davis,	Lodge,	Sewell,
Baker,	Dubois,	McBride,	Sherman,
Bate,	Elkins,	Martin,	Shoup,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Mills,	Smith,
Brown,	Frye,	Mitchell, Wis.	Stewart,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Teller,
Butler,	Gear,	Morrill,	Thurston,
Caffery,	George,	Nelson,	Vest,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Cannon,	Gray,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Carter,	Hale,	Perkins,	Warren,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Platt,	Wetmore,
Chilton,	Hill,	Pritchard,	White,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Proctor,	Wolcott.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from Maine to proceed to the consideration of the conference report indicated by him.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as a number of Senators are now present who were not present when this matter came before the Senate at the time the previous vote was taken, I beg leave to again state briefly my reasons for asking that this conference report be not taken up to-day.

Mr. FRYE. My impression is that this question is not debatable. I do not care to intervene, however.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the motion is not debatable except by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the Senator from Georgia proceeding?

Mr. FRYE. I shall not object to the Senator making his remarks, but I do not want a general debate on this matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. BACON. When this conference report was presented several distinguished Senators, those who are recognized as having as much experience as any other Senators present, suggested that the report be printed. The Senator from Maine objected and asked the Senate to proceed to its immediate consideration. The fact is, as I understand it, that the usual course is to print these reports, and there now lie upon our tables two or three reports of other conference committees which have been printed.

The purpose I have in asking that we do not proceed with the immediate consideration of the report is that the conference committee have agreed to strike out that portion of the bill which relates to the harbor of Brunswick. It is a most important matter, not only to that immediate locality, but to all of the commercial interests of my State. It is a matter of considerable complication; it is a matter which I wish to have the opportunity to present to the Senate; it is a matter which, if improperly determined now, is going to very injuriously affect not only that particular community, but a very large part of the State of Georgia. I do think that it is not an unreasonable request which I make. I had no anticipation up to within a few hours that such would be the case; certainly not until late yesterday afternoon. There is a great deal of matter which I wish to present to the Senate to show the importance of this work. I want to show its feasibility and its practicability, and I want to show that it is to the interest of the country at large that the work should be done. I can not properly do it to-day. If forced to proceed, I must do the best I can.

I have not the papers, I have not anything with which to go before the Senate on this question and contest with the distinguished gentlemen who have had it under consideration and who are entirely familiar with everything upon their side. I have nothing here except such as I can use in the way of recollection of what I have seen and heard and read and know.

Why should this thing be rushed, I want to know? What is the great controlling reason why this bill should have precedence of all other bills? What is the great controlling reason why this Congress has the urgent necessity to break up and rush away from here before it has discharged its duties? Is there any reason? I ask is there anything in the way of emergency which stands above the obligation to properly discharge the duties of this session and to properly dispose of important questions which are before us?

I do think that with this great bill, which we are told has dealt so liberally with all commercial ports and rivers, there should certainly be no haste. It is as important that proper consideration should be given to one interest as to another, and I hope that Senators will extend this courtesy to me personally in order that I may properly present to the Senate the interests which I have the honor here to represent. I can not do it properly to-day.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senate is willing, I will consent that the report shall go over until to-morrow morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BACON. Meanwhile to be printed?

Mr. FRYE. If Senators desire it to be printed. There is no need of printing it, however, not the slightest.

Mr. BACON. So far as I am personally concerned I care nothing about that part of it, but there are other Senators who do.

Mr. FRYE. I am entirely willing that it shall be printed, only it is a waste of money.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Maine indicate his request?

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the conference report on the river and harbor bill may be taken up to-morrow morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BUTLER subsequently said: Do I understand that the conference report on the river and harbor bill has gone over and is to be printed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The conference report will be printed in the RECORD, the Chair will state.

Mr. BUTLER. It is to be printed in the RECORD to-morrow morning?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask, as it will not delay the matter, that the report shall also be printed in pamphlet form, so that Senators may see exactly what has been done. Nearly every Senator is interested in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina make that request?

Mr. BUTLER. I make that request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. GORMAN. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That the conference report upon the river and harbor bill be printed as a separate document.

Mr. GORMAN. And in the RECORD also?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And in the RECORD also. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20, 36, 38, 48, 49, 67, 69, 73, 74, 75, 80, 83, 104, 118, 126, 138, 139, 142, 157, 158, 160, 172, 207, 208, 222, 223, 250, 251, 333, 385.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 46, 47, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 70, 72, 78, 79, 81, 82, 84, 85, 88, 89, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 105, 106, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 127, 129, 131, 133, 134, 135, 140, 141, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 159, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 168, 169, 170, 171, 173 (but to be inserted at the end of the item for the Potomac River, instead of that for the Appomattox River, as erroneously printed), 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 200, 201, 202, 203, 205, 206, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 246, 247, 248, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 261, 262, 263, 264, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 384, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language stricken out insert the two following paragraphs:

"For the purpose of strengthening and improving the bulkheads and pier along the property belonging to the estate of J. P. Robinson, which abuts on the channel known as Gowanus Creek Channel, the said estate of J. P. Robinson, its heirs, their successors, or assigns, are hereby authorized to construct and maintain the bulkhead distant 30 feet southerly from the present bulkhead line, beginning 470 feet from the southerly side of Bryant street and the easterly side of Court street, and said bulkhead shall then continue westerly parallel with the present bulkhead to a point distant 45 feet from the present easterly line of the pier at present owned by the estate of J. P. Robinson, and extending thence southerly in a straight line distant 45 feet from said pier line to the present bulkhead line continued, a distance of about 393 feet.

"Improving Gowanus Creek Channel, New York, by deepening the same to 26 feet at mean low water, from the foot of Percival street to its junction with the Red Hook Channel, $25,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language stricken out insert the following paragraph:

"Improving harbor at Mamaroneck, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, in accordance with report of Chief of Engineers, 1887, $10,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "report," proposed to be inserted; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 86 and 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 86 and 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert $80,000; and strike out all the remainder of the paragraph, being the proviso, including amendment numbered 87; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "improvement," in the second line of the paragraph, strike out the word "fifty" and insert seventy-five; and after the word "million," in the seventh line of the paragraph, insert the words "and fifty thousand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 107, 108, 109, 110, and 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 107, 108, 109, 110, and 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the entire paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following paragraph:

"Improving harbor at Manistee, Mich.: Continuing improvement and dredging the interior channel, $15,000; and all moneys heretofore appropriated and now unexpended may be used for dredging such interior channel at the discretion of the Secretary of War. Any limitations on such former appropriations are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 128: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 136: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 136, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the language proposed to be stricken out, and at the end of it insert the following: "If in the opinion of the Secretary of War the interests of commerce demand such expenditure"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: From the language proposed to be stricken out except the words "ten thousand dollars"; and the Senate agree to the same.

"And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to carry out the recommendations of said board, and to modify the present contract, if necessary, and adjust any loss with the contractor occasioned by the provisions of this act, and to pay the same out of the appropriation under which the said contract was made; also to expend the additional sum of $25,000, in his discretion, for such dredging as may be necessary for the maintenance of channels from the mouths of the Appoquinimink River and Blackbird Creek to the channel of the Delaware River through the dike now being constructed from Reedy Island to Liston Point for the improvement of the Delaware."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 185: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 185, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 199: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 199, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 259: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 259, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "dollars," at the end of the first proviso, insert the words "exclusive of the amount herein appropriated"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 260: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 260, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Before the word "obtaining," next preceding the words proposed to be inserted, insert the word "ultimately"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 265: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 265, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the language proposed to be inserted all after the word "Commission" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the purpose of improving the channel by preventing erosion of the banks, not exceeding $70,000 at Omaha and Council Bluffs, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Rocheport, not exceeding $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Glasgow, and for protecting the shore line above Glasgow from the foot of Bowling Green Bend to the head of Harrisons Island, not exceeding $80,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Miami, not exceeding $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at St. Charles, not exceeding $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at and near the mouth of the Little Blue, in Jackson County, Mo., not exceeding $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; on the banks of the river opposite Leavenworth and Atchison, not exceeding $15,000 at each of said localities, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Nebraska City, not exceeding $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the Commission may also expend such amounts as may be absolutely necessary at any time in the improvement of the channel by preventing erosion of the banks at other harbors and localities on the river."

And the Senate agree to the same.

"SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be made and transmitted to the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress a compilation giving a complete list of all the preliminary examinations that have heretofore been made, date of report, with a statement as to each, whether favorable or unfavorable for survey; also a complete list of all surveys that have heretofore been made, with a statement as to each, whether favorable for adoption or unfavorable, and date of report, amount recommended for completion and amount recommended for each, to be expended during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1896, by both the Chief of Engineers and the engineer in charge; also a complete list of all projects now under construction or maintenance, together with the year when adopted, and if modified, when; the total amount expended on each project and estimate of amount required to complete the same, and amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers and by the engineer in charge to be expended during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1898, the amount appropriated for each project by this act, making reference to the report of the Chief of Engineers, where report of each project is given, together with a statement containing the amount of the unexpended balance to the credit of each project July 1, 1897, whether under construction, work suspended, or appropriation made and work not commenced; also the total amounts appropriated heretofore for the improvement and maintenance of the rivers, and the total amounts heretofore appropriated for the improvement and maintenance of harbors in each river and harbor act; also the total amount of appropriation, by States, for the improvement of rivers and harbors."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 324: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 324, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language stricken out insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause to be made accurate examinations and estimates of cost of construction of a ship canal, by the most practicable route, wholly within the United States, from the Great Lakes to the navigable waters of the Hudson River, of sufficient capacity to transport the tonnage of the lakes to the sea."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 360: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 360, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"Delaware River, with a view to obtaining a channel 600 feet wide and 30 feet deep from a point at or near the city of Philadelphia to the deep water of Delaware Bay."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 375: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 375, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the language proposed insert the following new paragraph:

"Removal of dam in upper Allegheny, near Corydon, and all the dams on the Conewango Creek, and the rapids at or near Waterboro, in the Conewango Creek, a tributary of the Allegheny River."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 376: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 376, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the language proposed to be inserted insert the following paragraph:

"Gowanus Creek, with a view of obtaining a depth of 30 feet at mean low water."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 386: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 386, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "refuge," in the next paragraph but one preceding, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Inner harbor at Point Judith Pond."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 130, 132, and 342: The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 130, 132, and 342.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8109) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from California yield to me to give a notice?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

Mr. BUTLER. The fortifications appropriation bill is now before the Senate. I gave notice several times that I should call up the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress. I have given way on account of privileged questions before the body, the Du Pont case and various appropriation bills. The other day I gave another notice that immediately after the conclusion of the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia I should call up this bill for consideration and final action.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the bill?

Mr. BUTLER. To prevent the further issue of bonds without the consent of Congress, in about those words. The bill is two lines long, but very important.

I intended under that notice to call up the bill this morning. The Chair has recognized the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], and he has called up the appropriation bill. I dislike to move to displace it, because I understand there are several Senators who are interested in the fortifications bill who agree with me; but I feel that I have given way in this matter, which is very important, long enough. I certainly consider that the fortification of the Treasury of the country is more important than the fortifications referred to in the fortifications bill. We certainly should stop the drain upon our Treasury, with nothing to show for it, before we make defenses against a foreign enemy when there is no enemy in sight.

The newspapers tell us that over a million dollars in gold went out yesterday. We all know that another issue of bonds is just ahead of us if we do not stop this proceeding, and not only an issue of bonds, but an issue of bonds without the consent of Congress—without Congress being consulted as to how they shall be issued, to whom they shall issue, at what price, and for what purpose. There is nothing before the people more important than this question. It is the duty of Congress to take up the constitutional right which, without any constitutional warrant, it has surrendered. I feel it is more important than the fortifications bill, but I will give way now and give another notice. Immediately after the conclusion of the fortifications bill I will ask the Senate to take up the bill I refer to. I suppose the appropriation bill will be disposed of to-day. I ask the Senator from California whether it will not be?

Mr. PERKINS. Probably. It ought not to take more than two hours, but of course I do not speak advisedly in that respect.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, at the conclusion of the fortifications bill I shall move and insist, and I will not give way if an appropriation bill comes up unless the Senate by a vote so decides (and there is no appropriation bill before the Senate except this one, because the next bill is still before the committee and has not been reported), that the Senate take up the bill (S. 1341) to prevent the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

TRIAL FOR CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Mr. HILL. I give notice that at the first lull in the consideration of appropriation bills I shall move to take up the bill (S. 2984) in relation to contempts of court.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF FILLED CHEESE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I take this opportunity to give notice that after the fortifications bill is disposed of I will ask the attention of the Senate, if possible, to what is called the filled-cheese bill.

Mr. VEST. The minority of the committee had leave the other day to file a minority report in the case, and I have been endeavoring to get time to prepare it, but I have been a conferee on the river and harbor bill all the time, and I have actually not had the time or the strength to do the work.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that the majority of the committee did not write out a report. They have taken the report of the House committee and will no doubt use it as their own report.

Mr. VEST. I so understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. But if the Senator from Missouri wants any reasonable time there is no objection to granting it. I think it is important, however, to have the matter disposed of as soon as possible—in a day or two—and I will postpone the notice. I do not want to take advantage of anybody.

Mr. VEST. I shall not be prepared to have the bill taken up to-morrow, I will tell the Senator from Ohio, for I have not had time to examine the papers that came from the other House, which are quite voluminous—the testimony taken there and the report of the committee of the House. It is an important question.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has no desire to object to the bill being taken up?

Mr. VEST. Not at all. I merely want time to look into it. I have been so engaged that I could not do it. One or two of my colleagues have spoken to me about the report and have asked me to prepare it, and I have had to say to them, as I now state publicly, that I have actually not had the time to do so.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 888) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Capital Railway Company," approved March 2, 1895.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4363) to increase the pension of Joseph J. Hudson;

A bill (H. R. 4720) granting an increase of pension to Isaac H. Whetsel, of Louisville, Ky.; and

A bill (H. R. 6483) granting increase of pension to Thomas D. Walker.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 1837) granting a pension to Ellen C. Ewing, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Ewing;

A bill (H. R. 270) changing the time of holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of California;

A bill (H. R. 3013) to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the merchant marine engineer service and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4179) to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes, relative to guaranties on proposals for naval supplies;

A bill (H. R. 4324) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver one condemned cannon to the city of Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4452) to amend section 416 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 5217) making one year's residence in a Territory a prerequisite to obtaining a divorce there;

A bill (H. R. 5226) to give increased pension to Gen. James C. Parrott;

A bill (H. R. 5379) making it unlawful to shoot at or into any locomotive or car, or at any person thereon, or to throw any rock or other missile at or into any locomotive or car in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7285) for the relief of George McFarland;

A bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation, in said State, as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8260) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at Port Huron, on the coast of Lake Huron, Michigan;

A bill (H. R. 8590) granting to the Denver, Cripple Creek and Southwestern Railroad Company a right of way through the South Platte and Plum Creek forest reserves, in the State of Colorado; and

A bill (H. R. 9030) declaring a certain bridge across the Tallahatchie River, in Tallahatchie County, State of Mississippi, a lawful structure, and for other purposes.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. Now let the appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8109) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Gun and mortar batteries," on page 1, line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "$1,885,000" and insert "$5,000,000"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That contracts may be entered into, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for materials for construction of fortifications, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, to an additional sum, in the aggregate not to exceed $3,375,000.

So as to make the clause read:

Gun and mortar batteries: For construction of fortifications, $5,000,000.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senate, so that it may understand precisely what we are doing with this provision, to the fact that as the bill came from the other House it appropriated $1,885,000 for the construction of gun and mortar batteries, and authorized contracts to be made for a sum aggregating not to exceed $3,375,000. The committee recommend striking out the provision for contracts and appropriating a round sum of $5,000,000 on this account. It will unquestionably be a saving to the Government to have a direct appropriation made, and it will greatly facilitate the work. At the same time it will not embarrass the Treasury to any greater extent than the provision as it came from the other House, and because of that fact I for one have agreed to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, to increase the appropriation for sites for fortifications and seacoast defenses from $250,000 to $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Armament of fortifications," on page 3, line 4, after the word "caliber," to strike out "and forgings for one type 16-inch gun"; and in line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred and thirty-two" and insert "ninety"; so as to make the clause read:

Oil-tempered and annealed steel for high-power coast-defense guns of 8-inch, 10-inch, and 12-inch caliber, in quality and dimensions conforming to specifications, subject to inspection at each stage of manufacture, and including all parts of each caliber, $1,090,038:

Mr. PERKINS. I will state, in explanation of the amendment proposed in this clause, that the committee, after hearing the testimony of the Chief of Ordnance and the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, decided that it would be expedient to defer the building of the 16-inch gun until some later period. The estimated cost of the forging is $115,000. The Chief of Ordnance, after reviewing the estimates for the forgings which are necessary for the construction of these guns of various caliber, decided that he could reduce the figure $127,000, which he did, making the total reduction $242,000, reducing the amount from $1,332,038 to $1,090,038.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no contract for oil-tempered and annealed steel for high-power coast-defense guns and mortars shall be made at a price exceeding 24 cents per pound.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to call attention to this proviso. It is a very important one. Heretofore the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have been authorized to make contracts for the purchase of tempered annealed steel for all purposes, for the purpose of manufacturing guns as well as for armor and ships and so on. To the naval appropriation bill the Naval Affairs Committee reported an amendment limiting the amount which was to be paid for armor, and limiting it, I think, to a point where possibly we will not be able to procure any first-class armor.

In this case it appears, as Senators will find in the copy of the hearing, that we have paid heretofore for steel for the manufacture of these guns, beginning in 1889, 30½ cents a pound. In 1895 the price went down to 27.3 cents. Now, the committee propose an amendment prohibiting a contract being made for a price exceeding 24 cents a pound, which I think is very liberal. So far as I am concerned, with the best information I could get, I would have limited the cost of it to 22 cents a pound. But strange to say, we could not get any information from the Department which showed the cost of the like character of steel in any other country during last year. It is due to the officers to say that they were somewhat disinclined to have any limitation whatever upon the price.

I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to what is being done in this matter. I think it is a liberal provision. As I said a moment ago, I should be prepared to reduce the amount to 22 cents a pound.

Mr. PERKINS. I simply desire to supplement that which has been so well stated by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] that we absolutely had no official data whereby we might limit the cost of producing the forgings of these guns. It is a secret, so to speak, which the manufacturers do not give to the public. But we ascertained the fact that when the guns were manufactured in years gone by at a cost of 30 cents per pound for the steel forgings delivered to our Government, and later at 27.3 cents average cost, the steel billets or steel ingots were worth from thirty to thirty-five dollars per ton. At the present time ingot steel is selling as low as $17 a ton. Labor is from 10 to 15 per cent less. Therefore the reduction which we have made, from 27.3 to 24 cents per pound, is about 12½ per cent, while the reduction in the cost of the raw material, in pig iron and Bessemer steel and also in labor, has averaged fully 17½ per cent.

The committee believed that in making this reduction the Department would be able to secure the guns forged at this price or even perhaps at a lower figure. We therefore trust that the amendment proposed by the committee will meet the approval of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, line 1, after the word "million," to strike out "eight hundred and ninety-six thousand two hundred" and insert "six hundred and fifty-five thousand"; and in line 5, after the word "fortifications," to strike out "up to March 1" and insert "for the fiscal year"; so as to make the clause read:

In all, $3,655,076: Provided, That the following sums, which are estimated to meet the necessary expenditures for the aforementioned objects under armament of fortifications for the fiscal year 1897, are hereby appropriated, namely:

Mr. PERKINS. I will state, in explanation of the amendment, that the bill as it came from the other House only provided for an expenditure of money up to the 1st of March. It has been the custom of Congress heretofore to make appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30. The committee believed we should not depart from that well-established custom and usage of Congress. They therefore asked the Chief of Engineers and the Chief of Ordnance to make an estimate of the amount required for the four months from March 1 to July 1. This is an increase for that period of time. Had we not done this, when Congress shall convene next December it would be necessary for us to supply the deficiency. We believed it better to dispose of it at this time. The committee were unanimous, and we trust their views will meet the approval of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, line 9, after the word "10-inch," to insert "and"; in the same line, after the word "12-inch," to strike out "and 16-inch"; and in line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and ninety" and insert "eight hundred and fifty"; so as to make the clause read:

For oil-tempered and annealed steel for high-power coast-defense guns of 8-inch, 10-inch, and 12-inch caliber, in quality and dimensions conforming to specifications, subject to inspection at each stage of manufacture, and including all parts of each caliber, $850,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 15, to increase the appropriation for carriages for mounting seacoast guns of 8-inch, 10-inch, and 12-inch caliber from $680,000 to $875,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 18, to increase the appropriation for steel breech-loading mortars of 12-inch caliber from $216,000 to $426,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 21, to increase the appropriation for carriages for mounting steel mortars of 12-inch caliber from $168,000 to $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 2, to increase the total appropriation for necessary expenditures in armament of fortifications from $1,729,000 to $2,576,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 14, to increase the appropriation for 8, 10, and 12 inch guns manufactured by contract under the provisions of the fortifications acts approved August 18, 1890, and February 24, 1891, from $497,449 to $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 24, to insert:

For machine guns, including $15,000 for purchase of machine guns of approved musket caliber, of American manufacture, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty-six thousand five hundred" and insert "fifty thousand"; so as to make the clause read:

For projectiles, including shrapnel, for issue to the service, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the ordnance storekeeper now on duty in Washington as disbursing officer and assistant to the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, shall hereafter have the rank of major.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 10, to increase the appropriation to enable the Board of Ordnance and Fortification to make all needful and proper purchases, experiments, and tests, etc., from $100,000 to $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 11, to insert:

To enable the Board of Ordnance and Fortification to procure and test one 10-inch counterpoise carriage of the type patented by Commodore J. A. Howell, United States Navy, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to contract with the licensee of said Howell patents for said carriage, without advertising, which shall be constructed according to the plans and specifications prepared by said J. A. Howell, and said carriage shall be capable of an all-round fire, and the details of said plan may be modified, changed, and improved in the discretion of the contractors: Provided, That the 10-inch carriage herein authorized to be contracted for shall be subjected to the same tests that the Buffington-Crozier 10-inch carriage will be subjected to with respect to ease of maneuvering, rapidity of firing, of traversing, and raising to the firing position, and that it shall operate to the satisfaction of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification before payment is made therefor; and the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purchase of said Howell 10-inch carriage, including the erection of foundations and platform, the expense incident to its mounting, and the ammunition for its test.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer in behalf of the committee an amendment to the amendment. I move to strike out, in lines 15, 16, and 17, "and that it shall operate to the satisfaction of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification before payment is made therefor" and insert after the words "for its test," at the end of the paragraph, the words:

Eighty-five per cent of the amount herein appropriated shall be paid in partial payments as the work progresses, and the remainder upon the completion and test of said carriage by the Board of Ordnance and Fortification and the work found to be done according to contract.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, after line 22, to insert:

That in the act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, approved February 18, 1893, the paragraph beginning with the words "Of the $110,000" and providing for terms of payment for the 12-inch elevating gun carriage to be contracted for with A. H. Emery under the provisions of said act be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Of the $110,000 to be paid for the carriage and its foundation, 85 per cent shall be paid in partial payments as the work progresses, in accordance with the proposals submitted by A. H. Emery to the Board in his letter of January 21, 1893; and no bond shall be required for the return of this money if the carriage is not accepted, nor shall the said Emery be required to return the money paid, and the carriage shall belong to the United States when the tests are completed. The balance of the $110,000 shall be paid as soon as the test is completed and the work found to be done according to contract. Of the $20,000 to be paid for the testing of the carriage, three-eighths shall be paid the contractor when the preliminary tests are completed, and the other five-eighths shall be paid to him proportionally as the 50 rounds for proof are furnished. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to enter into a supplemental contract with the contractor for this carriage for the supply by him of a loading apparatus to go with and belong to the carriage and to be furnished therewith as a part thereof; and the carriage shall be so constructed that a part of the work of recoil can be used for the horizontal traverse of the carriage and the working of the loading apparatus; and the payment for the work so furnished under this supplementary contract shall be $20,000, which sum shall be due and payable when the carriage is erected, to make which payment the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 11, to insert:

To enable the Board of Ordnance and Fortification to procure and test one 8-inch caliber high-power gun and one sample 12-inch steel mortar, cast in one piece, on the plan of R. J. Gatling; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to contract with said Gatling for said gun and mortar without advertising, which gun and mortar shall be constructed according to the plans and specifications prepared by said Gatling and under his supervision, and to be subjected to the same test now applied to the built-up gun and mortar of the same caliber, and the sum of $65,000 is hereby appropriated to pay for said gun and mortar, and in the following proportions: Fifty thousand dollars for said gun and $15,000 for said mortar, of which sums 85 per cent shall be paid in partial payments as the work progresses, in accordance with the contract to be entered into between the Secretary of War and the said Gatling, and the remainder upon the completion and test of said gun and mortar: Provided, That before said contract is entered into the plans and specifications for said gun and mortar shall be deposited with the Secretary of War, which plans and specifications may be modified, in the discretion of said Gatling, from time to time as the work progresses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. GORMAN. I gave notice when we had the naval appropriation bill under consideration that in view of the condition of the Treasury I should propose an amendment to this bill providing for the issue of 3 per cent certificates to pay the indebtedness of the Government as it may be due from time to time. I desire to have now read an amendment which I propose as an additional section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add as an additional section the following:

SEC. —. That in order to provide the moneys not supplied from current revenues and miscellaneous receipts, and necessary for the execution of this act and necessary for the execution of any act, or all the other acts passed or to be passed during the present Congress appropriating money to be paid out of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and also in order to provide the moneys necessary to be paid out of the Treasury on account of appropriations heretofore made for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1894, June 30, 1895, and June 30, 1896, and not covered into the Treasury, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, be, and is hereby, authorized to, from time to time, borrow on the credit of the United States such sums of money as may be necessary to meet said expenditures, and to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par, for lawful money of the United States, such an amount of certificates of indebtedness, payable to the bearer, of the denominations of twenty, fifty, and one hundred dollars, or any multiple of $100 not exceeding $1,000, as may be needed for said purposes, bearing interest at the rate of not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after three years from their date; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, with the approbation of the President, to cause such portion of said certificates as may be deemed expedient to be issued by the Treasurer in payment of warrants in favor of public creditors, or other persons lawfully entitled to payment, who may choose to receive such certificates in payment at par.

And the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, sell and dispose of the certificates herein authorized at designated depositories of the United States and at such post-offices as he may select; and the Secretary shall use the moneys received for such certificates for the purposes herein prescribed, and for none other: Provided, That the total amount of such certificates shall not exceed $100,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. MILLS. I raise the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to say a few words. I have not yielded the floor. Senators will have ample time to make all the points against the amendment that they desire.

Mr. MILLS. Very well.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate five minutes in this matter. I have heretofore stated very fully my views upon the condition of the Treasury. I have called the attention of the Senate to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury asking that this identical provision might be made to enable him to provide for any deficiency. I have attempted to show, and I think I have shown, that with the appropriations which we have made and which we are making, with the bills pending before Congress which are likely to become laws, if the executive department carries out the will of Congress and disburses the amounts appropriated there will be a shortage in the Treasury before July, 1897.

I feel that I have discharged my full duty, Mr. President, as a Senator in calling the attention of the Senate to these facts. I am perfectly well aware that we on this side of the Chamber are not responsible for the result of the legislation. I have submitted the amendment to the committee of this body in charge of the appropriations. The majority of that committee did not vote for the amendment. Therefore it comes before the Senate now simply as my individual proposition. A single objection or a point of order, which three or four of my friends are ready to make at once, will, of course, exclude it from consideration. The Senate may determine this question as it sees proper, and each of us must take our responsibility for the result that in my judgment is bound to follow.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. I made the point of order against the amendment. I only wish to submit a few remarks. It is very true, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has stated, that our deficiency is growing, and that we shall not be able to meet the necessary expenditures of the Government unless some measures are adopted by which to get more money into the Treasury.

But, Mr. President, the measures contemplated by the Constitution, and the only legitimate ones, are measures of taxation. Congress is still in session, and it is the duty of Congress before it adjourns to provide for the raising of sufficient revenues to support the administration of the Government. It was never contemplated by its founders or by any of those who have followed its founders in the administration of the Government that it was to be supported by borrowing money and paying interest on it. If an exigency should arise when it is not possible to have Congress in session, there might be a law authorizing the issue of noninterest-bearing Treasury notes to tide over a contingency of that kind, but no excuse of that sort now exists. We are here, both branches of Congress, with the power of taxation in our hands, and we ought not to leave the capital of the nation with a Treasury in the condition it is in without making provision to raise a sufficient revenue to support its administration. But I am unalterably opposed to borrowing money and paying interest on it in order that it may be expended in carrying out the necessary measures of administration.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the proposition now made is an extremely important one, suddenly brought to the attention of the Senate. I think we ought to have a quorum. I wish to say something upon it. I do not think that any Senator ought to be absent when a proposition is made to increase the public debt a hundred million dollars. I therefore suggest the want of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The want of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Chandler,	Hawley,	Sherman,
Allen,	Chilton,	Kyle,	Shoup,
Allison,	Clark,	Lodge,	Smith,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Martin,	Stewart,
Baker,	Daniel,	Mills,	Teller,
Bate,	Dubois,	Pasco,	Thurston,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Peffer,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Frye,	Perkins,	Vilas,
Brown,	Gallinger,	Pettigrew,	Walthall,
Butler,	Gear,	Platt,	Warren,
Caffery,	George,	Pritchard,	Wetmore,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Proctor,	White,
Cannon,	Gray,	Pugh,	Wilson,
Carter,	Harris,	Quay,	Wolcott.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators having responded to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], upon which a point of order has been made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order. Does the Senator from Ohio desire to speak to the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will waive what I have to say until after the point of order has been settled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment being a proposition to provide money to carry out the appropriations contained in the bill, it is the opinion of the Chair that the amendment is in order.

Mr. MILLS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question before the Senate is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? Upon that question the Chair recognizes the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I doubt whether in the history of the United States such a proposition as this has ever been made to meet current deficiencies in a time of profound peace. Here is a proposition to issue not exceeding $100,000,000 of 3 per cent certificates to be issued merely to meet current expenditures made by the two Houses of Congress at a time when the Government of the United States is amply able to pay enough money collected by taxes to meet the current expenses. There is no question about that. I could name, and so could any Senator here name, items upon which a reasonable tax could be levied that would cover all the manifold appropriations made by the present Congress. The idea of issuing $100,000,000 of certificates to be paid within three years to meet these deficiencies is, as I said, unexampled in the history of our country.

It seems to me that we have arrived at a time and that we are in a position when Senators, laying aside all party influences or all party divisions, should make provision in the ordinary way by an increase of taxation for the expenses of the Government. The condition of affairs which now confronts us comes from the absolute want of sufficient revenue to carry on the Government under the existing law, under the law which was only recently passed, and which has been tried, and under which there have been accruing deficiencies occurring every hour, every day, and every year since its passage.

The failure of Congress to furnish sufficient revenue to carry on the Government led to a political revolution in this country only a year or two ago, which brought into the House of Representatives a two-thirds majority of a party opposed to the existing law, which was a warning from the people of the United States that they would not be content to support and live under a law the operations of which would every year increase the public debt.

When the House of Representatives convened it passed a bill the terms of which I do not care to discuss, for I do not approve of that bill in many of its details nor in the general proposition on which it is founded, and yet the House of Representatives did feel it to be its duty among the first acts of the present Congress to pass a bill which, in my judgment, would supply sufficient money to prevent the deficiencies which have accrued and are accruing day by day. Perhaps that bill does not go far enough; it does not go so far as I should like to have it go. According to the statement of the Treasury Department, if that bill had become a law it would have yielded additional revenue to the amount of forty or fifty million dollars, and the appropriations already made by Congress show very clearly that the present law will create a deficiency of at least $50,000,000 a year, and even the measure sent to us by the House of Representatives would probably not create revenue enough to fill that vacuum.

That bill was sent to the Committee on Finance of the Senate, where both political parties were fairly represented. By the Constitution the House of Representatives is the proper forum in which should be originated all measures of taxation. The Senate of the United States has no right to originate a bill creating taxes, but such bills must originate with the representatives of the people. All we can do with such a bill is to amend it according to our judgment to meet the exigencies of the occasion.

Sir, there is no remedy for insufficient revenue except to levy taxes sufficient to meet the expenses of the Government, and a Congress would be cowardly that would neglect this duty. But instead of providing for taxation and providing for the payment of debts, the Senate neglected to act. No such occasion as that had ever before arisen in the history of our country. The House of Representatives have sent us a bill which has met a harsh and decisive refusal in this Senate Chamber. Instead of taking up that bill and amending it, either by increasing taxes or diminishing or changing them in some way, a political measure was proposed, a measure which had no connection whatever with the question of taxation—that is, a measure for the free coinage of silver was thrust upon that bill, the whole of the bill was stricken out, and provision made for the free coinage of silver as a substitute. That would not have provided additional revenue. The silver on hand could not have been paid out for that purpose, because every silver dollar in the Treasury is now represented by an outstanding debt of the Government of the United States, and the public faith is pledged on every silver certificate that there shall be a dollar in the Treasury of the United States to cover it and provide for the payment of that silver certificate, and yet the proposition which was adopted here hastily in the Senate would have violated the express obligation of the Government of the United States, which is printed on every silver certificate now outstanding. We have no more right to take that money pledged for the redemption of the silver certificates to pay the current liabilities of our Government than we have to take any other fund which is sacredly pledged for another purpose, and yet that was proposed to be done.

It seems to me in the Senate of the United States we have come to that condition where the two great parties in this country should solve this question without regard to any minor considerations. It does seem to me now that the House bill is still pending in the Senate. True, it has been practically defeated for the time being by a rider providing for the free coinage of silver, but there is no difficulty whatever in our taking up that bill, going over its details, withdrawing the amendment which has been proposed, which defeats the whole bill, and then making provision in that bill for sufficient revenues to carry on the Government.

I am willing to take that bill as it came to us from the House, and if it is not sufficient to supply the necessary revenues, let us add a tax on tea, a tax on coffee, or a tax on anything; for, as I said on a former occasion, I would vote for a tax on anything; I would take the last shirt off the backs of the people of the United States rather than to violate the public faith of the Government.

We have ample resources. Our country is rich beyond expression. Every member of this body knows that a bill can be framed which will supply all the deficiencies produced by enormous appropriations. The condition in which we are now placed ought to teach the Senate a lesson that they can not increase appropriations without providing money to meet them. When appropriation bills come to us from the House of Representatives they are uniformly increased here and large additions are made to all of them in many details. We have no right to do this. We have no right to impose obligations upon the people of the United States unless we also impose upon them the burden of taxation so as to meet those obligations.

It seems to me that it is simple and clear that the Senate, freed from all party bias or party feeling, should take up the bill sent to us by the House of Representatives, a bill which comes from the proper authority to create taxation, and enlarge the sphere of the taxation proposed by that bill, and, if you please, add to it other items. If there are any provisions in that bill which are so obnoxious to a majority of this body that they will not consent to them, let them be stricken out, and if the other House has not taken the proper subjects of taxation, let us take the proper subjects of taxation.

We have only the right to propose amendments to prevent the House of Representatives from passing unreasonable bills or imposing unreasonable taxation. We have no right to originate tax bills, as I have said before. If every Senator here will discard his sense of party obligation and will meet the duty of the hour to provide revenue to meet these various expenses, such a bill can be passed in two or three days. There can be no difficulty about it. The appropriations that we are now making do not commence until the 1st of July. Before the 1st of July, and even before the 1st of June, we could pass legislation which would relieve us from all the danger of deficiencies hereafter.

Sir, that should be done; the Congress of the United States should perform its duty in this respect. I have faith in the President of the United States, although he belongs to a party very different from my own. Although I do not sympathize with him in his political opinions, if I were in his place I would do as I think he will do, namely, refuse to spend one dollar of these sums which are appropriated here if there is not sufficient money in the Treasury for the purpose. The appropriations are merely permissive. They are merely authority to the executive department to use so much money for such and such objects, and the President is not bound to expend the money if he has it not, nor ought we to undertake to issue notes, certificates of deposit, of credit, certifying to our inability to pay the current expenses of the Government.

Sir, we are not so poor as that. The people of the United States were never so rich as they are now; they were never better able to bear taxation; and the public voice of our countrymen will be in favor of paying as we go; not borrowing money to meet ordinary current liabilities, but raising the money by taxation, which may be easily levied in the form of tariff duties.

I, therefore, am perfectly willing to take up that bill as it was referred to the Committee on Finance of this body as it stood before the riders had been put upon it, and then make ample provision to meet all the expenses authorized by the laws of Congress.

Unless you do that, our country will be practically embarrassed, will be practically bankrupt by expending more money than its income, and borrowing money to meet the ordinary current expenses of the Government, a position of shame and degradation which I believe that no country in Europe, not even the feeblest, would allow itself to be placed in. In the Parliament of Great Britain they would not allow a single increase of expenditures without providing some necessary taxation to meet them; and they would know precisely the amount of the expenditure over or under the taxation provided for by the proposed law.

Therefore it seems to me that not only this point of order should be sustained, but from the very fact that the question is presented in this form of no appropriation or no taxation, or the issue of more paper money, more certificates, I think it is far better for us at once to go back to the proper position and make provision for these accruing appropriations. I should myself like it to be understood that the bill which is still pending before the Senate may be taken up, and then that we shall proceed in the ordinary way to make such additional provisions as are necessary, beyond the possibility of doubt, to cover all expenditures.

Why, sir, from the close of the war until the beginning of this Administration there never was an hour or a day or a year when the revenues did not exceed the expenditures. Only at the end of one year during that time did that amount fall to $2,000,000; but during every other year from 1865 to 1893 there was a surplus of revenue, the surplus during that period exceeding the sum of $1,700,000,000, and the lowest during any one year was $2,000,000; and now, at a time when the people of the United States are as flourishing as ever they were, when we have untold riches piling up around us and our country is growing with marvelous rapidity—more rapidly than any country in the world has ever grown before—for us to propose to expend large sums of money, and to issue in a single year certificates of $100,000,000 indebtedness, it seems to me is a shame and a reproach, not so much to those who offer such propositions as to those who have made it necessary to apply such remedies.

I do not wish to say anything more about this matter, but I say I would tear up every appropriation bill pending in this Senate and refuse to appropriate the money rather than issue $100,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness in a single year.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I am somewhat surprised at the opening statement of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], "that this is a most extraordinary provision" which I have offered, "one never before heard of in legislation." The memory of the Senator from Ohio is defective. Less than four years ago, when the party to which the distinguished Senator belongs was in power, during the last year of President Harrison's Administration, the Senator from Ohio, speaking for the great Committee on Finance, of which he is a prominent member, reported to this Senate, and actually obtained its adoption on an appropriation bill, a provision almost identical with the one which I have offered except as to the amount. His proposition provided for the issue of $50,000,000 of short-term bonds, to meet a deficiency in the Treasury under that Administration.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is entirely mistaken. At the very time of which he speaks, at the close of President Harrison's Administration, there was a surplus in the Treasury. The 3 per cent bonds then proposed by the Committee on Finance were not to meet deficiencies. There were no deficiencies up to the close of that Administration. That provision was for the purpose of reducing the rate of interest on bonds which were issued for the protection of the resumption fund, and for nothing else.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, again the Senator is at fault. The then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Foster, a distinguished resident of the State of Ohio, came before a committee of Congress and said that it was necessary for him to have an increased amount of money to meet the current expenses of the Government. On the face of the reports made then, as now, there was an insignificant balance in that year of about $2,000,000; but the fact confronted the Secretary of the Treasury then, as it does now, that after the passage of the McKinley law, the law which the party of the Senator from Ohio threatens the country with again, that law did not furnish enough revenue to pay the current expenses of the Government, and the only way in which a balance could be shown was by the Treasury Department refusing to expend the amount appropriated by Congress in 1891, 1892, 1893, and 1894, to the extent of $296,868,547.41. This amount included the sinking fund; but after deducting the amount due the sinking fund for those years there still remained unexpended balances of about $189,000,000. It was before the Presidential election of 1892, before the country knew that the Democratic party was to succeed, that that shortage occurred. It was not officially presented to Congress, because the executive branch did not believe it was wise to present it to the country pending that Presidential election. The accounts then, as now, did not show the entire indebtedness of the Government. I say there can be no question about this fact. I have before me the statement made by Mr. Foster himself before a committee of the other House, where he appealed to them for aid. The following inquiry was put to him by a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. TURNER:

Taking into consideration all these conditions which you anticipate, what in your judgment would be a fair conjecture of the condition of the Treasury at the end of the next fiscal year?

Mr. GEORGE. What is the date of that?

Mr. GORMAN. I will give it to the Senator. It was February 25, 1893, before the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland. The Democratic party had not touched this question at that time.

This was the reply of Mr. Foster:

Secretary FOSTER. I should say the next fiscal year would show a deficit.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was the next fiscal year, which commenced on the 1st of July, 1893?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, Mr. President; but that was under the McKinley law and under the operations of the Treasury Department when it was in the hands of the Republican party, the President and the Senate being under their control. The Democratic party had nothing whatever to do with it. Here is more of Mr. Foster's testimony:

Mr. TURNER. Can you give an approximate estimate according to all the data accessible to you?

Secretary FOSTER. I will only say this, that if I was to have the management of the Treasury I should insist upon an increase of revenue to the extent of $50,000,000.

Mr. TURNER. In order to meet those conditions which you anticipate?

Secretary FOSTER. Not only those conditions, but the gold conditions as well.

* * * * * * *

Secretary Foster was asked by Mr. Wilson:

Did I understand you to express a general opinion awhile ago that in addition to the present sources of revenue the revenues of the Treasury Department ought to be advanced $50,000,000 more a year?

Secretary FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Would you make that for one year or a permanent increase of revenue?

Secretary FOSTER. As things are going now a permanent revenue, for two reasons. I would increase the gold reserve at least $25,000,000 if I had the money to do it with.

Mr. TURNER. But your answer just now seemed to contemplate an annual increase?

Secretary FOSTER. I think an annual increase of $50,000,000 would make the Treasury easy, and if I were going to manage it I would want to have it.

The response to that request from the then Secretary of the Treasury was the action of the Senator from Ohio placing upon an appropriation bill, as I now propose to do, $50,000,000—to do what? To pay the current expenses of the Treasury; to pay amounts which the Government owed, and only incidentally to protect the gold reserve. Mr. President, there can be no question as to this fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. What Secretary Foster said was absolutely true.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. But it was not to meet deficiencies in the current expenses; it was to maintain the sinking fund and also to maintain the fund for the resumption of specie payment. The sinking fund is expressly stipulated for, and the $50,000,000 alluded to by Mr. Foster, as shown over and over again by his statement, is to cover the sinking fund. The sinking fund had fallen until the surplus, in July following the incoming of Mr. Cleveland, was still in excess of our expenditures $2,000,000, but the sinking-fund provision had not been complied with.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the sinking fund had never been taken into account at all by Mr. Foster in this matter. He paid on the sinking fund in 1891 $44,006,111.37, and in 1892 he paid $37,574,179.98.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. GORMAN. Leaving a balance of $5,071,190 in 1891 and $11,488,934.34 in 1892; and from that day to this there has been scarcely anything paid upon the sinking fund. It was not the sinking fund for which he wanted the money, but he wanted the money to pay the appropriations which had been made by Congress.

I will insert at this point the following table as to the sinking fund:

SINKING FUND.

Fiscal year—	Annual requirement.	Annual application.	Balance.
1885	$47,393,186.83	$45,604,035.43	$1,789,151.40
1886	44,872,710.64	44,551,043.36	321,667.28

1895	49,571,338.15	1,136,366.43	48,434,971.72

* In excess of requirement.

Mr. President, during the Administration of President Harrison we appropriated nearly $300,000,000 more than the whole revenues of the Government derived from the McKinley law. The fact remains that the deficit goes back, and during President Harrison's Administration your McKinley law cut the revenue down $50,000,000 a year, and your appropriations increased nearly $75,000,000. The actual payments by the Treasury during 1891, 1892, 1893, and 1894 were in excess of receipts $119,219,213.72.

Mr. SHERMAN. Still we had a surplus of $2,341,000 on the 1st of July, 1893.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, and you left unpaid when President Harrison went out of office $189,000,000, the greater part of which had to be paid under this Administration.

I desire to be entirely fair about this matter, and I will say that, following the advice of the Senator from Ohio, Secretary Foster and his predecessor and Secretary Carlisle have acted as the Senator from Ohio says they ought to act, as patriotic men, and when they have not money to pay the debts of the Government they should refuse to expend money appropriated. That is what has been done under your Administration, and it is precisely what is occurring under this Administration.

Now, in order to meet the obligations of the Government and no longer to make its creditors wait for their money, I propose that they shall have 3 per cent certificates, so that they may pay current expenses and avoid in future, if we can, the use of long-term bonds bearing a high rate of interest.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have before me a table taken from the last statement of Secretary Carlisle, which shows that in 1893 the receipts of the Government were $385,000,000—I leave the odd numbers out—and the total expenditures were $383,000,000, leaving a surplus on hand of $2,341,000, which goes to show that at that time the expenditures of the Government were paid and there was still left this balance of $2,000,000 after the McKinley law went into operation.

Mr. GORMAN. To what year does the Senator refer?

Mr. SHERMAN. The year 1893.

Mr. GORMAN. Ending in 1893?

Mr. SHERMAN. The fiscal year ending June 30.

Mr. GORMAN. June 30, 1893.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes. At the end of that year, which was four months after Mr. Cleveland became President of the United States, the excess of revenue over expenditures was $2,341,674.

Mr. GORMAN. That was a book account.

Mr. SHERMAN. Another remark which the Senator makes is that this amount did not cover outstanding liabilities. It did more than cover all outstanding liabilities, for in the next year, when the Senator says they paid $100,000,000, the expenditures were only $356,000,000.

Mr. GORMAN. At the end of the year 1893, to which the Senator refers, in which he says there was a balance of $3,000,000——

Mr. SHERMAN. Two million dollars.

Mr. GORMAN. There was due the sinking fund that year $42,003,942.36. In addition to the great amounts which had been appropriated by Congress during the whole of Mr. Harrison's Administration, besides the sinking fund, there were unadjusted claims against the Treasury which, if they had been paid, would have required nearly $200,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that in the month of October, 1892, there was a deficiency. The expenditures for that month were more than the revenues. The same was true of the months of November, December, and February following. For the four months preceding the 1st day of March, 1893, there was a deficiency of over $4,000,000, commencing with October.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words, the moment Mr. Cleveland was elected the deficiencies commenced.

Mr. TELLER. I would suggest that they began before Mr. Cleveland was elected. They began in October, and he was not elected until November.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, let us see what further Mr. Foster says about this matter. Mr. Cleveland was not then President. This was in February, 1893. Mr. Wilson asked Mr. Foster this question:

Mr. WILSON. Did I understand you to express a general opinion awhile ago that in addition to the present sources of revenue the revenues of the Treasury Department ought to be advanced $50,000,000 more a year?

This was under the McKinley law.

Secretary FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Would you make that for one year or a permanent increase of revenue?

Secretary FOSTER. As things are going now a permanent revenue, for two reasons. I would increase the gold reserve at least $25,000,000 if I had the money to do it with.

Mr. TURNER. But your answer just now seemed to contemplate an annual increase?

Secretary FOSTER. I think an annual increase of $50,000,000 would make the Treasury easy, and if I were going to manage it I would want to have it.

There is no sinking fund referred to here, and yet Secretary Foster wanted $50,000,000 of revenue more than he had; and the Senator from Ohio and the Republican Finance Committee of this body and this Senate voted to give $50,000,000 of short-term low-interest bonds to meet this deficiency, because it was impossible at that time to pass a revenue bill increasing taxation.

The Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and all those in charge on the other side of the Chamber held at that time that it was improper, that is to say, it was outside of the intention of Congress in the passage of the act of 1875, authorizing the issue of those bonds to keep up the gold reserve, to use the proceeds of the bonds for current expenses of the Treasury. Everybody on both sides of the Chamber desired to avoid that, and it was because of the shortage of revenue, stated by the Secretary of the Treasury at $50,000,000, and to prevent the use of the proceeds of the sales of 4 and 5 percents, that we placed that provision in the bill.

I append a table showing the unexpended balances of appropriations, exclusive of the sinking fund and Indian trust funds, from 1885 to 1895, inclusive:

Now it comes, in the course of time, when the Democratic party is in power; and I frankly admit, as I have before, and I think as the Senator from Ohio and those who agree with him on the other side should admit, that neither the McKinley Act nor the bill we recently passed produces revenue enough to meet the expenditures that Congress has directed the Executive to make. Both sides should admit these stubborn facts. It is the manly way, in my judgment, to meet this case. It is a deficiency. It occurred with you because you placed your rates so high as to prohibit the importation to a great extent. It has occurred with us because we have placed the duties possibly too low or placed too many items upon the free list. It has occurred with us because of a most extraordinary decision of the Supreme Court of the United States eliminating from our revenues from thirty to fifty million dollars that would have accrued under the income-tax provisions.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GORMAN. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Maryland charges a deficiency of revenue to the McKinley Act, and yet the Democratic party, the moment it came into power, reduced largely the revenue derived from imported goods by an act I believe they would be very glad to get rid of.

Mr. MILLS. Does the Senator from Ohio mean it reduced revenue or reduced duties?

Mr. SHERMAN. If we were responsible for passing a bill which left a surplus of only $2,000,000 a year, they have passed a bill which creates a deficiency of from thirty to fifty million dollars a year. That is the difference.

Mr. GORMAN. I am trying to deal with this question from the present condition. Therefore I was amazed at the distinguished Senator from Ohio opposing any proposition looking to the relief of the Treasury. The Republican party, as I have tried to show, by the McKinley Act and by the appropriations made when you were in power in another branch of Congress, aided to bring about this condition of affairs. The present law is inefficient, I admit. We want to meet the condition and apply the remedy. The Senator from Ohio talks of the McKinley Act and what it produced. During the first twelve months of its existence it produced $371,932,536.81. The present act during the last twelve months produced $320,379,654.66. I submit a statement giving the details of the receipts under the two acts for certain specified periods:

Receipts under the McKinley and the Wilson tariff acts.

Under the McKinley tariff act:
During the first twelve months		$371,932,536.81
During the last twelve months		316,661,099.01
Under the Wilson tariff act:
Receipts from Sept. 1, 1894, to June 30, 1895	$237,038,627.57
Receipts for July, 1895	29,069,697.89
Receipts for August, 1895	28,952,696.70
Total during first twelve months		295,061,022.16
Receipts during last twelve months		320,379,654.66

If there had not been stricken from the Wilson Act the provision known as the income-tax law, that act with its present rates would have produced more revenue than the McKinley Act. No man will question that who will look at the Treasury figures. That was a matter which Congress could not control. But now the condition confronts us. What shall we do? You will have appropriated at the present Congress, when we shall have finished, $520,000,000 for the next fiscal year, besides your contracts of from seventy to eighty million dollars. I have not the exact figures now, because the bills are in process of passage through both Houses of Congress, but it is safe to say the direct appropriations and the obligations will be $600,000,000.

What is to be done? Can you by any method of taxation meet that deficit? It seems impossible. What do you desire to do? To spend the money that is in the Treasury which came from the sale of 4 and 5 per cent bonds? That will follow unless the executive branch of the Government will go to a greater extent than ever heretofore by simply thwarting the will of Congress and refusing to expend the money you have directed them to spend.

I propose by the amendment not to use a dollar of 4 per cent or 5 per cent long-term bonds, but to issue short-term certificates in 20s, 50s, and 100s, and to put them on sale at post-offices designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, or to pay them out for the current expenses. They would not be legal tenders, but any creditor of the Government would be glad to have them. The taxpayers would be delighted, in my judgment, to see such short-term certificates issued, redeemable in one or two or three years, as Congress may provide, so that when we shall have revenue enough they may be taken up and not remain a mortgage upon their industries for the next twenty years.

The Senator from Ohio says meet it by taxation. I once before suggested to the Senator and to the Senate that the bill that came here to increase taxation satisfied nobody; that it never was intended to pass. The authors of it, its sponsors and supporters, knew that it never could become a law.

Mr. GRAY. It would not have produced the revenue if it had become a law.

Mr. GORMAN. And if it had become a law I do not believe it would have produced revenue enough to meet the requirements of the Government.

The Senator from Ohio and his friends on the other side of the Chamber know perfectly well that a bill which comes here to increase the prohibitory rates in the McKinley Act never can have the support of any Democrat. It can not now, but I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that if he and his party are in earnest to relieve the Treasury let us agree to do three things. Let us repeal that provision of the present revenue law which piles up claims on account of alcohol to the extent of a million or a million and a half a month; that nobody defends; that got in by an accident by way of an amendment offered from the other side of the Chamber that is incapable of being executed. It only embarrasses the Government. Let us save the Government $15,000,000 a year by repealing that provision. Then let us put a tax upon tea, which everybody should agree to; a revenue duty of 10 cents a pound, which will bring in $20,000,000 a year without adding to taxation a single cent. Let us place a duty upon coffee, which will not increase the cost to the consumer anything. With those three items we would give the Treasury from thirty to forty million dollars a year and save these claims of twelve or fifteen million dollars a year.

Now, if the Senator from Ohio will agree to a nonpartisan proposition as this is, one that does not trench upon the Republican idea of high protection or interfere with the Democratic idea of low taxation, we can unite, in my judgment, or at least I will be glad to unite with him to relieve the Treasury. If you will do that, with this provision which I propose, to be used only in case of emergency, used as the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report says he ought to have the power in case of emergency, the Treasury will be in condition to meet any ordinary demands.

Look at it, Mr. President. From the day the McKinley Act went into operation and the bill known as the Sherman silver law was put upon the statute book down to this gold has ceased coming in from customs duties, the revenues have run down, the expenditures have increased, and whenever the balances have been at a low ebb there have been raids on the Treasury for its gold, and more bonds have been sold. When the Treasury has been strong, as it is now, the gold reserve is apparently safe, and there is no demand for the redemption of greenbacks.

I call upon Senators on the other side of the Chamber to pass some act for the relief of the Treasury. The distinguished Senator from Ohio, if we are to believe newspaper reports, is soon to be the great premier leading another Administration which is pledged to prohibitory duties, which is pledged to protection until it excludes; whose party in this Congress seems to be pledged to vote all the money that can be put into appropriation bills, a party of high protection, of extravagance in expenditures. I call upon Senators on the other side to make some effective provision that will make it unnecessary to sell more long-term bonds.

Mr. President, I have no more interest in these matters than any other Senator upon this floor; but I have had only one view of my duty, and that is to vote for sufficient revenue to pay the current expenses of the Government. When we have found a deficiency in that regard I have advocated a reduction in the expenditures. I have been unalterably opposed to the issue of bonds to pay the current expenses in time of peace. I have labored to the best of my ability in that direction. But so far as cutting down expenditures is concerned I admit I have failed.

The appropriations stand to-day greater than ever before. If the present Congress adjourns without making provision for the Treasury, whether by taxation or by some such provision, the responsibility must be with those who control legislation in both branches of Congress. If you attempt to escape by telling us that we voted against the revenue bill as it came here from the House of Representatives, I say, "Yes; we voted against it." We are prepared to go to the country upon that vote. It is a bill which does not satisfy Senators on the other side of the Chamber. The distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has rendered the country a service by the manly speech he made exposing the bill. It is unfair in its structure. It would not produce revenue. It was drawn to antagonize the Democratic thought, and I am delighted to know that it antagonized the liberal Republicans who want fair dealing in the matter of taxation.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I like the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] with a slight modification. We have in the Treasury impounded something over $100,000,000 of current money, mostly greenbacks, which is doing the world no good. It is a surplus. The country is suffering for the use of that surplus, and I wish the Senator from Maryland would modify his amendment so as to issue $100,000,000 of greenbacks to take the place of the $100,000,000 of greenbacks that are impounded, unlawfully as I contend. That would do something toward relieving the country. But I am opposed to borrowing money and paying interest on it for the purpose of producing contraction and hard times.

I am totally at variance with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] in his assertion that this country is rich and better able to pay taxes than ever before. Never in the history of this country has it been so difficult for the people to pay taxes as it is to-day. Never in the history of this country were bankruptcies increasing as they are now. Read Bradstreet's report for the last three months, and it presents an alarming situation as to bankrupts, suicides, insane people, criminals, tramps—everything indicating distress in the country.

That we are on the road to bankruptcy is to me as clear as day. We are traveling the road that Turkey traveled before she reached the goal of insolvency. We are in the tracks of Spain while she was spending her patrimony. We are following the example of bankrupt Italy. We are agreeing to deliver gold when we have not the gold to deliver. We are borrowing gold to pay interest on obligations as those nations did. It will be but a short time before we are in the same situation. We are issuing bonds not, they say, to carry on the Government, not for the purpose of raising revenue, but there are two things to be accomplished by the issuance of bonds. One is more debt, more taxation, more inability to pay. The other is less circulation, more hoarding. There ought to be some way to get that money out of the Treasury. I know of no way except by liberal appropriations. Now is the time to pass your appropriation bills to relieve the country, and put $150,000,000 of idle money into circulation. We have no other way of doing it.

But to those who think that we are not on the road to bankruptcy let me point to the situation. Our fixed annual foreign obligations are estimated, at the lowest figure, at $400,000,000. We are not selling enough of our commodities all told to pay for what we buy abroad. We did not do so during the last year. How are we to meet the fixed obligations annually? By more debt. The Government is borrowing money to pay its portion of these obligations and to supply gold to the gold gamblers. Private corporations are borrowing money. We are piling up this debt annually, and no man points out any legislation whereby the people of the United States can get out of this difficulty. The Senator from Ohio says more taxation. Will putting more money in the Treasury relieve us of our foreign obligations? On the contrary, it will make it more difficult to pay existing obligations, because there will be less money in circulation with which to do business. If you retire the greenbacks and Treasury notes as suggested, if you buy them with interest-bearing bonds, it will increase your gold obligations, if you pay in gold. It will not diminish them. If the gold standard is to be maintained there will be $15,000,000 more a year. The Government has no means of obtaining gold unless it legislates to send gold to a premium, for whenever the Government of the United States demands gold in payment of taxes instead of other money, gold will be at a premium. When you demand gold for customs duties gold will go to a premium. When you did it once before you sent gold to a premium the very next day. You will do it now if you make the discrimination. Everybody knows it.

The Government has no means of getting gold except by borrowing it. If the Government is relieved of redeeming greenbacks by converting them into gold obligations, into bonds, it will have to borrow money to pay interest on the gold obligations which are out. Then how are individuals to get gold if they can not get it from the Treasury? How are the corporations, who have unfortunately entered into gold obligations, to get gold? They have foreign obligations. The Government of the United States has none. But they have entered into those obligations. The gold can not be got out of the Treasury. Individuals must raise it, and they will have to pay a premium on it. The only way to maintain the gold standard is to refuse to pay. Bankruptcy is the only way to maintain it, for whenever you struggle to get it you will send gold to a premium.

When the Government of the United States ceases to sell bonds, when it can do that no longer, gold will go to a premium. If it shifts the responsibility on the people, if it sells no more bonds, it will be compelled to demand its revenue in gold, and gold will go to a premium. If there is no means of going to the Treasury for gold, if the credit of the Government can no longer be pledged for that, individuals who owe gold must have it. How will they get it? By buying it at a premium or they will repudiate their obligations. The only way that the gold standard can be maintained is by universal bankruptcy. You must refuse to pay. When the Government ceases to sell bonds to buy gold, and if citizens buy gold to pay gold obligations, gold will then go to a premium. The gold standard means bankruptcy. Bankruptcy is the only way it can be maintained. The struggle to keep up the gold standard will send gold to a premium. If that struggle ceases, then we have bankruptcy. That is what the gold standard means. That is what it meant in all other countries. That is what it meant in Italy, in Spain, in Austria, in the Turkish Empire. Gold standard means repudiation. There is no doubt about that, and here we are higgling about getting the money out of the Treasury in order to give the people some relief.

If my friend the Senator from Maryland would put out greenbacks to take the place of the greenbacks retired, so as to let business revive in this country, he would do a great deal of good. I hope he will modify his amendment to that extent. But I wish to reiterate my remark that the gold standard can not be maintained in this country without bankruptcy, for the attempt to get gold to pay our gold obligations will send gold to a premium. There is not gold enough to go around. It is impossible for us to get it. Where is it? It is pooled.

They say there are four thousand million dollars of gold in the world; that seven or eight hundred million dollars of it are in Asia; that $500,000,000 of it are in Russia's war chest; that $150,000,000 of it are in the reserves of Austria, and that $900,000,000 of it are in France. You can not get it from France, because France takes care of her people by paying in silver as well as gold, and gives them an ample circulating medium to do business. She secures the balance of trade and accumulates gold. You can not get it from her for that reason and for another. If you attempt to export it, France will pay in silver. You can not get it away from Germany, because she will pay in silver. You can not get it from England, because she is paying a bounty for gold.

Where, then, will you get the gold? They say there is $600,000,000 in this country. There is probably $400,000,000. The $100,000,000 you have in the Treasury is the result of your borrowing, and it will stay there until somebody wants it. We are the only country in the world that borrows money for the benefit of all the world, for the benefit of gold gamblers. We do that and pay interest on borrowed money. To maintain the gold standard for a debtor nation, in debt as we are now and going in debt year after year at a geometrical ratio, is impossible.

The fact that the money of the world is pooled is recognized by all. We daily see in the newspapers threats. They say if William McKinley will not declare himself for the gold standard they will make times tight; that the banks will make times tight during the Republican convention. They will break some more of our fellows. They talk about making times hard and easy with as much flippancy as anybody ever did. It is common talk that they will squeeze the community. They have the gold pooled, and they laugh and talk about the calamity to the country. Your real estate in this country is not worth 33½ cents on the dollar at sheriff's sale of what it was worth thirty years ago. Your farmers are living on closer rations, scrimping and eking out a miserable existence as never before in this country. Business is paralyzed. The country is full of tramps, and the money is being hoarded in the Treasury, and there is objection to making appropriations to get out the money and let the people have the use of it.

I am for appropriations. I am for this appropriation, and much perhaps for the same purpose, to get the money out of the Treasury; but if my friend the Senator from Maryland will rise to the occasion and say that the people of this country shall not be strangled in their business, but we will put out $100,000,000 of greenbacks to take the place of the greenbacks unlawfully impounded, we will relieve the country. It would not be so aggravating if there were any law for impounding the greenbacks. There is no law for it. It is done without authority of law. We owe no gold obligations except the gold certificates for which the money is in the Treasury. Every dollar the Government owes is payable in either gold or silver. Still the present Administration and the Republican party declare that silver shall not be used as money. They say it is not good money for the creditor, that he shall have his option.

The silver in the Treasury is doing no duty, it is paying no debts. It might as well be lead; it might as well be iron; it is not money. You have $1,100,000,000 of paper and silver out and no gold with which to redeem it except to rely upon the precarious business of borrowing it from foreigners, and loading up the debt. You will not pay out the silver that is in the Treasury. Let the Administration declare that the silver in the Treasury is money by law and it will be paid for all coming obligations; that the silver bullion will be coined that is there. Then $50,000,000 will be covered into the Treasury. Let them declare that they will comply with the law and there will be no more raids on the Treasury. Then the gold gamblers would not come to us any more than they go to France or Germany. They would not come to the Treasury now if the Administration did not connive with them and give to them the option reserved by the Government for the benefit of the people.

Never in all history was a people ever so robbed and wronged as by the raids on the Treasury for gold when there was an ample supply of silver, which these raiders would not take and which, if they would take, there would be no disturbance at all. If the Treasury Department had executed the laws there would not have been a word said and the country would now be prosperous. But the Administration says that the silver in the Treasury is not fit to pay debts with, that the only basis we have for our circulation is what gold we can borrow, and it continues to borrow money for the benefit of gold gamblers and to tie up the money in the Treasury and keep it from the people. While this policy is pursued times will grow worse and worse. It seems to me that it is the object of the ruling classes to make times worse and worse, the people poorer and poorer, hoping that the time will soon arrive when resistance to tyranny will be impossible and the people will be reduced to serfdom. I do not believe that that can be done in this country. It has been done in other countries, I know, but the transition from prosperity to degradation is too rapid, and I believe the people of our country will arouse themselves before it is too late.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the Senate?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I withdraw the appeal from the decision of the Chair and move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appeal is withdrawn. It is moved by the Senator from Texas to lay the pending amendment on the table.

Mr. MILLS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE].

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. PROCTOR's name was called). I have been requested by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] to announce that he is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

While I am on my feet I will announce a pair between the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], both of whom are absent from the city.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH. So would he.

Mr. QUAY. Then I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. I am not advised as to how he would vote. I withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and vote "yea."

Mr. TURPIE. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. TURPIE. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. SHOUP. I observe that the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] is present, and I wish to record my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WETMORE (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OEFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. WETMORE. I withdraw my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired generally with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] that we might exchange our pairs, in which case I can let my vote stand and he will have an opportunity to vote.

Mr. WETMORE. Very well. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCBRIDE. My colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] is absent from the Chamber on account of illness in his family. He is paired, as has been announced, with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—42.

Allen,	Chandler,	Lodge,	Sewell,
Allison,	Chilton,	McBride,	Sherman,
Baker,	Clark,	Mills,	Shoup,
Bate,	Cullom,	Nelson,	Squire,

Davis,	Irby,	Pritchard,	Wolcott.
Elkins,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,
Gear,	McMillan,	Roach,

So the amendment was laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. I voted to lay the last amendment upon the table for the reason that I am opposed to increasing our interest-bearing debt. But inasmuch as nearly three years ago we stopped the coinage of silver, and also stopped the manufacture of all new money by that legislative action, and therefore, by reason of an increase in population and business, we are constantly having a relative contraction of currency, I think we ought to make the debt created by this bill payable in Treasury notes. It would have two good effects. One is that it would certainly effect the payment of the debt, and the other is that it would give the people that much more currency. I move that the amendment I offer be inserted at the proper place. I have not a copy of the bill by me, but let the amendment follow the amount of money appropriated, whatever it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill:

Payable in Treasury notes to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time as they shall be required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. I do not care to discuss the amendment at all, and so far as I know no friend of the amendment does propose to discuss it, but I am anxious to see how the Senate feels about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires of the Senator from Kansas to what particular appropriation in the bill he desires his amendment applied?

Mr. PEFFER. Where the Senator from Maryland proposed to insert his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On page 16, at the end of the bill, the clause reads as follows:

For one-half of said sum, to be supplied by the United States, $3,425.

Mr. PEFFER. No; there is a specific sum appropriated somewhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last appropriation in the bill, the Senator will notice, is a specific sum of one-half of $3,425.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the amendment be read again.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

Payable in Treasury notes to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time as they shall be required.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire the attention of the Senator from Kansas a moment. I suggest the propriety of modifying the amendment so that it shall read "that all appropriations made under this bill" or "by virtue of this bill" shall be payable in legal-tender notes.

Mr. PEFFER. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be read.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that the amendment be inserted at the end of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Let it be inserted at the end of the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. PEFFER. That will do. I thought there was a specific sum appropriated by the bill, and I desired my amendment to be inserted immediately after the amount stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KYLE. I have not heard the amendment read yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. Add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That all appropriations made in this bill shall be payable in Treasury notes to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time as they shall be required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll; and Mr. ALDRICH answered "nay."

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I call for the reading of the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is too late.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Indiana that a name has been called and a response has been recorded at the desk.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to hear the proposition read which we are to vote upon.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the roll call will be discontinued. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all appropriations made in this bill shall be payable in Treasury notes to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time as shall be required.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. The question is not debatable pending the roll call. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will state his point of order.

Mr. ALLEN. The roll call had been begun and one response had been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the roll call was discontinued.

Mr. ALLEN. By unanimous consent the roll call was discontinued at the request of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] to permit the reading of the amendment, and no further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is mistaken. The Chair understood the Senator from Indiana to request that the question be divided. It is in order to call for a division of the question, if the Senator from Indiana desires to do so. Will the Senator from Indiana indicate how he desires to have the amendment divided?

Mr. TURPIE. I did not ask for a division of the question; I simply asked to have the amendment read.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I desire to make the point of order that the amendment is new legislation.

Mr. PEFFER. I submit that it is too late to raise a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the point of order is made too late. The roll call will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. I do not know how he would vote if present.

Mr. BURROWS. I think my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I will withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. HANSBROUGH'S name was called). I again announce the pair of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I make the same transfer of my pair as before and vote "nay."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. PROCTOR'S name was called). I desire to again announce the pair of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER (after having voted in the negative). I have already voted. I desire to announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 43; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted after line 9, on page 14, to come in after the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 9, on page 14, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Board of Ordnance and Fortification to procure and test one controllable torpedo of the type patented by Lieut. Nicholas J. Halpine, United States Navy, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to contract with the licensee of said Halpine patent for said torpedo, without advertising, which shall be constructed according to the plans and specifications prepared by said N. J. Halpine, and the details of said plans may be modified, changed, and improved, in the discretion of the contractors.

The sum of $9,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purchase and experiments of the said Halpine torpedo.

Upon the completion and tests of the Halpine torpedo herein referred to, a report shall be made to Congress by the Secretary of War at the next session of Congress after said tests, in which shall be stated in detail the performance of this type of torpedo in maneuvering and firing and the merits and defects of the same and the price for which the type can be furnished in large numbers, and time of delivery of the same, together with the price for which the United States patents may be obtained.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this proposed amendment has received the approval of any committee?

Mr. LODGE. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLEN. Only the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. LODGE. It was referred to that committee.

Mr. ALLEN. I make the point of order on the amendment that it has not been reported by any committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska makes the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only desire to say a few words in regard to the point of order. I wish to express my surprise, after so many hundreds of thousands of dollars have been appropriated for so many other torpedoes, that this amendment, which only carries an appropriation of $9,500, should have been rejected by the committee.

Of course, if the point of order is made, I do not propose to discuss the merits of the case, although I will state to the Senate that I feel perfectly able to do so. I do not, however, desire to delay the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to hear from the Senator on the point of order as to whether the amendment has been reported by a committee or is otherwise in order.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Chair will permit me to interrupt him, I would state that, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, I will withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn; and the question is on the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Then, Mr. President, as the Senator from Nebraska has been kind enough to withdraw the point of order, I will say a few words in regard to the amendment, which is framed in precisely the same manner as the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations in regard to the Howell carriage, which is in the usual form.

The amendment relates to a controllable torpedo, a most important device, if it can be obtained, for modern warfare, and it calls for a very small appropriation. The committee have appropriated $50,000 for the Howell gun carriage; $20,000 for the A. H. Emery gun carriage, and $65,000 for the test of the Gatling gun carriage; and the amount asked for in the amendment as to the Halpine torpedo is but $9,500. Some of those for which the committee has appropriated these large sums for experiment have hardly got beyond the stage of drawings—the specifications, I think, are hardly made in some cases—whilst the Halpine torpedo has been passed upon favorably by nine foreign boards, and has been already bought by one foreign Government.

I have no desire even to put the Government to the expense of this extra $9,500 if the committee will admit it by name in the general appropriation for torpedoes. I should be entirely content with that; but I think that device deserves an examination by the Government, and there is no other way of securing that examination that I am aware of except by a provision in this bill. If the Senator in charge of the bill objects to making the additional appropriation, I suggest that he allow the Halpine torpedo to come in under the general head in line 16. If he would agree to insert, after the word "torpedoes," the words "including the Halpine torpedo," that would cover the matter entirely.

Mr. HAWLEY. On what page is that?

Mr. LODGE. That is on page 9. I offered the amendment making an appropriation, but if the Senator in charge of the bill will simply admit in the general clause, after the words "explosives, torpedoes," the words "including the Halpine torpedo," that will be satisfactory. I simply want to secure for that device a proper examination, which, as I said, has been tried successfully by nine foreign boards and has been bought already in its imperfect form by the Government of Brazil; and we are putting in the bill $150,000 for schemes which have hardly got beyond paper, and yet will not allow $9,500 to go into the bill for this torpedo, which has been tested by practical experiments.

Mr. PERKINS. Lieutenant Halpine appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and made a lengthy and exhaustive statement. The committee were favorably impressed with his device. While we had some technical knowledge of electricity, and propelling vessels through the water, yet we thought that the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, which has been created by an act of Congress, far more competent to pass upon the utility of his device than a committee of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Then, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. PERKINS. In one moment; but I will anticipate, I think, what the Senator is about to say.

We were favorably impressed with Mr. Halpine, who is an educated gentleman, educated by the Government at our naval school, who, with many others, appeared before the committee, and they saw only their own inventions through their own glasses, being color-blind as to the merits of all other inventions. But the committee, as I said, though favorably impressed with that and other devices which were presented to them, thought it proper to leave it to the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, which, as is well known by the Senator from Massachusetts, is composed of the Commanding General of the Army, the Chief of Engineers, an artillery officer, the Chief of Ordnance, and a distinguished civilian. The committee therefore recommended the increase of the appropriation that was placed at the disposal of this Board from $100,000 to $150,000; and the Senate to-day has concurred in the recommendation that the amount be increased $50,000. Lieutenant Halpine will appear before that Board, I assume, in due time, will there present his device to them, and if the Board believe it superior to any other device of the kind they will undoubtedly adopt it; but if we place in this bill the name of Lieutenant Halpine, we should also place in it the names of a dozen or more others who desire their inventions to be tried.

Mr. LODGE. That is precisely the point I was going to make. The committee have picked out certain persons and made appropriations for certain devices. If you will refer all these devices to the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, strike out these amendments for specific inventions that you have now put in, I should not have one word to say; that would be all right; but you pick out three inventions and you make appropriations for them, and then you exclude another. Let them all go to the Board or else direct the Board as to those which it is desired to have examined.

Mr. PERKINS. The three cases referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts are entirely different from this. As to one of them especially, that for the creation of a gun carriage, the inventor has rendered valuable service to this Government in years past; and perhaps through the testimony he gave to our committee or the committees that preceded it in other Congresses we have been enabled to save the Government a large amount of money.

The Howell gun carriage was recommended to the committee by the Chief of Ordnance, with the statement that the Board would like to try it; that they believed it had intrinsic merit; and that if provision was made in the bill they believed that they could build one carriage, and that satisfactory results would inure from that. But this is simply an invention for propelling a torpedo through the water with a man astride of it. When I asked the inventor where the man would be in an engagement he said, "Humanity does not shoot a man in the water." [Laughter.] Well, perhaps not; but experience in naval warfare refutes that statement.

I do not, however, wish to go into the details about this matter. We believe this invention has merit, and the Board of Ordnance and Fortification have the money to purchase a dozen of these devices if they desire to do so; and if the inventor can show them that it has the merit he claims for it they will undoubtedly accept the invention of the friend of my friend from Massachusetts, and it will become a part of the armament of this great Government.

Mr. LODGE. I only desire to say that the gentleman in question is not my constituent. He is the son of Halpine, who was well known as a writer some years ago under the name of Miles O'Reilly. He has been a naval officer, was educated at Annapolis, and retired on account of the failure of his health. He showed me his invention, which does not require a man to ride astride of it, as the Senator from California stated.

Mr. PERKINS. Pardon me one moment. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, after the Senator from Massachusetts has traced the genealogy of this distinguished gentleman, will agree to admit the provision in the bill without any appropriation I shall not object that it be recommended for trial.

Mr. LODGE. Say "including the Halpine torpedo." That is all I desire to insert. I ask for no appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his amendment and submits another amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 16, on page 9, after the word "torpedoes," it is proposed to insert "including the Halpine torpedo."

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] in charge of the bill refers to me, I think I ought to say that the committee expended as much time as they could expend upon this young lieutenant of the Navy, and we all agree that he had a most ingenious invention. Of course we knew very little about its effectiveness. We also inquired, as I remember, of the Chief of Ordnance respecting it, but he had not made such investigation as would enable him to express an opinion regarding it. I have no doubt that the Board of Ordnance and Fortification will test this torpedo. If they find on looking it over that it has merit, and certainly if it be true, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, that nine foreign governments have already tested and adopted it, I should think that our Board of Ordnance and Fortification would be derelict in their duty if they did not also test it. I should think, however, that this young officer, if he has such a valuable invention, could himself afford, or in some way get his friends to assist him in making a torpedo, so that it could be tested without expense to the Government. But I have no objection, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts, to incorporating the amendment in the way he now proposes.

I want, however, to say one thing as to the criticism made by the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to three special appropriations which are made in this bill. The first is for Commodore Howell, who has invented a disappearing carriage, which he regards as of high value, and the Chief of Ordnance stated that he also regarded it as valuable, and therefore expressed a wish that it should be tested.

The next provision is one for Mr. Emery, a well-known inventor of the highest attainments, who had secured some two or three years ago an appropriation for $110,000 for the erection of a 12-inch disappearing carriage. That appropriation was made under such conditions and limitations as made it impossible for him to proceed with the construction of that carriage.

The other is an appropriation providing for the test of a gun that is proposed by Mr. Gatling, who is a well-known inventor, and who has invented many valuable guns for the Army.

Mr. PERKINS. A gun and a mortar.

Mr. ALLISON. A gun and a mortar. Our present guns and mortars are being made of steel. Mr. Gatling believes that he can make a gun of a composite character which, as to its value, will far exceed those now being manufactured, and which can be made at a much less expenditure.

Mr. PERKINS. One-half, he says.

Mr. ALLISON. At one-half the present expenditure.

These three appropriations are made for the purpose of testing the chief element in the cost of our fortifications. Two or three years ago we made appropriations for what were known as lifts to elevate high-power guns, at an expense of $225,000 each, the gun itself only costing $60,000 or $70,000. Then, there have been a number of people who have been engaged in the invention of disappearing carriages. The officers of the Ordnance Department themselves have made and tested a disappearing carriage which was satisfactory to them.

Senators will remember that we have by this bill entered actively upon an expenditure for our fortifications which will, if carried out as here proposed and as proposed by the ordnance and engineer officers, cost more than $100,000,000, and of this cost guns and gun carriages and the appliances of those guns and gun carriages will amount to fifty or sixty million dollars. Therefore it was that the committee believed that it was wise to make these expenditures specifically, especially as the expenditures were to be made for the purpose of testing gun carriages and guns of the most distinguished inventors of our country, who have hitherto demonstrated their ability as inventors by making valuable inventions.

So I trust the Senator from Massachusetts will not think that we have inserted these amendments in the bill merely for the purpose of pleasing this, that, or the other inventor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no objection in the world to the appropriations for the specific inventors named by the Senator from Iowa. They have received a great deal of money from the Government already, and one of them has invented a torpedo which the Government uses, and which is a very unsuccessful torpedo indeed. I have no objection to the appropriation of money for experiments in all these important implements of war; I think they are right; but here are men named in this bill, whom the Senator from Iowa has just described, who have had thousands and thousands of dollars; and when a young man comes along with an invention, which seems a reasonable one, in the most important implement of war now being considered, the controllable torpedo, it is asked why he does not pay his own expenses for its construction. I can say to the Senator from Iowa that the small savings which that young man has been able to make from the pay of a naval officer have been entirely expended by him in perfecting his invention so far as it has gone.

I did not mean to say that his invention had been adopted by foreign governments. I say it has been passed by nine different foreign boards, passed with approbation, and also the torpedo invented by him, in its first and most imperfect form, has been purchased by the Government of Brazil. It is supposed to be a controllable torpedo, not ridden by a man in the water, as the Senator from California described it, but controlled by electricity. I am not an expert in those matters: I have not the faintest idea whether it is a device that is likely to succeed or not; but I do think that there is no reason why we should not spend a few thousand dollars in experimenting with this device when we are very wisely expending $150,000 in experimenting with the devices of Commodore Howell and Mr. Gatling and Mr. Emery. It seems to me that that is the only way we shall ever get such implements of warfare as we desire.

Mr. ALLISON. I intended no reflection on this young officer of the Navy. I only meant to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that if this invention has the merit which he ascribes to it, the Board of Ordnance and Fortification will have sense enough to see it, and we have provided ample means to enable this young officer to test his torpedo, without naming him specifically, and if the Board of Ordnance and Fortification should realize, as we have a right to suppose they will, the merits of his invention, then it would cost but a small sum to manufacture this controllable torpedo by the inventor himself, whereas, as to these other provisions which we have put in the bill, they involve large expenditures which can only be made by the Government itself.

Now, I want to say, as I said in the beginning, that I have no objection to inserting the name of Mr. Halpine, if the Senator from Massachusetts desires to have his name inserted, but I only wanted, so far as I could, to vindicate the committee as to the charge of their failure to specifically put in this small invention, costing only $9,500; but instead of the committee proposing a general sum of $50,000, to cover this and others like it, making the amount altogether $150,000. That was the point I made. I desired only to reply to the criticisms of the Senator from Massachusetts as to the liberality of the committee in one direction and its economy in another.

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to criticise the committee. I merely desire that this torpedo shall be tried by the Board. I have great respect for the opinion of this Board. I have no doubt that it is an excellent one. I have not any question of that whatever, and have no doubt that they are great experts; but still they are not infallible. Boards of experts in the Army and Navy are not infallible, and everyone who is familiar with the history of the Monitor knows that the naval experts said it would never do; and if it had not been for the civil department of the Government it would never have been tried, and yet the invention of the Monitor revolutionized naval warfare. Therefore expert boards are not always right, though they are right in a great majority of cases undoubtedly. But there is no reason why Congress should not recommend to them, as it has done substantially in hundreds of other cases, a device which it thinks worthy of trial.

Mr. GRAY. Let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator's amendment make it mandatory upon the Board to make the experiment?

Mr. LODGE. It simply says they are authorized to do so.

Mr. HAWLEY. It enables the Board to make the experiment suggested.

Mr. PERKINS. Inasmuch as my friend from Massachusetts challenged the correctness of a statement which was made by me, I will read an extract from the testimony taken before the committee:

Senator PERKINS. Have you practically demonstrated the utility of your invention?

Lieutenant HALPINE. This has been in use two years.

Senator PERKINS. Have you demonstrated that you can guide it wherever you please?

Lieutenant HALPINE. Yes, sir; that is the one we sent to Brazil.

Senator CULLOM. Where is the man stationed who operates the apparatus that guides the torpedo?

Lieutenant HALPINE. He has this board in his hands.

Senator PERKINS. Is he under cover on shore?

Lieutenant HALPINE. No, sir; he moves away from the shore. Here is a picture of the man who rides it. [Produces photograph.] After the man gets out a certain distance he loads the torpedo by putting in a fresh can and gets on top of this [indicating], and when he gets within a mile range of the vessel he wishes to attack he starts the machinery by turning this little rear key, and runs it up on this speed. [Indicating.] Meantime he is riding there. [Indicating.]

Senator PERKINS. What is there to protect the man from sharpshooters on board the ship?

Lieutenant HALPINE. Humanity does not shoot a man in the water.

I only wanted to satisfy the Senator that I was correct in my former statement on this point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 13, noes 16.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No quorum having voted, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Clark,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Allison,	Cullom,	Kyle,	Roach,
Bacon,	Daniel,	Lindsay,	Sewell,
Baker,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Bate,	Elkins,	Martin,	Squire,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Mills,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Frye,	Nelson,	Teller,
Brown,	Gallinger,	Pasco,	Thurston,
Burrows,	Gear,	Peffer,	Vest,
Butler,	George,	Perkins,	Walthall,
Cannon,	Gorman,	Pettigrew,	Wetmore,
Carter,	Gray,	Platt,	White,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Pritchard,	Wilson,
Chilton,	Hill,	Pugh,	Wolcott.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. GORMAN. On that let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. I do not know how he would vote if present. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I make the same transfer I made on a previous roll call. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], but with the distinct understanding that it shall not apply to questions which have no possible political significance. On this motion I vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] that we exchange our pairs. I am paired generally with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. Let the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] stand paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. Then the vote of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] may stand and the pair will be observed.

Mr. THURSTON. Generally, during the absence of those Senators?

Mr. VILAS. That will relieve the question in any case.

Mr. THURSTON. Very well.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TURPIE. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS. I inquire whether the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Aldrich,	Chandler,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Allison,	Frye,	McBride,	Squire,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Perkins,	Teller,
Brown,	Hale,	Pettigrew,	Thurston,
Burrows,	Hawley,	Platt,	Wetmore,
Cannon,	Hill,	Sewell,	Wilson.

NAYS—27.

Allen,	Clark,	Gray,	Pasco,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,
Berry,	Cullom,	Kyle,	Roach,
Butler,	Daniel,	Lindsay,	Vest,
Caffery,	Faulkner,	Mills,	Vilas,
Carter,	George,	Mitchell, Wis.	White.
Chilton,	Gorman,	Nelson,

NOT VOTING—38.

Bacon,	Gibson,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Smith,
Blackburn,	Gordon,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Blanchard,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,	Tillman,
Brice,	Harris,	Murphy,	Turpie,
Call,	Hoar,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Irby,	Pritchard,	Walthall,
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,	Warren,
Dubois,	McMillan,	Pugh,	Wolcott.
Elkins,	Mantle,	Quay,
Gear,	Martin,	Sherman,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SQUIRE. I offer an amendment to come in on page 10, after line 19.

The SECRETARY. After line 10, on page 19, it is proposed to insert:

The sum of $50,000 to be appropriated for the purchase of the Lewis range and position finder: Provided, That the Government shall have the privilege of buying the exclusive right for the United States to this invention. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to purchase at once said range finder to the amount of this appropriation.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this question at any length. I wish merely to make an explanation. I have in my hand a copy of an extract from the report of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification dated February 7, 1896, in which it is stated that the Board approves the findings of the range-finder board and recommends that the Lewis depressed range finder be adopted. It also recommended that steps be taken to acquire the right to use this invention by appropriating such sum as may to the Secretary of War seem just and equitable. The report is signed by General Miles, president of the Board, and by the recorder, and it is approved by the Secretary of War.

I believe it is important that we should have a larger number of range finders than are in existence in this country. We are providing in the pending bill for the purchase of a large number of high-power, long-range guns; we are providing for a large payment to the Bethlehem Iron Company under the contract already existing, and we are providing for the manufacture by the Government of 48 additional direct-fire guns of 8-inch, 10-inch, and 12-inch calibers, besides many 12-inch steel-rifled mortars during the present year. All these great guns are to be for harbor defense.

It is well known that the range finders are essential in ascertaining the position of a ship in a harbor. It is also well known that harbors are laid out in artificial squares, charted. This plan of defense is illustrated in the report of the Chief of Ordnance, showing how the shots fired from the steel mortars in depressed pits and sent a mile or two high can be so aimed by the use of the range finder as to come down on the deck of an attacking vessel. The range finders are necessary in ascertaining the position of a ship, only a few seconds being required for that purpose. I understand that there are very few of them now on hand. I do not know the exact number, but I do not believe there are as many as six——

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Washington whether the Ordnance Department do not think they have as many now as they have need for?

Mr. SQUIRE. I do not understand that the Ordnance Department are indisposed to acquire a further number. I do understand that the Ordnance Department are not disposed to ask for any very large number now, but I think we ought to have at least a few more; and that is the reason I reduced the amount named in the amendment below what the Senator from Florida proposed.

Let me say by way of explanation that I introduced this amendment in the absence of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], who gave notice of his intention to propose the amendment, and in his amendment the sum fixed was $250,000. He being absent to-day, I have, by request, introduced the amendment, and I have cut it down from $250,000 to $50,000, because I think we ought to have a number of these range finders provided for in the pending bill.

If you are going to spend all this money for fortifications (I believe we are right in doing it; I believe the Senate is acting just right in this respect); if we are going to spend this money for guns and projectiles, we ought to have range finders, not all that are required for the future, but let us have a reasonable number provided.

I hope the committee will be disposed to accept the amendment, but if they are not willing to make it $50,000, let us make it $30,000. I know we have some of these range finders. It is not fair to the service that it should be without a reasonable complement of the range finders that have been amply tested, and such as have been in the service for three years. It seems somewhat neglectful that, in such a liberal bill as this, we should omit to provide for the purchase of a single range finder, the range finder that has been recommended and adopted by the Board of Ordnance and Fortification.

Mr. PERKINS. In the fifth report of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification there is quite a treatise upon range finders and locators. There are some three or four different ones mentioned. The Lewis range finder is yet in its incipiency; that is, they are trying three of them, one on a low altitude, one upon a high altitude, and one upon a medium range. They think well of them. In New York Harbor there is also another new range finder, and they are experimenting with it. We already have three Lewis range finders, for each of which the Government has paid about $2,000. If all our fortifications are constructed on the lines proposed by the Board, we would have only about 60 batteries, and there is no necessity of purchasing any more range finders at this time. Let us first construct the mortars and the cannon, get them in position, and then it will be time enough for us to experiment with more range finders. It will require but from thirty to sixty days to make one of them, and when we want them we can choose them from all the different designs. I do not want to weary the Senate at this time, but the testimony of the Chief of Ordnance was that there was no necessity at this time for making any appropriations other than those we have already provided for in the general bill.

Mr. SQUIRE. By the courteous invitation of the subcommittee on appropriations it was my privilege to be present at the hearing before the subcommittee in its consideration of the fortifications bill. I heard what the Chief of Ordnance said. I do not understand that he is actually antagonistic to any appropriation for this, but he did not think it was necessary to accumulate any large number of the range finders at the present time. That is the reason why I have reduced the number proposed to be purchased to only one-fifth. It occurs to me we ought to provide for a certain small number. I should be willing to reduce the amount, if the committee think best, and make the sum appropriated twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars instead of fifty thousand dollars. There ought to be a small number of range finders secured. It is probably an inaccurate statement that they can be prepared in thirty days. Everybody who has been in the business of manufacturing knows that it can not be done unless these machines are made by hand. Then it would probably be impracticable to supply any considerable number of them, duly tested and accepted, in less than six or eight months.

Mr. PERKINS. General Flagler's testimony is here, and I wish to read his testimony as taken by a shorthand writer. He said:

In my judgment it is not at all improbable that a better range finder may be arrived at than the one under consideration. If so, we do not want to purchase that right and be confined to that particular one. The $250,000 ought to buy at least 150 range finders.

Senator ALLISON. Where you need only 60?

General FLAGLER. It ought to buy 150, and we may not need more than 60. Do you regard it important—

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] asked—that we should make an appropriation on that subject now?

General Flagler replied:

I do not.

Upon that testimony and upon the report of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification the committee declined to recommend that any sum should be appropriated for range finders.

Mr. SQUIRE. The Board of Ordnance and Fortification——

Mr. ALDRICH. I make the point of order.

Mr. SQUIRE. And I have their report here——

Mr. ALDRICH. I make the point upon the amendment that it is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island will state his point of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is an amendment adding a new item of appropriation to the bill; it is not recommended by any committee, and it is not included in any estimate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 4363) to increase the pension of Joseph J. Hudson;

A bill (H. R. 4720) granting an increase of pension to Isaac H. Whetsel, of Louisville, Ky.; and

A bill (H. R. 6483) granting increase of pension to Thomas D. Walker.

CAPITAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. FAULKNER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 888) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Capital Railway Company," approved March 2, 1895, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Also, in section 1, line 7, strike out the word "for" and insert the word "have"; so that the phrase shall read, "have a common seal"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the second amendment of the House and agree to the same amended to read as follows: "Also continuing from said Eleventh and M streets north on Eleventh street to the south building line of East Capitol street"; and that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the third and fourth amendments of the House and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the fifth amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment so that section 4 shall read as follows:

"That the portions of the company's routes from Congress or Pencote Heights to Shepherds Landing and the Harrison street branch east to the District line shall be completed within two years from the passage of this act: Provided, That failure to complete the said portions of the routes as provided for in this section, and also failure to complete the extension on Eleventh street east, shall operate to repeal the authority to build said portions, and shall not repeal the charter of said company."

And that the House agree to the same.

CHARLES J. FAULKNER,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.
J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator from Virginia, but I hope no other Senator will call upon me to yield to him.

COURT ROOM AT HARRISONBURG, VA.

Mr. DANIEL. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 174) granting permission to the circuit and county courts in Rockingham County, Va., to occupy the Federal court room in Harrisonburg, Va., to report it favorably.

I am also instructed to ask for the immediate passage of the joint resolution. I will state, in explanation, that the county of Rockingham contemplates building a new court-house and asks permission, during the time of its construction, not in any event to exceed three years, for its courts to occupy the Federal court room at that place. The cities and towns in our State have always granted like comity to the Federal Government.

Mr. CULLOM. If there is no debate upon the joint resolution, I shall not object to its present consideration.

Mr. DANIEL. There will be no debate upon it and I think no objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut, and in view of the lateness of the hour and the disposition on the part of many Senators to call up unobjected bills, I am inclined to let the report go over until to-morrow morning, if it is agreeable to the Senate, but otherwise I should like to go on with it at once.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

KATE EBERLE.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to call up the bill (H. R. 485) for the relief of Kate Eberle, an Indian woman.

I desire to state that a similar bill passed the Senate and the House at the last session, but it did not get to the President in time to receive his signature. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why can we not proceed——

Mr. PLATT. Let me dispose of this bill, please.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was just going to state, before anybody else should ask unanimous consent, that we might have some understanding that as soon as this bill is disposed of we should take up the Calendar of unobjected cases and dispose of them.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope this case will not be interfered with.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not propose to do that.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear a concise statement of the facts in that case. It is a very remarkable case.

Mr. PLATT. The statement is contained in the preamble. This is an aged lady, who is now both aged and poor. When 6 or 7 years of age——

Mr. COCKRELL. Is she still living?

Mr. PLATT. She is still living.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where?

Mr. CULLOM. She is a poor washerwoman living in East Dubuque, in the northern part of Illinois. It is a case that has passed the Senate and House both once or twice. It passed the Senate, at least, the year before last; and the last time it passed both Houses of Congress it passed within an hour of final adjournment and did not reach the President.

Mr. PLATT. When this Indian woman was a child she was separated from the tribe, and therefore was prevented from receiving her pro rata share, to which she would have been entitled under the provisions of the treaty if she had remained with the tribe. She was ignorant of her rights and did not rejoin her tribe. She is now old and poor, and the committees of the two Houses of Congress have formerly thought it no more than right that she should receive from the funds of the tribe her fair share as an Indian and as a member of the tribe.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD INDEMNITY LANDS.

Mr. CARTER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2221) for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That in lieu of the Senate bill and the House amendment thereto the following substitute be passed:

"An act for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That those persons, their heirs, or legal representatives, who, between the 15th day of August, A. D. 1887, and the 1st day of January, A. D. 1889, settled upon and made final proof and entry, under the homestead or preemption laws, of lands within the so-called second indemnity belt of the Northern Pacific Railway Company's grant in the State of Minnesota, which entries were afterwards, without their fault, canceled, upon establishing these facts before the register and receiver of the local land office, in such mode and under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be allowed to make final homestead entry, and receive a patent therefor of a quantity of land of any of the unappropriated public lands of the United States subject to homestead entry equal in acreage to the land proved up and entered in the said second indemnity belt as aforesaid, without being required to make any settlement or improvement upon or cultivation of such land so entered prior to such entry; and those persons, their heirs or legal representatives, who, within the period aforesaid for the space of six months settled upon, improved, and cultivated any of said indemnity lands with a view of entering the same under the homestead or preemption laws, being competent to make such entries, and who were not permitted to make such entries, upon establishing these facts before the register and receiver of the local land office, in such mode and under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, shall be allowed to enter, under the homestead laws of the United States, a quantity of land of the unappropriated public lands of the United States subject to homestead entry equal in amount to the land settled upon, improved, and cultivated, as aforesaid, and under the homestead entry so made shall, when making proof and final entry, receive credit for the settlement, improvement, and cultivation made upon the said indemnity land as aforesaid: Provided, That the law in force in 1889 governing the commutation of homestead entries shall apply to the commutation of entries under this section."

"SEC. 2. That those who are entitled to make the homestead entries prescribed in the preceding section may make such entries of any of the agricultural lands embraced in the provisions of an act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,' approved January 14, 1889, upon condition of paying for such lands the price prescribed in said act.

"SEC. 3. That the right of homestead entry conferred by the provisions of this act shall not be assignable, and no conveyance, sale, or transfer of the land so entered shall be valid or of any effect if made before patent has issued."

O. W. UNDERWOOD,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DURHAM, N. C.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to call up the bill (S. 1338) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Durham, in the State of North Carolina.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 2, line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five"; so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and to cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Durham and State of North Carolina, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ABERDEEN, S. DAK.

Mr. KYLE. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 105) for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, S. Dak.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase or acquire, by condemnation proceedings or otherwise, a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fireproof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices at the city of Aberdeen, S. Dak., the plans, specifications, and full estimates for the building to be previously made and approved according to law, and the cost for the site and building complete not to exceed $100,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case? If so, let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. SQUIRE on the 11th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 105) for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, S. Dak., have considered the same and recommend its passage.

Appended hereto is the report from the Secretary of the Treasury, which is adopted by this committee and made a part of this report:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1896.

SIR: In compliance with the request contained in letter dated December 7, 1895, from your committee, I have the honor to submit the following report upon Senate bill No. 105, introduced December 3, 1895, by Hon. JAMES H. KYLE, to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a suitable building, with fireproof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices at Aberdeen, S. Dak., at a cost not to exceed $100,000.

Upon receipt at this Department of a copy of said bill, letters were written to certain Federal officials for information in regard to the past, present, and probable future needs of the different branches of the public service at Aberdeen, the estimated value of land for site, rents paid, population of city, etc.

The Postmaster-General states:

"Gross postal receipts, year ended June 30, 1885, $6,451; net receipts, year ended June 30, 1885, $3,831; number of persons employed, including postmaster, 1; gross receipts, year ended June 30, 1895, $13,279; net receipts, year ended June 30, 1895, $5,610; number of persons employed, including postmaster, 7; present allowance for rent, per annum, $600."

The postmaster states:

"Receipts for 1885, $6,435; for 1895, $13,279; estimated increase for the next ten years, at 25 per cent; number of employees in 1885, 2; in 1895, 4; number of boxes and drawers in use, 931; floor area now occupied, 1,500 square feet; annual rental paid, $900; population in 1885, 3,000; in 1895, 4,500; price of land, $1,500 to $3,000 for lots 25 by 145 feet."

From computations made, based upon the data received, it is estimated that a suitable site, 134 by 140 feet in size, and which would allow for the 40-foot fire limit required by the bill, and also allow for a 30-foot extension to the building in the future, can be secured for about $13,000, and that a building two stories high, with basement, about 84 by 60 feet in size, with a total floor area of 10,080 square feet, which will allow 3,000 square feet for post-office purposes, 5,000 square feet for United States courts, and 2,000 square feet for the United States land office, built of brick, with stone trimmings, fireproof or nonfireproof construction, as may be determined, and including heating apparatus, vaults, and approaches, can be erected for—

Estimated cost of site (six lots, at average price, $2,250)	$13,000
Estimated cost of building (fireproof)	96,000
Total	109,000
or—
Estimated cost of site	13,000
Estimated cost of building (nonfireproof)	74,000
Total	87,000

Respectfully, yours,

S. WIKE, Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAXATION OF ALLOTTED INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 265) extending relief to Indian citizens, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following as an additional section:

SEC. 3. That all agreements hereafter made for the purchase of the unallotted lands in any Indian reservation shall provide a fund for the payment of taxes upon inalienable allotments in the manner provided by this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a report in that case. Please let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, February 10, 1896, and read as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs report the bill (S. 265) extending relief to Indian citizens, and for other purposes, with an amendment adding a section to the bill, as follows:

"SEC. 3. That all agreements hereafter made for the purchase of the unallotted land in any Indian reservation shall provide a fund for the payment of taxes upon the inalienable allotments in the manner provided by this act."

And with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

This bill has been twice reported to the Senate from this committee, and there is every reason of justice and equity why it should become a law.

The attached papers are made a part of this report, including the report made by this committee to the Senate in 1892:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 4, 1896.

SIR: Senate bill 265, entitled "A bill extending relief to Indian citizens, and for other purposes," submitted with your letter of the 24th ultimo, with request for a statement of the number of acres allotted in each State, and my opinion as to the expediency of passing the bill, was referred to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and a copy of his report with its inclosures, is transmitted herewith.

Mr. HALE. I am informed that the bill will give rise to debate. So I must ask that it go over.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I want to say with regard to the bill that I shall make an effort to get it up regularly and have it discussed and passed before the present session closes. I shall undertake to do it to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to such a course, but I was told that it would give rise to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is objected to, and will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL OF THE NAVY.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senate to take up from the table House bill 3337, in reference to the duties of Solicitor and Judge-Advocate-General of the Navy. There is no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3337) amending the act of June 8, 1880, entitled "An act to authorize the President to appoint an officer of the Navy or the Marine Corps to perform the duties of Solicitor and Judge-Advocate-General, etc., and to fix the rank and pay of such officer," and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. The bill has been already read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. COCKRELL. There was a bill of that kind to which some Senator objected who is not now present and whom I can not recall.

Mr. HALE. All objections have been withdrawn to the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read again, so that we may know what it is.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the proviso at the end of the bill in the following words:

Provided, That this amendment shall take effect from July 19, 1892, the date on which the present incumbent entered on duty, and that the amount herein appropriated shall be payable from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy."

Mr. HALE. That amendment is not insisted upon, and I ask to have it voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be disagreed to. It is disagreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order of Business 520 on the Calendar, being the bill (S. 1996) amending the act of June 8, 1880, entitled "An act to authorize the President to appoint an officer of the Navy or the Marine Corps to perform the duties of Solicitor and Judge-Advocate-General, etc., and to fix the rank and pay of such officer," and for other purposes, will be indefinitely postponed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN W. BRANHAM.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1434) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Branham, late an assistant surgeon in the United States Marine-Hospital Service.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives of John W. Branham, late an assistant surgeon in the United States Marine-Hospital Service, who died of yellow fever at his post of duty August 20, 1893, the sum of $4,160, being the amount of salary and allowances for two years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

MUSTER AND PAY OF VOLUNTEER FORCES.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2101) to extend the provisions of an act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any person who was duly appointed or commissioned to be an officer of the volunteer service during the war of the rebellion, and who was subject to the mustering regulations at the time applied to members of the volunteer service, shall be held and considered to have been mustered into the service of the United States in the grade named in his appointment or commission from the date from which he was to take rank under and by the terms of his said appointment or commission, whether the same was actually received by him or not, and shall be entitled to pay, emoluments, and pension as if actually mustered at that date: Provided, That at the date from which he was to take rank by the terms of his said appointment or commission there was a vacancy to which he could be so appointed or commissioned, and his command had either been recruited to the minimum number required by law and the regulations of the War Department, or had been assigned to duty in the field, and that he was actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was so appointed or commissioned; or if not so performing such duties, then he shall be held and considered to have been mustered into service and to be entitled to the benefits of such muster from such time after the date of rank given in his commission as he may have actually entered upon such duties: Provided further, That any person held as a prisoner of war, or who may have been absent by reason of wounds, or in hospital by reason of disability received in the service in the line of duty, at the date of issue of his appointment or commission, if a vacancy existed for him in the grade to which so appointed or commissioned, shall be entitled to all the benefits to which he would have been entitled under this act if he had been actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was appointed or commissioned at said date: Provided further, That this act shall be construed to apply only in those cases where the commission bears date prior to June 20, 1863, or after that date when the commands of the persons appointed or commissioned were not below the minimum number required by then existing laws and regulations: And provided further, That the pay and allowances actually received for the period covered by the recognition extended under this act shall be deducted from the sums otherwise to be paid thereunder.

SEC. 2. That the heirs or legal representatives of any person whose muster into service shall be recognized and established under the terms of this act shall be entitled to receive the arrears of pay and emoluments due and the pension, if any, authorized by law, for the grade to which recognition shall be so extended.

SEC. 3. That the pay and allowances of any rank or grade paid to and received by any military or naval officer in good faith for services actually performed by such officer in such rank or grade during the war of the rebellion, other than as directed in the fourth proviso of the first section of this act, shall not be charged to or recovered back from such officer because of any defect in the title of such officer to the office, rank, or grade in which such services were so actually performed.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Connecticut state the object of that bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will. I will illustrate it by taking the case of A B, an officer of the New York State Volunteers, who was down with his regiment somewhere in the South during the war. The governor did not know where he was. There was a vacancy in the command of his company, his company was up to the limit, and he was on duty with it. A commission started from Albany to find him, but he was moving about. The mails were irregular. Perhaps he had been taken prisoner; perhaps he was in a hospital and did not get his commission into his hands, and the mustering officer could not find him to muster him for two or three or four months. In the meantime he was a captain in all respects except that he had not been mustered. This simply gives him his pay as captain during the time he was actually captain, though he had not received his commission.

A law to provide for such cases was first passed in 1884, which was amended and extended by subsequent acts, which finally expired by limitation on the 3d day of June, 1895. It was supposed that all entitled to the benefits of these acts would have presented their claims by that time. Through ignorance of the law and from other causes they did not, however, and a number have since applied for this equitable adjustment, and now we propose to extend the law for that purpose. Colonel Ainsworth has gone very carefully over the subject in an elaborate report and drawn this substitute, which puts no limit upon the time. If we put a limit of five years on it, somebody will come along after a while with a special bill. The number to be provided for is not large now. There are but few left. The bill has been carefully drawn, and I do not think any one man can get this pay who is not fairly entitled to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SALEM, OREG.

Mr. McBRIDE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2394) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salem, Oreg.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate not exceeding $100,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a suitable building for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices at the city of Salem, in the State of Oregon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ESTATE OF A. L. BURWELL.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7816) for the relief of John S. Burwell, administrator of the estate of A. L. Burwell, deceased.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to John S. Burwell, administrator of the estate of A. L. Burwell, deceased, such sum of money, not exceeding $1,499.56, as shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have been expended by him, or by Thomas and John Peale as agents for him, in the purchase of tobacco stamps used to stamp tobacco held by said agents for him and inventoried according to law; but the Commissioner is to be satisfied that the tobacco was manufactured prior to July 20, 1868, and that the internal-revenue tax imposed by law prior to that date had actually been paid thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M. MASI AND OTHERS.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1500) for the relief of William M. Masi, ex-postmaster, and Benjamin Hellman, Lawrence R. Bresnahen, John W. Griffin, George W. Hoyt, and Charles W. Riner as sureties upon his official bond as postmaster at Cheyenne.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That upon the receipt by the Secretary of the Treasury of the full amount of all dividends heretofore paid or hereafter to be paid by the receiver of the Cheyenne National Bank, in the administration of the assets of said bank, upon the claim of William M. Masi all further liability of said William M. Masi and of his sureties to the United States of America, upon his official bond as postmaster at Cheyenne, Wyo., shall cease and determine as to and to the extent of certain funds belonging to the United States which were deposited and upon deposit by the said Masi in said Cheyenne National Bank at the time it closed its doors and ceased to do business and went into the hands of the receiver: Provided, however, That nothing in this act contained shall operate as a release to the said Masi and his sureties on his official bond of any liabilities to the United States which may have been incurred by said Masi while acting as postmaster at Cheyenne, other than as to the amount so deposited and on deposit in said bank as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 8167) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT COURT IN MONTANA.

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2473) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Montana," approved July 20, 1892.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, in section 1, line 6, after the words "Gallatin County," to insert "and"; and in the same line, after the words "Deerlodge County," to strike out "and Jefferson County"; so as to make the section read:

That the territory embraced within the following counties in the district of Montana, to wit, Beaverhead County, Madison County, Silverbow County, Granite County, Ravalli County, Gallatin County, and Deerlodge County, shall hereafter constitute and be known as the southern division of the district of Montana, and regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for said district may be held at Butte, Mont., on the first Tuesday in February and the first Tuesday in September of each year; and the said courts so sitting at Butte shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction and authority in all civil actions, pleas, or proceedings and in all prosecutions, informations, indictments, or other criminal or penal proceedings conferred by the general laws on the district and circuit courts of the United States; and where one or more defendants in any civil cause shall reside in said division, and one or more defendants to such cause shall reside out of said division, but in said district, then the plaintiff may institute his action either in the court having jurisdiction over the latter or in the said division.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

["Oh, no!"]

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator will not press that motion. Let us pass a few more bills.

Mr. CHANDLER. I feel compelled to withdraw the motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TACOMA, WASH.

Mr. SQUIRE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 163) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Tacoma, in the State of Washington.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $400,000 for the purchase of a site and the completion of a building at the city of Tacoma, in the State of Washington, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, the post-office, and other Government offices, with fireproof vaults extending to each story; the building to be completed according to plans and specifications previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1831) for the relief of William J. Bryan.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to allow William J. Bryan, late postmaster of the post-office of San Francisco, State of California, in settlement of his postal money order fund account, a credit for $9,601.73, being the sum now charged to him as postmaster for moneys received for the sale of foreign money orders between the 30th day of September, 1889, and the 22d day of March, 1890, by one James S. Kennedy, late a clerk at the international desk in the money-order division of said post-office, whose duty it was to receive, safely keep, and account for the proceeds of the sale of foreign money orders, but who embezzled and appropriated the same to his own use, and has wholly failed to account for the same; the defalcation and misappropriation having been committed without the fault or negligence of William J. Bryan, late postmaster.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NICOLAI BROS.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3011) for the relief of Nicolai Bros.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant permission to Nicolai Bros. to use the pipes heretofore laid by them under a permit dated December 22, 1893, along I street southeast from Half street to South Capitol street, South Capitol street from I street to K street, K street from South Capitol street to corner of K and Half streets southwest, under such regulations and rental as may be made by the Commissioners with regard thereto.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUGUSTUS BOYD.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 594) for the relief of Augustus Boyd.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 10, to insert "and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only"; and after the word "confirmation," in line 14, to insert "and that thereafter no pension shall accrue or be paid to him"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and hereby is, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint and place on the list of retired officers of the United States Army the name of Augustus Boyd, with the rank of captain of staff, this being the actual rank in the Regular Army held by him when, in the service, he received the injury from which he suffers permanent disability; and the retired list is hereby increased in number to that extent, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only: Provided, That no pay or allowances shall accrue or be paid to said Augustus Boyd under this act prior to his confirmation, and that thereafter no pension shall accrue or be paid to him.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the time, and passed.

DAY LABOR ON MUNICIPAL WORKS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3008) authorizing the employment of day labor in the construction of certain municipal buildings or works in the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALFRED BIGELOW.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3001) granting a pension to Alfred Bigelow, of Norfolk, in the State of Nebraska.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place the name of Alfred Bigelow, late of Company A, Nineteenth New York Cavalry, on the pension roll at the rate of $18 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT OMAHA MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 225) to provide for the transfer of the Fort Omaha Military Reservation to the State of Nebraska.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in section 1, line 6, after the word "to," to strike out "transfer and turn over" and insert "lease at a nominal rent"; and in line 12, after the word "said," to strike out "transfer" and insert "lease"; so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, when Fort Crook, near the city of Omaha, Nebr., is ready for occupancy by the troops of the Army of the United States, to lease at a nominal rent to the State of Nebraska the possession of Fort Omaha Military Reservation, containing about 80 acres, with all the buildings, appurtenances, and improvements thereof; the said reservation being the same tracts and parcels of land heretofore donated to the United States by the citizens of Omaha, Nebr. The purpose of said lease is that the said Fort Omaha Military Reservation shall be used by the State of Nebraska as a place of rendezvous and school of instruction for the National Guard of said State of Nebraska and is made conditional upon its use for that purpose, and that the adjutant-general of said State shall annually report to the Secretary of War in detail the uses of said reservation. The said State of Nebraska is privileged to establish on said reservation a State military school, with not less than two military instructors.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SEWELL, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the lease of Fort Omaha Military Reservation to the State of Nebraska."

Mr. THURSTON. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. WARREN, Mr. SEWELL, and Mr. WALTHALL were appointed.

PROTECTION OF DRAMATIC COPYRIGHTS.

Mr. HILL. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 2306) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes, relating to copyrights.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Patents with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 7, before the word "composition," to strike out "operatic" and insert "musical"; in line 9, before the word "composition," to strike out "operatic" and insert "musical"; in line 14, to strike out "and if it be determined that such unlawful performing and representation was willful and for profit, in addition thereto" and insert "if the unlawful performance and representation be willful and for profit"; and in line 18, after the word "and," to strike out "liable to imprisonment" and insert "upon conviction be imprisoned"; so as to read:

That section 4966 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4966. Any person publicly performing or representing any dramatic or musical composition for which a copyright has been obtained, without the consent of the proprietor of said dramatic or musical composition or his heirs or assigns, shall be liable for damages therefor, such damages in all cases to be assessed at such sum, not less than $100 for the first and $50 for every subsequent performance, as to the court shall appear to be just. If the unlawful performance and representation be willful and for profit, such person or persons shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction be imprisoned for a period not exceeding one year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 21, before the word "judge," to strike out "any" and insert "a"; and in line 23, before the word "composition," to strike out "operatic" and insert "musical"; so as to read:

Any injunction that may be granted by any circuit court of the United States, or by a judge thereof, restraining and enjoining the performance or representation of any such dramatic or musical composition may be served on the parties against whom such injunction may be granted anywhere in the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 31, before the word "composition," to strike out "operatic" and insert "musical"; and in line 32, before the word "such," to insert "upon"; so as to read:

But the defendants in said action, or any or either of them, may make a motion in any other circuit in which he or they may be engaged in performing or representing said dramatic or musical composition to dissolve or set aside the said injunction upon such reasonable notice to the plaintiff as the circuit court or the judge before whom said motion shall be made shall deem proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER AT ST. CHARLES, MO.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5675) authorizing the construction of a wagon and motor bridge over the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, after the word "That," to strike out "Theodore Bruere, Henry B. Denker, A. F. Mispagel, O. J. Marten, C. W. Prosser, W. F. Bloebaum, B. L. Emmons, L. Ringe, A. Runge, J. F. Rauch, and Henry F. Pieper" and insert "the St. Charles and St. Louis County Bridge Company, a corporation duly created under the laws of the State of Missouri, its successors and assigns"; in line 17, after the word "said," to strike out "parties" and insert "corporation, its successors or assigns"; in line 18, before the word "approved," to strike out the words "to be"; in line 20, after the word "said," to strike out "parties" and insert "corporation"; in the same line, before the word "successors," to strike out "their" and insert "its"; and in line 28, before the word "successors," to strike out "parties, or their" and insert "corporation, its"; so as to make the section read:

That the St. Charles and St. Louis County Bridge Company, a corporation duly created under the laws of the State of Missouri, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River, between the city of St. Charles, Mo., and St. Louis County, Mo., at a point to be selected consistent with the interests of river navigation. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, street-railway cars, motor cars, animals, foot passengers, and for all road travel, for such reasonable rates of toll and under such reasonable rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the said corporation, its successors or assigns, and approved from time to time by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the said corporation, or its successors and assigns, shall build and maintain at all times, as accessory works to said bridge, such booms, piers, dikes, guard fences, and similar devices as may be necessary, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, to insure at all times a permanent channel for a sufficient distance above and below the bridge site, and for the guiding of rafts, steamboats, and other water craft safely under said bridge: Provided further, That the said corporation, its successors and assigns, shall maintain on said bridge, from sunset to sunrise, such lights and other signals as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 7, before the word "successors," to strike out "parties or their" and insert "corporation, its"; and in line 11, before the word "successors" to strike out "parties, or their" and insert "corporation, its"; so as to read:

That said bridge shall not be built or commenced until the location and plans have been approved by the Secretary of War as hereinafter provided for; and any change in the construction or any alteration of said bridge and accessory works that may be directed at any time by Congress or the Secretary of War shall be made at the cost and expense of the said corporation, its successors and assigns; that the said bridge shall be constructed without interference with the security and convenience of navigation of said river, and in order to secure that object the said corporation, its successors and assigns, shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 1, after the word "built," to insert "either"; in line 2, before the word "bridge," to insert "or low," and after the word "bridge" to insert "and if built as a high bridge it shall be"; so as to read:

That said bridge shall be built either as a high or low bridge, and if built as a high bridge it shall be with unbroken and continuous spans.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 8, after the word "river," to insert:

If built with pivot drawspan, it shall have one drawspan, affording two clear openings of not less than 200 feet each, which drawspan shall be maintained over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and if with fixed span or spans, they shall be not less than 300 feet in length in the clear, and the headroom under each span shall not be less than 10 feet above the standard high-water grade line, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with and the bridge itself at right angles with the river: Provided also, That said drawspan shall be opened promptly by said corporation, its successors and assigns, upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats and rafts: And provided further, That the said corporation, its successors and assigns, shall, at their own expense, build and maintain, under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War, when so required, such wing dams, booms, and other necessary work to maintain the channel within the drawspan of said bridge, and shall, at their own expense, maintain a depth of water through said drawspan not less than now existing, as shown by the records of the War Department, at the point where said bridge may be located: And provided further, That said corporation, its successors and assigns, shall maintain, at their own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 6, after the word "said," to strike out "parties" and insert "corporation, its successors or assigns"; so as to read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, upon receiving the report of the Board of Engineers, and upon being satisfied that the bridge to be built will conform to the requirements of this act, to notify the parties authorized to build the same that he approves of the same; and upon receiving such notification the said corporation, its successors or assigns, may proceed to erect said bridge, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. VEST, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. NELSON were appointed.

SALLY HARDMOND.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1122) for the relief of Sally Hardmond.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Martha A. Boywell, executrix of Sally Hardmond, deceased, the sum of $4,850, being the balance due said Sally Hardmond on account of her personal services as a nurse in the Bureau of Freedmen, Refugees, and Abandoned Lands, district of Virginia, and for rent of a dwelling house in the city of Richmond, in the State of Virginia, and for one house hired by and used for the purposes of said Bureau, and for money expended by her in and for said Bureau.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF PENSION DISABILITIES.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 901) amending section 4716 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HILL. What is the effect of the bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the bill?

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from North Carolina explain what the bill proposes to do? I am not familiar with existing law and can not tell exactly what the amendment proposed is.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I will state for the information of the Senate that under the act of June, 1890, the Commissioner holds that any person who served in the Confederate army and subsequently joined the Union Army is not entitled to a pension. The bill simply amends the act so as to enable any party who served in the Confederate army and subsequently joined the Union Army prior to the 1st day of September, 1864, and was honorably discharged, to receive a pension. That is all there is in it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Provided he served in the Union Army for what length of time?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Provided he served in the Union Army for ninety days.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will forgive me, but I wish that the bill might lie over a day, as I would like to look at it a little.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I will state that the matter was before the Committee on Pensions and was thoroughly considered there. I first offered the bill so as to repeal the section entirely. I believed it ought to be repealed. I now believe it ought to be repealed, but at the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] the bill was amended so as to entitle only those who joined the Federal Army prior to the 1st day of September, 1864, to participate in its benefits. I trust the Senate will let the bill pass, because great injustice has been done to the people of the South—those who first were compelled to go into the Confederate army and afterwards at the first opportunity joined the Federal Army. I take it that if the Government accepted the service of these people, as it did, and they made good soldiers—as they did in every instance—it is nothing but right that Congress should pay them a pension as well as every other individual who served in the Army. I trust the Senator from Connecticut will withdraw his opposition.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to have it lie over for a day. I will assist in getting it up after a day.

Mr. PRITCHARD. If the Senator from Connecticut will permit me, I will state that the House has already passed a bill during this session (the Pickler bill), which absolutely repeals this section without any qualification whatever. The only objection that was urged before the Pension Committee was that these men went into the Union Army after they saw that the South had lost the day. But this provision guards against that class of persons. This provision does not put in the man who joined the last day. It only includes those who went into the Confederate army under force of circumstances and at the first opportunity went through the lines and fought in behalf of the Union.

It seems to me if there is a class of people on earth who ought to have a pension it is those men who had the nerve and the manhood at the first opportunity, having been coerced into the Confederate army, to risk their lives and go and fight in defense of the Union.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the limitation? The 1st of September, 1864?

Mr. PRITCHARD. The 1st of September, 1864.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether we could fairly have accepted the services of those men, enlisting them in the Union Army, without condoning any prior service in the Confederate army. Could we make any distinction? Can we to-day make any distinction between the men who were enlisted?

Mr. HAWLEY. There is very great force in that view. I remember very well, not to say much about my own personal experience, that men came over with a considerable degree of rapidity in the latter part of 1864. A number of them asked leave to go into the United States Army provided they could go off west of the Mississippi, so that they might not be caught by their old comrades. I think the date is hardly early enough, but I shall not fight against the bill. I would rather have the date earlier.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4716. No money on account of pension shall be paid to any person or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person who in any manner voluntarily engaged in or aided or abetted the late rebellion against the authority of the United States, except to such persons and the widows of such persons as before the 1st day of September, 1864, voluntarily, or as a substitute for any other person, and without a bounty or the promise of a bounty for so doing, enlisted in the service of the United States and actually served for ninety days."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Pensions report to strike out the preamble. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

SETTLERS UPON UNSURVEYED PUBLIC LAND.

Mr. CARTER. I call up the bill (S. 2284) for the relief of homestead settlers in Gregory County, S. Dak. The bill is on the Calendar under Rule VIII. It has been read.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in all cases, including those arising on ceded portions of Indian reservations, where persons duly qualified to enter land under the homestead laws have heretofore or may hereafter settle, improve, and continuously reside upon unsurveyed public land with the bona fide intention of entering the same under the homestead laws when surveyed and opened to entry shall, upon presenting final proof as required by law, be entitled to credit for residence, improvement, and cultivation made prior to the approval of such survey and the acceptance of filings. All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of homestead settlers on unsurveyed public land."

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 21, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 20, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPRINT OF IMMIGRATION BILLS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing having had under consideration resolutions providing for the reprinting of 500 copies each of House bills 58, 7864, 7415, and 8474, with the reports thereon, for the use of the House of Representatives, having considered the same, recommend that the same do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 500 copies each of the bills H. R. 58, 7864, 7415, and 8474, with the accompanying reports thereon.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LABOR.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred resolution No. 318, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report the following substitute therefor:

Resolved, That Thursday and Friday next shall be allotted to bills from the Committee on Labor, as follows:

Thursday, May 21, 1896, the House shall, immediately after the reading of the Journal, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 6119, entitled "A bill authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital," and that at 4 o'clock p. m. on the same day the committee shall rise and report the bill, with such amendments as may have been adopted, to the House, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the amendments to the bill to its passage.

And, further, that on Friday, May 22, after the disposal of unfinished business, the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 268) entitled "A bill concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees," and at 4 o'clock p. m. on that day the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as shall have been adopted, and thereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the amendments and bill to the passage: Provided, however, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed as interfering with general appropriation bills and conference reports.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask the previous question on the adoption of the order.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask the gentleman——

Mr. HENDERSON. I will explain briefly to the House the purpose of the order, as all present may not have observed its reading. It gives two days to the Committee on Labor for the consideration of the two bills named in the order, Thursday for the consideration of what is known as the commission or Phillips bill, and Friday, after the disposal of the unfinished business, to the consideration of the arbitration bill, known as the Erdman bill; to-morrow to be devoted to the disposition of the commission bill and Friday to the arbitration bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What I desired to ask the gentleman was, if he will permit me, whether the adoption of this rule setting apart Friday will not, in his opinion, do away with any consideration of bills on the Private Calendar?

Mr. HENDERSON. It will do away with the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, except the unfinished business. There are about 21 bills——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Pension bills?

Mr. HENDERSON (continuing). Pension bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole, which will be first disposed of.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman does not think, then, that the war claims would have any chance whatever on Friday if the rule is adopted?

Mr. HENDERSON. I think not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only wanted the House to understand that.

Mr. CANNON. Do I understand the gentleman has reported a special rule?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman if election cases are to be taken into consideration? I am not on any one of the committees, and have no authority to speak for them, but I understand that there are a number of cases ready for disposition by the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. We do not make provision for them this week, I will say to the gentleman, but they will be given the right of way at the proper time.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HENDERSON. We felt that labor ought to be heard before this House, and at once.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, will be allowed to present his views in opposition to this rule.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the consideration of the bills to which the gentleman refers. It does seem to me, however, that during the six months that this Congress has been in session the Committees on Claims and War Claims ought to have had some consideration at the hands of the House. Now, you may decry war claims, but as chairman of that committee let me say we have scanned carefully the bills reported to the House, and out of some 1,800 sent to the committee about 200 are reported favorably and are on the Calendar. Many of these are meritorious bills, claims honestly due from the Government to its citizens, and ought to be paid.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I can not see why Friday should not be excluded from this order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I believe he is chairman of the Committee on War Claims. I want to ask him if that committee have had for consideration of bills reported by them more than one day during this Congress?

Mr. MAHON. We have had about an hour and a half.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is that all the Committee on War Claims have had accorded to them during this Congress?

Mr. MAHON. About an hour and a half.

Mr. DALZELL. I should like to ask my friend a question. Does he believe that if all of to-morrow were devoted to the consideration of bills relating to war claims there would be a single one passed?

Mr. MAHON. That is not the question, Mr. Speaker. This House ought to have an opportunity to either pass these bills or reject them.

Mr. STEELE. That is true as to every bill.

Mr. MAHON. I appeal to all the members of this House who have bills upon this Private Calendar for claims due to their constituents. This is nothing to me personally. If you do not want to have a hearing in this House, why, pass this order. If you have bills on the Private Calendar, and you want to have a hearing on them, then vote it down.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a further question?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman in his argument, but I should like to ask him a further question. How much time has the Committee on War Claims devoted to the consideration of measures reported from that committee and now on the Calendar? Have you had any meetings of your committee?

Mr. MAHON. We have had two meetings every week during the whole session.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Have you reported measures that are on the Calendar?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; a great many. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no reflections to make on the Committee on Rules. I know the great pressure that has been brought upon that committee to consider various bills; but I want to serve notice on this House that at the next session of this Congress, and perhaps in the following Congress, three or four committees of this House intend to relieve the Speaker of that constant annoyance to which he is put every morning by requests for unanimous consent. We propose to force this House to consider bills on the Calendars of the House, under the rules of the House. [Applause.]

Now, I say that I have no reflection to make personally. I know that to the Speaker of this House it is one of the greatest annoyances to which he is put. We have passed three or four hundred private bills here, and have never touched the Calendars of the House, either the Calendar of the Whole House on the state of the Union or the Calendar of the House. We have ignored them altogether. I want to serve notice on the members of this House who want to get their bills through by unanimous consent to get them through within the next fifteen days; for you will not get them through in the next session, because we intend that after the reading of the Journal the regular order shall be called. There will be a committee appointed from these committees to call for the regular order every morning after the reading of the Journal; and if any private bills are passed by this House, they must be passed on the Calendar and not by unanimous consent. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. In view of the applause that is manifested at this statement, I want to ask why this rule was not put in force some three or four months ago?

Mr. MAHON. We have been trying some other method. We can not expect the presiding officer of this House to recognize 356 members here upon private bills. It creates a feeling of injustice, a feeling perhaps against him; but hereafter, in the next session and in the next Congress, private bills will be passed through this House when the regular Calendars are before the House, and not in any other way. I want to serve notice now, so that gentlemen will remember that there is nothing personal in it. Now, if you want to pass these bills or consider them on the Private Calendar on Friday, vote this order down. If you do not want to go to the Private Calendar, pass this rule.

Mr. MILES. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether that notice applies to the remainder of this session?

Mr. MAHON. No.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out so much of the order as relates to Friday.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the previous question has been ordered, and that motion is not in order.

Mr. HOPKINS. Can we have the order read again?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor, but as to the motion which he makes, the point of order has been raised against him.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I am informed that it is not in order to move to strike out so much of this rule as refers to Friday; but I want to call the attention of this House to the sneers of contempt that are visited upon the chairman of the Committee on War Claims by the leaders of this House when that committee seeks to have the debts of this Government honestly paid, or at least considered in this House.

This House has been growing worse and worse for years in refusing to consider claims conceded to be due to citizens of this country. We can sympathize with Cuba, we can sympathize with Venezuela, but we can rob citizens of this country; and when some of us who have constituents robbed by this Government seek a day for consideration, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] can move to adjourn over from Friday until Monday. They can throw away the time of this House, instead of treating private citizens decently. I want to say that if God spares my life and my constituents return me to the Fifty-fifth Congress, this thing will end. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I will yield to a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the honor of being chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I will ask him if any measure reported from that committee has had consideration in the morning hour or on any special day?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I want to say, in answer to that, in view of the Presidential election, there is a disinclination upon both sides of this House to consider a question so serious as finance or banking. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not include this side of the House in that suggestion.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That is the feeling which pervades both sides of this House and the leading citizens of this country who are interested in these questions. And let me say here that the contempt and contumely that is visited upon men because they take some interest in public affairs, because they happen to be known as politicians, is miserable and contemptible on the part of those who visit upon them such characterization.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I must have a few minutes of my time. [Laughter.] We may condemn politicians as much as we like, but they are the only men who have any interest in public affairs of any value to the country. The bankers are not politicians. Bankers will not do anything in the matter unless they are at the same time politicians; and they are not going to do anything in the matter in view of a Presidential election. But let me tell you and the country that the Committee on Banking and Currency will be heard from in this Congress yet.

In the second session of this Congress and in the next Congress the rules of this House will either permit us to do the business of the private citizens, or there will be no business done. We have got to a place where reform in our rules is necessary; and there are some members in this House who are going to have it. I want to say to the three or four men who are ruling this House with a rod of iron that their peculiar rule will end at the end of this Congress; at any rate, if a dozen or twenty of us shall be returned to the next Congress, better rules must be had. Members who have been eight and ten years here have been unable to get honest claims considered by this House. It is very easy to sneer at these private citizens who are being robbed by the General Government, men whose robbery is perpetuated and smiled upon, and we are treated with contempt by the leaders of this House when we try to get a day to consider their bills. As long as I have been cut off from making this motion, I have made my protest; and there are fifty men in the House of the same opinion, not cheap men, not cheap-johns, seeking to make speeches here for buncombe to be consumed at their homes, but men striving strenuously to honestly do the public business.

Mr. MAHON. I move to recommit.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to say to the House that this rule simply gives two days to the Committee on Labor, with the exception of such time as will be needed on Friday to dispose of the unfinished business on the Private Calendar. That will embrace the pension bills that have been reported from the Committee of the Whole. I hope that no one will question the propriety of giving the Committee on Labor a day or two in this House. The commission bill is supported by the united voice of labor in this country——

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will you allow me a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. And the arbitration bill—excuse me a moment—has also the support of the labor interests and the railroad interests of this country; substantially on the part of the railroads, but not entirely so. Both are bills that have received the almost unanimous approval of the country. The Committee on Labor have been pressing us to give them a day or two, and we have given them two. I hope the propriety of letting the Committee on Immigration have the time that has been allotted it will not be questioned.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. In a moment. Now, we of the Committee on Rules are not here as dictators. We are assigned to committees, as the gentleman from Massachusetts is assigned to a committee, and our obligation is to discharge our duty to this House as best we know how.

Everybody knows the situation of this country in respect to payment of claims. Even before the present business condition came upon the country, the other side, when in control of this House, did not dare to allow claims to be passed and sent to the Treasury for payment.

Mr. MAHON. The Republicans always did.

Mr. HENDERSON. When you know, gentlemen, that the money is not in the Treasury to pay these claims, and when we have work to do which will tell in benefit to the country, why spend the time of this House in considering claims that you have not the money to pay? It is not a theory, it is an absolute condition, that confronts us, and I believe, with all due respect to every gentleman—and there is no sneer or taunt in anything that I say—I believe that the judgment of this House on both sides is against spending our time in the consideration of private claims or war claims in this period in the history of the country.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. If I am going to yield at all, I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts; who first made the request.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the gentleman why the leaders of this House can adjourn over day after day and day after day, and thus consume time, and then tell us that we have not time to consider these claims? And I want to ask another question on top of that.

Mr. HENDERSON. One at a time, please.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. This country has all the money that there is in the country to pay its honest debts [applause], and this Congress is culpable, and both parties are running neck and neck in the meanest business ever engaged in by legislators, cheating citizens who have just claims against the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not yield for a speech. The gentleman from Massachusetts refers to the adjournment over Saturday. The leaders of this House can not adjourn the House.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. They can, and they have done it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know what the gentleman means by "leaders." He is chairman of a great committee of this House and one of the leaders of the House on questions of banking and currency, but the leaders can not adjourn this House. One man can make a motion to adjourn on Saturday, but it takes the "leadership" of 356 members to adjourn this House.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That is nonsense. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Do not plead the baby act, gentlemen. If you are in your seats, this House can not be adjourned without the consent of a majority of you. But why have the majority adjourned over Saturday? You all know perfectly well that toward the end of a session it is difficult to get a quorum to do business on Saturday. Frequently that day is devoted by members to bringing up their Department work, which the business of the week has forced them to neglect. Frequently members go home and stay over Sunday.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. "Do not plead the baby act." [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not pleading the baby act. I never plead the baby act.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts, Well, I do not plead the baby act either.

Mr. HENDERSON. But, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I am tired of this talk about "leaders." I for one am willing to become a bumper, if you please, for people to hit and sneer at, but I will continue to do my duty the best I know how, and if the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency will do the same he will retain his own self-respect, even if other people do sneer at him, which I do not know of their doing.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That is exactly the business you are engaged in now. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Now, it is true that this country is rich. We have money, but we know perfectly well that we are mortgaging the country and that the absolutely necessary appropriations of this Government, which are being given with courage and with wisdom, great as the portfolios from the Committee on Appropriations are—we know, I say, that the absolutely necessary appropriations to carry on the Government tax us, under present conditions, as far as we ought to be taxed in the judgment of the people of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], if he desires to be heard.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I only want to say a word or two. I think that when the record of this session of Congress comes to be made up, taking into consideration all the surroundings, it will be found in efficiency and wisdom second to that of none other of recent years. With a great membership of 356, it is impossible to do all the business that ought to be done. We have had much of pension business this session, yet with all the time that has been devoted to it the Pension Office, when under proper administration, could in three days have done the same business; could do and ought to do in that time more business than this Congress—both House and Senate—will have done at this session. So with claims. If we should undertake to consider and dispose of all the claims that are pending there would be no time for the public business. Now, I want to say again that the matters of complaint from time to time among ourselves—and I do my full share of complaining and "kicking"—arise out of the system. The country has grown to be so great, that it is practically impossible to do the public business in the time of a session of Congress, let alone the business that individuals are interested in, and it taxes and it will tax the best wisdom of Congress to devise some means to dispose of claims and all that class of business with justice to the claimant and to the Government other than the methods which have been heretofore applied.

Mr. DANIELS. In view of the gentleman's statement, and in view of the large number of private claims before the House, does he not think it would be wise to assign an evening every week, as we do to pensions, to consider and dispose of those claims?

Mr. CANNON. Possibly so; yet even by that method you would not make any great impression upon that class of business. Private claims, depending upon the action of Congress, I take it, can not in the future receive due attention under existing conditions, and while gentlemen may chafe at it, as we all do chafe at it, there is the fact, and the best way is to keep our temper and devise some proper general legislation by which this business can be done outside of Congress, with justice to the claimant and safety to the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CANNON. If I have time; I have but a minute.

Mr. MAHON. I wish to ask you this question: Whether we can pass many private claim bills or not, do not you think the proper way is to go to the Private Calendar instead of proceeding by unanimous consent?

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly content; but unanimous consent means the consent of every one of 356 members, and the necessity for resorting to it in some cases is obvious in view of the crowded condition of the Calendar.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The gentleman has referred to the necessity of a tribunal outside of Congress for the adjustment of these claims. When that has heretofore been done, has the Committee on Appropriations appropriated the money to pay them?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, such findings under the law were referred for the further consideration of Congress, and under the rules of the House the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction. The Appropriations Committee, I will say, have done their work to the best of their ability in reporting measures for the consideration of Congress under the rules of the House.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But they have given no opportunity for the consideration of these claims when reported back.

Mr. CANNON. The Appropriations Committee are the servants of the House under the rules made by the House. Let us keep our heads, gentlemen, and go ahead and perform our business under present conditions. With a House that is Republican, with a Senate that is not Republican but worse than Democratic [laughter], and with a President whom the Democrats in part repudiate, it is impossible to enact proper economic and financial legislation. Let us keep our heads and do the public business as best we can—and we are doing it, so far as the House is concerned, pretty well [laughter]—and let us appeal to the people for complete power, House, Senate, and President; and with power, let us bring to our duties clear and wise heads, and adopt proper legislation to cure existing ills. That is all I want to say.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, let us understand about the time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and myself have spoken in the time in favor of this resolution; the other gentlemen in opposition to it. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much time is there on the other side?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I reserve the residue of my time for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am not complaining of the record of this Congress as it is made up; I do not say it will not compare favorably with the record of other Congresses. I am complaining that there is a design upon the part of the leaders that has been executed with an unrelenting hand in the four Congresses of which I have been a member to hinder and prevent the consideration of the honest claims of private citizens to whom this Government is justly indebted, and the postponement of whose claims is bringing embarrassment and injury to those citizens. The leaders of this House on the Republican side and on the Democratic side, whichever party may be in the majority, have been determined that those claims should not be considered and should not be paid. Whenever under the rules even there have been days assigned for the consideration of such claims, means have been taken to continue useless and frivolous debates, with the distinct purpose of defeating consideration and action upon those claims.

It is conceded that our system is a bad one. Certainly it is; but it is continued Congress after Congress by the leaders of whichever party may be in the majority, to their discredit. Shall it never end? Shall men be answered by saying they are losing their heads because they demand that this villainous system shall end? We are here giving notice now that in the next Congress rules shall be devised that will give fair consideration to bills of this character. We know that bills which have passed this House at one session and then passed the Senate, and for want of time failed to receive the President's signature—bills which have passed committees of the two Houses unanimously session after session—receive no more consideration, have no more chance of passage, than bills that are brought into this House for the first time and by a divided committee—by the vote of a bare majority. Bills that every committee of this House, every committee of the Senate, every member of Congress whose attention is called to them, session after session, say ought in justice to be passed, have no precedence, have no standing, have no consideration. And the leaders of both parties connive against passing them to keep down appropriations. Why? Because they say we have not money enough in the Treasury. When we have been paying off our public debts by hundreds of millions, we have no money for the honest private citizen of this country who is the creditor of this Government.

I want to say, as I have said before on this floor, with as cool a head as any man ever had, that it is a burning shame that this Government should present to the world a spectacle such as no other government presents of abusing and robbing her own citizens. And Representatives on this floor can get no chance for the consideration of honest claims due their constituents. If there is any love of justice in this House, if there is any genius for legislative business, why not so fix our rules that these claims can be considered and paid? No money in the Treasury! There is always money in an honest man's hands to pay an honest debt, or else he is willing to compromise like an honest man, and not deny the existence of the debt and put off his creditors, saying, "Go, and come again, and to-morrow I will pay, when thou hast it by thee," which is damned by every honest man and condemned by every principle of honesty. [Applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], my colleague on the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MAHON. How much time remains to the other side?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I reserve my time.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I will make no complaint. I am standing here simply as the chairman of a committee demanding the rights of that committee. That is what I am asking at the hands of this House and its leaders; and when the time comes I will make a motion to recommit this resolution with instructions to strike out the word "Friday" and insert "Monday." I have no inclination to deprive the Labor Committee of the right to consider important measures which it has reported; but I want to emphasize the fact that there are upon the Private Calendar bills for the payment of money honestly due by this Government to its citizens, for property taken by the officers of the Army of the United States, to feed your soldiers on the field or in camp; for property, too, taken since the war closed, which has gone to supply the Army and other departments of the Government.

I stand with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] when I say that up to the Fifty-first Congress, a Republican Congress, which passed bills of over $600,000 for the payment of these honest claims—prior to that no Republican Congress ever repudiated honest and just claims of private citizens. The Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses for some reason did refuse to make provision for these claims.

Now, I appeal to this House to give us Friday for the consideration of these measures, the only day fixed by the rules on which bills on the Private Calendar can be considered. I repeat, and I say it without any reflection upon any member of the House, that this way of picking out this or that private claim and passing it by unanimous consent is an outrage upon two-thirds of the members of this House, whose constituents are absolutely denied a hearing because we can not reach the Calendar.

I make no complaint of anyone. I have been treated with as much kindness as any other member of the House by the presiding officer. But I want to say as a member of Congress that this method of securing consideration for private claims is distasteful to me; I do not like it. I feel in such a case that I am trespassing on time that belongs to others, and that I am making myself an annoyance, and possibly a nuisance, to the presiding officer of the House. I believe that we ought to insist that the rules of the House should be enforced and that all bills on the Private Calendar should be considered and passed in the regular way and not as individual bills singled out and passed by unanimous consent. I give notice now to you gentlemen who want Friday appropriated for the consideration of these private bills that I shall make a motion to recommit this resolution with instructions to strike out "Friday" and insert "Monday"; and if you want your bills considered, vote for this motion; if not, vote against it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why not name Tuesday instead of Monday? Monday is set apart by the rules for other purposes; it is District day.

Mr. MAHON. I should have no objection to naming Tuesday instead of Monday. Personally, I have no interest in this matter; but I say we should do justice to these people to whom the Government is indebted. We can pass bills here appropriating $70,000,000 for rivers and harbors; we can pass other bills running into the millions. Why not do justice to private claimants? If it is said we have not money to pay these private citizens, then let the Government borrow money from people who are glad to lend it, and with the proceeds pay the honest debts due these claimants, who have already been kept waiting far too long. [Applause.] We may as well issue bonds to pay honest indebtedness of the Government due to private citizens as provide in that way for general expenses.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, it must be apparent to every fair-minded man in this House who is not carried away by his temper——

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. To whom do you allude? [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL (continuing). That the Committee on Rules can by no possibility have any personal interest in this matter. The members of that committee are not the leaders of the House in the sense in which that term has been used here to-day, but the servants of the House.

Mr. PICKLER. They are the controllers so far as legislation is concerned.

Mr. DALZELL. They are the servants of the House, to see that its business is carried on in an orderly manner, and the controversy here to-day, if there be a controversy between any two parties, is a controversy between the Committee on Labor seeking to pass legislation demanded by the interest of both capital and labor in this country upon the one hand and the gentlemen who seek consideration of private claims on the other hand.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That demagogy will not go.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I will not suffer myself to be interrupted by the impudence of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

I say that the controversy that you gentlemen are to settle, if there be a controversy, is between the Committee on Labor and those who desire the consideration of private claims. Now, what does that controversy amount to? How much is involved in this question about which we are having a tempest in a teapot? Two hours, and only two hours. All that it is proposed to give to this committee on Friday is what may remain of that day after the unfinished business shall have been disposed of. I venture the assertion that it will not amount to two hours. And what would you do in those two hours if this resolution be not adopted?

I appeal to members of this House who have had experience here, do you mean to say that in those two hours of Friday you would accomplish anything with the Private Calendar? Do you mean to say there is any possibility of passing a single bill upon it? You know there is no possibility of any such thing. Those two hours that you gentlemen propose to waste we propose to utilize in the interest of the laboring men of this country.

Now, suppose we yield this matter; suppose the House, instead of the Committee on Rules, in these the closing days of the session, shall undertake to arrange a programme; then what are you to do with the business of importance that yet remains undisposed of? The Judiciary Committee will require at least one day, perhaps two, for the transaction of very important business pending before it. There are four election cases ready to be argued, involving questions of the highest possible privilege, the right to a seat in this House; and it would be a disgrace, Mr. Speaker, to Congress if it should adjourn with these election cases on the Calendar undisposed of. There are other important committees clamoring for time.

So I end, as I began, with the statement that the controversy is one over only two hours that we propose to utilize and you propose to waste. It is a controversy which, if carried against the Committee on Rules, means simply that you and not they must arrange the programme of business for the balance of the session.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. I understand that this order gives to-morrow and what is left of Friday to the consideration of bills from the Committee on Labor. That precludes the Committee on Invalid Pensions from having any more time this session, does it not?

Mr. DALZELL. Why, the committee will have Friday nights, I suppose.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, well; Friday night! There are 300 bills and 300 members clamoring for them——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why not substitute Saturday for Friday in this order?

Mr. DALZELL. Because another bill has been provided for consideration on that day.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What is that?

Mr. DALZELL. To repeal section 61 of the Wilson bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, we generally find ourselves on Saturday without enough members to transact business.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If you repeal the whole of that bill we will be glad to give all the time necessary.

Mr. DALZELL. And we would be very glad to do so if we could. I can assure the gentleman, though, that when the next Congress convenes we will proceed—in special session—to do so.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Do you suppose the Senate would pass that bill if you did?

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask a vote.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Rules, with instruction to substitute Tuesday of next week for Friday, so that it will read Thursday of this week and Tuesday of next week.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is the rule subject to such a motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. MAHON. That will have the same effect; it will give the committee two days.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. I move to substitute whatever days the gentleman wants next week—Tuesday and Wednesday—for the Committee on Labor, and that Thursday of this week be assigned to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. That motion will not be in order.

Mr. PICKLER. Why?

The SPEAKER. Because you can not accomplish by a motion to reconsider what could not be accomplished by an amendment. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recommit, with instructions to substitute Tuesday next for Friday in the order.

Mr. DALZELL. That will cut out the consideration of an election case if adopted.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MAHON, the House divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 128.

So the motion to recommit with instructions was rejected.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a question for information. If this rule is adopted, will it prevent another day from being given to the consideration of private pension cases?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; undoubtedly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota says "yes," and the Chair says "no." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. It will not prevent the committee from having another day, provided the House under proper circumstances shall choose that way. Otherwise it will.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. An amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. PICKLER. My amendment is similar to that offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order. But one motion to recommit can be entertained.

The question being taken on the adoption of the resolution, the Speaker announced that it was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

CHANGE OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires, in the first place, to submit to the House some changes in regard to conferees. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], one of the conferees on the pool-table bill, desires to be excused from serving, and if there be no objection his request will be complied with, and the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CURTIS] as a substitute.

On the bill H. R. 2648, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. JOY] desires to be excused. Without objection, the request will be granted, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MURPHY] will be appointed in his stead.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be read.

Mr. KEM. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska demands the regular order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This will only take a moment.

Mr. KEM. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM] insists upon the regular order. The Chair understands that there is a conference report to be submitted.

CAPITAL RAILWAY COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the conference report which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 888) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Capital Railway Company," approved March 2, 1895, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Also, in section 1, line 7, strike out the word "for" and insert the word "have," so that the phrase shall read, "have a common seal"; and that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the second amendment of the House, and agree to the same amended to read as follows: "Also continuing from said Eleventh and M streets, north on Eleventh street to the south building line of East Capitol street"; and that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the third and fourth amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the fifth amendment of the House, and agree to the same, with an amendment, so that section 4 shall read as follows:

"That the portions of the company's routes from Congress or Pencote Heights to Shepherd's Landing and the Harrison street branch east to the District line shall be completed within two years from the passage of this act: Provided, That failure to complete the said portions of the routes as provided for in this section, and also failure to complete the extension on Eleventh street east, shall operate to repeal the authority to build said portions, and shall not repeal the charter of said company."

And that the House agree to the same.

J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
CHARLES J. FAULKNER,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I call for the regular order, the consideration of the immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is the bill relating to immigration. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WILSON] is recognized.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, neither of the great political parties of this country can claim as its own peculiar product the laws upon our statute books in restriction of immigration. They are the result of the combined wisdom and patriotism of both parties, extending over a period of more than fourteen years.

The subject is wholly nonpolitical. It is national in its scope, in its bearings, and in its effects, as much so as the Monroe doctrine or the cause of Cuba. It is too high and too broad to be made the hobby of the politicians. Its necessity and its justification is in the maintenance of the standard of American citizenship and the protection of American labor.

In the beautiful and eloquent speech to which we listened yesterday afternoon I was surprised to hear that the record, the traditions, and history of the great Democratic party in this country should be stated to be in opposition to bills of this character. Why, Mr. Speaker, from the beginning of our history, from the days of Jefferson, the great slogan of that party has been "America for Americans," the protection of this isolated land for the benefit of its own citizens; and only in our last national convention, in 1892, we find a plank in the platform upon which every Democrat can stand, one upon which I stand, and against which I believe no Democrat in this building raises objection, in these words:

SEC. 12. We heartily approve all legitimate efforts to prevent the United States from being used as the dumping ground for the known criminals and professional paupers of Europe, and we demand the rigid enforcement of the laws against Chinese immigration, or the importation of foreign workmen under contract to degrade American labor and lessen its wages, but we condemn and denounce any and all attempts to restrict the immigration of the industrious and worthy of foreign lands.

There is nothing in any of these bills now pending before this body that is in contravention of that principle of the platform adopted in 1892. Nor, Mr. Speaker, is this question to be solved by appeals to sentiment. It is sweet to talk of liberty. The very name of it is music to the ears of every child on our soil; but when it attempts to lure us from the true path that we should take in legislation it loses its melody, and becomes the voice of the siren.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read here in this connection, as bearing appropriately upon the sentiment, an extract from the article of Mr. Rood, in the Forum, volume 14, page 114:

When a stranger visits the anthracite regions [of Pennsylvania], he is filled with sympathy for the poor Italian and Slav. He considers the American residents heartless in the extreme. He is amazed at the way the foreigners are regarded. But a single year spent in that land will show him the truth, no matter how tender-hearted he is. He will then know that disgust should take the place of surprise. He sees a thousand idle Americans and a like number of foreigners slaving for 80 or 90 cents per day. He sees the Americans sending their children to school, supporting churches, living in decent houses, trying to be cleanly and to wear presentable clothing. He also sees the scum of Europe taking the place of the former, content to swarm in shanties like hogs, to contract scurvy by a steady diet of the cheapest salt pork, to suffer sore eyes and bodies rather than buy a towel and washtub, to endure typhoid fever rather than undergo the expense of the most primitive sanitary apparatus.

Now, that is the class in whose behalf liberty is apotheosized! Why, Mr. Speaker, if we are all sensitive to appeals made in the name of humanity, every high impulse in us prompts us to sympathize with the poor and oppressed and to pity the fallen, the degraded, and the criminal, but that is all we can do. We might indulge in the innocent pastime of happy children chasing shadows and pursuing the flitting butterfly by thinking that on this great earth there should be some sacred spot where the weak, the heavy laden, and the oppressed might find an asylum; where the decrepit, the worthless, the thriftless, the degraded, the outcast, the discharged from prisons should find a refuge or a reformatory; but I do not believe there is any man on this broad continent who would ask us to constitute this country such an asylum. There is a liberty that belongs to our own people, a liberty to earn an honest livelihood here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are times when it is appropriate to appeal to liberty, beneath the folds of the Star Spangled Banner, fanned by the breezes that sweep "from the ocean that roars to the ocean that sleeps," while the band plays "Sweet Marie"; but here, in this body, assembled for the purpose of enacting legislation for the benefit, the advantage, and the preservation of the rights of American labor, I say it is not the place for sentiment. We must deal, and are dealing, with actual reality. We have the facts facing us. We have a condition presented to us that demands action on the part of this body. In the closing scenes of this session, within the last two weeks, we are at last accorded the privilege of placing before the country a bill which, if adopted by the Senate, will be a source of gratification, a source of untold joy to thousands of laborers now waiting for employment, and to whose hearts every gale that sweeps from Ellis Island brings the sad tidings that their lives are to be made more miserable, their chances of employment lessened, and their wages reduced by the great tide of this worthless immigration that is flowing from the shores of Europe.

And what do they tell us? Why do they say that this bill should not pass? They assert that this country is big enough and grand enough to welcome the refugees of all lands. I say it is not true, Mr. Speaker. I say that while we have countless thousands of acres of uncultivated land, while throughout the great West there is a domain sufficient to accommodate hundreds of thousands of the unfortunates of Europe, yet, as a practical matter of fact, they do not go there. They do not want to go there. They come across the ocean in ships by thousands and hundreds of thousands. They reach our Atlantic Coast and they stop there.

Now, in view of the shortness of the time remaining for this debate, I shall have to hurry through my remarks in order to give other gentlemen an opportunity to be heard, but before I take my seat I wish to read a few figures for the information of the House. I have culled them from reliable sources. Fifty-eight per cent of the objectionable races of immigrants live in the cities. The North Atlantic and North Central States contain nearly five-sixths of the city population of this country. That section also contains 40 per cent of the total foreign population of the Union.

In 124 of the principal cities of the United States 29 per cent of the total population is foreign born. In the rest of the country it is only 10⅞ per cent. Very little immigration has gone south of the Ohio and the Potomac, or in the transmississippi country south of the thirty-seventh degree of latitude. Three-fourths of the Poles are in the cities of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin. Two-thirds of the Italians are in the North Atlantic States. Two-thirds of the Russians are in New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, North Dakota, Michigan, Illinois, and Kansas. Two-thirds of the Austro-Hungarians are in the North Atlantic States. Of 1,000 immigrants landing at the port of New York during three days of last December, 90 per cent of the illiterates remained on the North Atlantic Seaboard, and during this year since the 1st of January, 95 per cent of those immigrants have remained in the same section of the country. And yet, Mr. Speaker, we are told not to put up the bars against this immigration because there is plenty of room in the great West! That is literally true, but, for all practical purposes in the consideration of this question, the great West might as well be in the same crowded condition as our Northeast, because these immigrants never seek that section.

Mr. Speaker, there is another thought which ought to be brought to the attention of this body. It is that if there is a country anywhere on the face of this globe that should deliberately guard the admission of foreign elements into its citizenship, into the citizenship that goes to make the character of its people, it is these United States, because this beyond all other countries is most wholly dependent upon the character of its citizenship for the character of its Government. It is not a little thing that every year and every week and every day we are admitting into our ports this scum of Europe which is pouring, like numberless rivulets, into the stream of our national life and polluting it from its source to its mouth. And the effect has been already seen, Mr. Speaker.

This is not an idle fancy. It is not theorizing. I am dealing in facts. The records here show that our prisons and our poorhouses and our asylums are largely monopolized by this class, imposing an additional tax upon our people and giving an idea of how the life of the great body politic is being poisoned by their admission. One-third of the insane are foreign-born immigrants. One-half of our criminals and our paupers are foreign born. And yet we are told, in the name of Liberty, that we must admit these classes. Gentlemen say, "Let not this great country raise the flag of proscription against any of the poor sons and daughters of Eve." Why, Mr. Speaker, it is an almost criminal enlargement and perversion of the idea of liberty to say that the laborers of this country should be deprived of the opportunity to earn an honest livelihood simply because, in the name of Liberty, we are invoked to allow every son and daughter of Eve upon this earth to come in.

If this country wanted immigration we would hear a demand for it. The commission appointed to investigate that question have made the investigation and submitted their report. Twenty-seven States have made answer to the inquiry whether they wanted immigration, such as this bill proposes to exclude. Of those 27 States, these 11 want no labor immigration at all: California, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island. Of the remaining 14 States there is only 1 that wishes the undesirable immigration that I have mentioned, consisting of Italians, Poles, Austro-Hungarians, and Russian Jews. Of all the States of this Union that have made response to the inquiry addressed to them, Oregon alone desires laborers of that kind.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Will the gentleman state who answered for the State of North Dakota?

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. I will tell the gentleman later on, or he can take the book and ascertain for himself. He will find it in the commissioners' report.

Therefore I say, Mr. Speaker, that there is no demand anywhere in this country for this class of laborers. Now, I am not inveighing against the admission of immigrants into this country. I know that immigrants, as was said here yesterday, have made this country. We are all immigrants or the descendants of immigrants. We have no objection to the introduction or the admission of producers, of farmers, of those who do not come in competition with our American labor, or of those who do not constitute themselves a tax upon the resources of this country by filling its asylums and its prisons.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what we should do in the absence of our German and Irish friends; we should have no one then to run our politics. Our best citizens, many of them, are immigrants who have landed here and made their homes among us, who have recognized that their destiny is to be linked with ours. But who is talking about the restriction of that kind of immigration? Where is the objection to it? To suppose such an objection is putting up a man of straw.

My distinguished friend from Louisiana asked yesterday why not at once make an iron wall and declare that henceforth no foreigner shall enter upon American soil. I say no one ever dreamed of such a thing. There is nothing in these bills to warrant such a proposition. As I shall show when I come to the consideration of these several bills, they are only directed to that class of laborers who are undesirable, according to the consensus of opinion as expressed from all sections of the country where the subject has been thoughtfully considered. If we admit citizens of this objectionable class, what are we going to do with them? Where are we going to send them? There is already a surplus of labor in this country. I take it no man on this floor will controvert that fact. It is impossible to get statistics, because the census does not touch upon that topic. What we have been able to do is to take the statistics from one or two States. Massachusetts in 1893 took a census on this subject, and the result showed that 29 per cent of the males in that State were unemployed. We all know that in every State of this Union, in every city, perhaps, there are numbers of persons unemployed.

As long as that state of affairs continues how is it to be relieved, what remedy is to be applied under the present condition of financial depression and distress throughout the country if we are to continue to admit without limit this stream of pauper labor from Europe? Every industry that we can think of—mining, manufacturing, and all the avenues of life where labor finds its employment and makes its living—is filled to overflowing now. Yet every day, as the newspapers show us, as the reports authoritatively tell us—every day is bringing thousands of Italian, Polish, Hungarian, and Austrian laborers to this country to come into competition with the labor already out of employment.

Mr. Speaker, the one danger to this country, in the judgment of every writer who has given his forebodings as to the life of the Republic, consists in the surplus of labor, which, when it can find no other avenue by which it can support itself, will resort to violence. And we are admitting this turbulent, lawless, violent, dangerous class of people, reckless of the future, and the attempt that is now made to put a bar against it is characterized as a deprivation of liberty to those who are entitled to it wherever living.

We are told that immigration does not decrease wages. We were told yesterday by the distinguished chairman of the committee that the Commissioner's report so states. Well, sir, I have seen the Commissioner's report, and it distinctly states that wages have been lowered in those localities where there has been congestion of Italians, Hungarians, Slavs, and Canadians—the very class of people against whom this bill is directed.

Now, the inquiry has doubtless occurred to some members on this floor, why am I interested in this matter? Well, sir, aside from my general interest in the country at large, because whatever affects any section of the country affects the South and affects me, I am particularly interested that that fair land, with its boundless possibilities, should not be made the dumping ground of this class of labor which has proven so injurious and destructive to the labor interests of the North and the Northwest. Thus far we have been free from it. We have a contented class of agricultural labor, perhaps as good as the world has ever seen. We do not wish that labor to be brought in contact with this lawless, violent, anarchistic element of Europe. Our factories, which are growing to be such a marvelous development of industry in our Southland, and other labor-employing institutions, are operated by a class of people who are our bone and sinew, who come from our midst, whose lives are linked with ours, who make an excellent class of labor, and who are entitled to the protection of the laws of the country. We do not want that labor brought in competition with the pauper labor of Europe.

I have no hesitation in saying, Mr. Speaker, that while we have stood the devastation of war, while we endured eight years of negro domination, misrule, and corruption, while we have survived the cyclone and the pestilence and the earthquake, yet we do not wish to be subjected to the trial of having this mass of European corruption dumped upon the land and into the factories and workshops of our Southland. If for no other reason, I would ask those of the members of this House whose interests are similar to ours to see to it that the wall is erected against such a calamity. This is the only protection we shall have, because in a few years this mass of labor that is now surcharging the cities of the North and the Northwest will turn its way southward, and then will come the avalanche from which there will be no protection, unless there be some restrictive legislation adopted by Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, has the time come for us to adopt restrictive legislation? I want to give the House some figures to show how rapidly this evil is growing and with what fearful strides it is increasing. I want to show you that the deluge is almost upon us. In 1892, 2,801 immigrants were debarred out of a total of 579,663; in 1893, 1,630 out of 440,739; in 1894, 2,389 out of 288,020.

Under the present laws only 2,211 were debarred or returned, as follows:

Debarred as likely to become paupers	1,333
Debarred as insane	4
Debarred as contract laborers	765
Returned within one year after landing	109
Making a total of	2,211

Now, of this number, 2,211, debarred or returned last year as inadmissible under the immigration laws of the country, Austria-Hungary, Italy, and Russia contributed, as likely to become paupers, 1,087; insane, 2; contract laborers, 626; returned within one year, 27; or 1,742 in all from these countries—making from all the other nations of the world combined only 469 who were inadmissible to land in this country under the laws now in existence, showing the class of labor that now comes in and is so objectionable under the existing laws of the country, and showing how utterly impossible it is to prevent the influx of these people under our existing laws.

We admit the families of immigrants already here, and of the 229,304 steerage passengers arriving during the last year 84,339 were admitted as going to join their immediate families. From July 1, 1894, to June 30, 1895, Austria-Hungary, Italy, and Russia contributed 35,934, who were admitted as going to join their immediate families.

From 1821 to 1890 the total immigration to this country was 15,427,667. Of this number 5,246,613 came between 1881 to 1890, or over one-third of the total number. From 1890 to June, 1895, 2,658,797 more have come; and of this last number nearly one-half, or 1,002,183, came from Russia, Austria-Hungary, Italy, Poland, and Turkey in Europe.

Prior to that the immigration was as follows: From 1861 to 1870, 24,064 only; from 1871 to 1880, 180,082; from 1881 to 1889, 926,116; or for these three decades, 1,131,162. The last five years have introduced nearly as many of this class as the thirty preceding years. In 1861 they were 0.51 per cent of the total population; in 1870 it numbered 1.44 per cent of the population; in 1880 it reached 3.38 per cent of the population, and in 1890 it had increased to 7.5 per cent, which shows the rapidity, the tremendous increase of immigration of this very undesirable class of people, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK] and my friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], in their opposition to the bill in behalf of their German friends, are unwittingly speaking against the best interest of their own friends, because the German element of the country is just as much interested as anyone else—as any other class of the laboring people of the country—in the exclusion of the worthless class of pauper labor with which they must come in competition. Anything that affects the laboring element anywhere in the United States affects the German element as well as any other; and this legislation is directed against that element which is obnoxious only.

How do they get here? In the steerage. Now, if any gentleman here could see one of these great ships, with 800, 900, or 1,000 people packed away in the hold of the vessel like so many cattle; if he could see some of these miserable specimens of humanity, which by reasonable calculation it will take sixteen generations of American civilization to develop into reasonably fair specimens of humanity, and would consider that every ship that comes into this country unloads hundreds of these creatures on our shores, he would realize the tremendous strain that is being brought to bear on our body politic, and the outrageous imposition that is being practiced on the labor of the country in being forced to compete with this foreign element.

Who bring them here? The ships. Are the shipowners interested in the liberties of this country? Why, Mr. Speaker, the only liberty they worship is that which is engraven upon the almighty dollar. They are not concerned in the character of American citizenship so long as they can pack these people away in the holds of their vessels and get $20 a head for bringing them over here. They are those who are interested in opposing this legislation, as explained by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] yesterday.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the commission appointed to investigate this matter should have an opinion worth something, and I find in their report the following statements:

> Through the United States consul at the latter place (Libau) Mr. Stump obtained valuable confirmatory information, and learned that the principal steamship lines landing immigrants at our ports have agents engaged in soliciting business there. He also learned that a firm in Hamburg controlled the letting of contracts for transporting these immigrants in numbers to the steamship lines offering the most reasonable terms per capita.
> From Libau the United States has received the most undesirable immigration landed here during the present Administration. All were most carefully inspected upon arrival, and many were ordered deported and returned. A large proportion of them, however, were landed, it appearing that they were coming to fathers, husbands, children, or well-to-do relatives already here, who were able and willing to assist and give them employment.
> Numbers came on prepaid tickets which were procured in the United States and paid for on the installment plan. A man sending for his wife and children would contract with an agent here to pay a few dollars each week until the ticket was paid for. In the meantime word would be sent to the agent in Hamburg or Libau to procure transportation, and upon payment of the last installment they would be embarked, arriving here destitute and penniless.
> Innumerable frauds were practiced upon the inspectors by persons pretending to be relatives, and some not entitled to land escaped detection, while a few, probably, were returned who should have been landed, but were unable to establish their right to do so to the satisfaction of the United States immigration officials.
> In the investigation of this subject by the Senate Committee on Immigration (Senator HILL, chairman) in May, 1893, it was developed that in an average year the Italian bankers of New York City alone send to Italy $25,000,000 to $30,000,000. All this money can not be regarded as a loss to this country, inasmuch as the work done by those who have earned it has added in some measure to its wealth. Nevertheless, the net result would be very different were the same work done by persons permanently residing in this country and spending their money here.

> The Italian laborer comes now, not under direct contract, perhaps, but with the knowledge that he need only go to the Italian quarter in the port of his arrival to get work, as his countrymen have done before him. Once in this quarter he falls under the influence of the padrone, and thereafter is at his disposition. The padroni still manipulate immigrant labor very much as they please, and it is thus still possible for a contractor to secure within a few hours any number of Italian laborers, skilled or unskilled, at wages 33 to 50 per cent below the American standard. This is an injury as serious, perhaps even more serious, to the latter than direct importation, because of the greater ease and quickness with which their labor can be supplanted.
> The constant influx of foreign labor is naturally and undeniably one of the chief causes of labor depression in this country at present. It is a well-known fact that this importation of the lower classes of Huns, Slavs, and Italians has been the principal cause of violence and dissatisfaction, as every 100 immigrants necessarily force a corresponding number of United States citizens to either accept lower wages or go on a strike and join the already too large army of unemployed.

While other countries have their Discharged Prisoners' Associations for the purpose of unloading this class of criminal and pauper laborers upon other countries, we, through these steamship companies, have agents soliciting the immigration of these people into our country. No wonder that labor all over this country is rising in outraged indignation and calling upon Congress to come to its rescue. Why, Mr. Speaker, I believe that even thus late in the session, when perhaps it is too late to get a bill enacted, this Congress should heed that cry of labor; because they of all the people of this country are most dependent upon the laws for their protection. They are entirely dependent upon us to establish the bar that no other power can establish for their protection.

How does this bill propose to do it? I intended to present to the House the immigration legislation of the country as it now stands. It would be trespassing too much upon the time of the House, and I will incorporate it in my remarks.

The excluded classes now are dissolute women, contract laborers, persons morally, mentally, or physically diseased, paupers, polygamists, and assisted immigrants.

Now, what does the bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], reported by the chairman of the committee [Mr. BARTHOLDT], propose to do? It has been found that this class of immigration to which there is such objection, lower Europe, as it is called, has a percentage of illiteracy ranging from 57 to 30 per cent, as will be shown by tables which I will insert in my remarks.

Of the classes that make good citizens in this country, the north of Europe, the Irish, the Spanish, in those countries the illiteracy does not amount to over 3 per cent. So this test will be a practical application of a bar to the very races that it is our desire and our interest to keep from our shores. We can not mention them by name, by statute, on grounds of public policy and of comity between nations, but we can establish the bar provided in this act, which will accomplish the same purpose.

Now, the bill of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] does not add any other class to those who are already barred. It simply provides for the enforcement of the laws we now have—to provide for the inspection in Europe instead of inspection in our ports. If a man is a worthy immigrant, if he is an immigrant who does not come under any of the debarred classes, why, then, this inspection can not injure him. No damage can be done to the friends of my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK] or of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. Those men are not barred by the Stone bill provision. Provision is simply made whereby, if it had been in force during the past four months, 2,147 Italian immigrants would have been denied entrance at the port of New York.

I do not see how anyone can object to the McCall bill, because when my friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], the chairman of this committee, comes in and reports it as his bill, I think everyone else ought to be satisfied with it. He vouches for it, and the remarks which he has submitted in his very careful and able presentment show that he is opposed to unreasonable restrictions upon immigration. So I take it there will be no serious objection to the McCall bill.

I can not see how any serious objection can be made to the Stone bill, for it simply provides for the enforcement of laws we already have on the statute books, and we certainly all wish that to be done.

Now, as to the Corliss bill, that affects only the Canadian line. It is simply designed to protect the American laborer from competition with the Canadian laborer who resides in cheap Canada, who comes over here and works at reduced wages and takes his wages across the line with him. So I think this House can very safely pass all of these bills. I do not see how, in justice to American labor or to the citizenship of this country at large, it can do less. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

APPENDIX.

[Containing documents and tables referred to in Mr. WILSON'S remarks.]

IMMIGRATION LEGISLATION.

First act, August 3, 1882. Imposes a head tax of 50 cents upon each immigrant, to be collected from the vessel bringing him or her. This was increased to $1 by act of 1894, August 8. Empowers Secretary of Treasury with making arrangements with State commissioners to prevent the landing of and to deport foreign convicts (nonpolitical), lunatics, idiots, and persons liable to become public charges.

Authorizes Secretary of Treasury to make rules and regulations to carry act into effect.

Second act, June 26, 1884. Exempt passengers on vessels exclusively employed in the trade between the ports of the United States and of Canada and Mexico, until immigration laws are extended to land carriage.

Third act, February 26, 1885. Prohibits prepayment of transportation, or the assistance or encouragement to immigrate, of any alien under any kind of contract or agreement, declares the contract void, provides a penalty against contracting parties and against the transporter having knowledge of the contract. Exempts professional persons, and personal and domestic servants, and any member of the family or any relative or personal friend.

Fourth act, February 23, 1887. Empowers Secretary of Treasury to secure the deportation of aliens coming in violation of the contract labor law of 1885.

Fifth act, October 19, 1888. Authorizes such deportation within one year after arrival.

Sixth act, March 3, 1891. Declares the classes excluded (in addition to the Chinese) to be: Idiots, insane persons, paupers, or persons likely to become a public charge, persons suffering from a loathsome or a dangerous contagious disease, those convicted of a felony, or other infamous crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude (but not political offenses), polygamists, and anyone who is assisted to come with the money of another, unless such person shows that he does not belong to one of the above classes and is not a contract laborer excluded under the act of 1885; but persons living in the United States are not prohibited from sending for a relative or friend who is not of the excluded classes, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Amends the act of 1885 (contract-labor act) by removing the exemption in favor of "any relative or personal friend," and by extending the exemption to "ministers, professional men, and professors." Prohibits the assistance or encouragement of the importation or migration of any alien by any promise of employment either orally or by advertisements, except by State and immigration bureau advertisement, and any alien coming in consequence of such advertisement is to be treated as coming under a contract.

Prohibits vessels from seeking immigrants except in the usual commercial letters, advertisements, etc., stating the sailings of the vessels, the terms, and kind of transportation.

Punishes by fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment not more than one year, persons or vessels bringing or aiding in bringing into the United States an inadmissible alien.

Provides for deportation of an alien coming in violation of law, or likely to become a public charge, within one year after arrival.

Seventh act, March 3, 1893. Requires each commander of vessels to make out lists in groups of 30, sworn to by himself and surgeon, giving name, age, sex, married or single, occupation, ability to read or write, nationality, last residence, seaport of landing in United States, destination, whether having a ticket to such destination, whether passage paid by himself or by others, amount of money on hand if under $30, if going to join relative, name and address; whether ever before in United States, if so when and where; whether ever in prison or almshouse or supported by charity; whether a polygamist; whether under labor contract, express or implied; condition mentally and physically.

WHAT OUR IMMIGRANTS ARE DOING FOR US.

Prisoners.

The Census of 1890, Part II, page 169, says: "Taking into account only the 105,885 parents whose nationality is known, 43.19 per cent of crime committed by white persons in the United States is chargeable to native white; 56.81 per cent to foreign element."

	Census of 1880.	Census of 1890.
Total prisoners in United States	59,255	82,329
Total white prisoners	42,294	57,310
Native white prisoners	29,377	40,471
Foreign-born prisoners	12,917	15,932

By Census of 1890, Part II, page 182, number of native-born white convicts in penitentiaries was 12,842; number of foreign born or with foreign parentage was 15,598, or 54 per cent of the total. Thus a foreign-born and foreign-parent population which is 38 per cent of the total white population, furnishes over one-half of the white convicts of the United States.

Insane.

[Not including feeble minded and idiots.]

	1880.	1890.
Total insane in United States	91,997	106,254
Total native white	59,494	64,419
Total foreign born	26,346	35,300

Thus, in 1880, 28.8 per cent of total insane persons were foreign born. In 1890, 33.2 per cent were foreign born. So that a foreign-born population, which is only 14.77 per cent of the total population, furnishes one-third of all the insane in the United States.

Paupers.

The census of 1890, Part II, page 174, says: "Taking into account only 108,802 parents whose nationality is known, 41.56 per cent of white inmates in the almshouses of the United States is native white; 58.44 per cent is of foreign element."

	Census of 1880.	Census of 1890.
Total paupers in United States	67,067	73,045
Total white paupers	61,316	66,578
Total native white	38,349	36,646
Total foreign born	22,961	27,648

Thus in 1880 37.4 per cent of total white paupers were foreign born. In 1890, 41.5 per cent were foreign born.

Thus a foreign population which is 17 per cent of the total white population furnishes nearly one-half of the white paupers in the United States.

In 1869 the immigrants from Austria-Hungary, Italy, Russia, and Poland were about one one-hundredth of the number from the United Kingdom, France, Germany, and Scandinavia; in 1880, about one-tenth; in 1894, nearly equal to it. In 1889–1894 the former class amounted to 1,057,229, or 38.8 per cent of the total immigration.

With but few exceptions these immigrants were bound either to the large cities or to manufacturing and mining centers. Thus, those destined for New York State were going to New York City, Brooklyn, Buffalo, Syracuse, etc. It is probable that a small number of those giving New York City as their destination are ultimately distributed to other places.

From the above table it appears that 95.3 per cent were destined for New England, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania.

Of those destined for "other States," 31—or less than 1 per cent—were bound to States west of the Mississippi River, and only 11 to States south of Pennsylvania and the Ohio River, while only 3 were going to the Southern States proper.

The padroni.

JANUARY 11, 1895.

SIR: Complying with your instructions of January 10, 1895, we proceeded to the Astor House, where, by appointment, we met Joseph Desabadia, an Italian padrone principal, who has recently been engaged, with 86 Italians, in cutting sugar cane for a Mr. Addison, of St. Cloud, Fla. In the course of the conversation with Mr. Desabadia we learned that he had returned from St. Cloud, Fla., via the Mallory Line steamship Rio Grande, arriving in New York on Monday, January 7. At that time he was accompanied by 47 Italians, all of whom had been engaged under his direction in cutting sugar cane at the aforementioned place for the said Mr. Addison. Mr. Desabadia informed us that he was regularly engaged in supplying Italian laborers in any numbers to contractors or others desiring labor done; that he was prepared now to furnish from 200 to 600 men, Italians, for work of any nature; that he could furnish stone masons, carpenters, or men of almost any of the building occupations.

Asked as to recent importations of this labor from Italy, he said that the men had principally been here for some time; that he did not send, nor did he know of any case in which Italian principals or bosses here had sent, to Italy for laborers. The customary proceeding was, upon the arrival of a vessel, for the boss to approach the Italian immigrant passengers and offer to secure them work. In this way they attached to themselves large bodies of Italians, who regarded this man as principal in securing them employment. He stated that there were numbers of these persons in New York, each one having a large following of Italian laborers whom they in a measure controlled.

In the employment of these men in sugar-cane cutting, Mr. Desabadia stated that the before-mentioned Addison had telegraphed to an Italian banker named Liccione, of 118 Mulberry street, New York, to secure for him a large body of Italians and send them to Florida. This request was turned over to Desabadia, who proceeded, with 86 men, to St. Cloud. As the agent, Desabadia received a commission of $25 from the Mallory Steamship Line for the sale of the transportation tickets each way, and as a compensation from Addison a salary of $2 per day as foreman. At the conclusion of the work these men all returned to New York. At White Plains, N. Y., with a large body of Italians, Mr. Desabadia had previously performed a considerable amount of street and road grading for a New York firm.

Respectfully submitted.

STIRLING BIRMINGHAM,
CHAS. M. HINKLE,
Immigrant Inspectors.

Mr. EDWARD F. MCSWEENEY,
Secretary Immigration Investigating Commission.

A typical instance of the workings of the padrone system has been thoroughly investigated by the Commission.

In the fall of 1893 work was begun on a sewerage contract at Brunswick, Ga. Local labor was employed at $1 per day, and 7 miles of sewerage had been completed by the spring of 1894, when work was discontinued in obedience to a local ordinance forbidding the turning up of earth during the warm season. When the contractor was ready to resume operations the following October he offered the local laborers only 90 cents per day, payment to be made in cash every two week or in scrip on demand. The laborers were mostly obliged to take the scrip, which, on being presented to the local traders, was found to be worth but 80 to 90 per cent of its face; that is, the wages of those paid in scrip amounted to no more than 80 cents per day. One of these scrip orders, redeemable at 10 per cent discount, was purchased by a representative of this Commission, and a facsimile is attached hereto:

No. 0366. BRUNSWICK, GA., December 19, 1894.

Pay to 255

$2 in merchandise.

Subject to agreement between party accepting this order and the undersigned.

HERBERT TATE.

This scrip system naturally caused dissatisfaction, and, although no strike was declared, many stopped work. Notwithstanding the fact that the current rate of wages for sewer work in that section was $1 to $1.25 per day, the contractor refused to consider any compromise, claiming that he could get plenty of Italian laborers at the same or even a cheaper rate than he was paying. And he proceeded to make good his claim.

The last of October the Commission learned that a large number of Italian laborers were about to be sent to Brunswick by an Italian banker of New York City, and a representative of the Commission was on the wharf the 2d of November, when the first load of laborers was shipped. They were 215 in number, and each of them paid the banker $1 for finding the employment. They were stowed away in the hold, which had been fitted with temporary bunks of rough pine boards for this purpose. Their passage money, $7 per head, was paid by the banker, with the understanding that the sums thus advanced were to be deducted from their wages. Whether the steamship company allowed the banker a commission on the passage tickets was not ascertained.

November 5 the men were landed at Brunswick by the banker's agent and installed in nine negro huts of three rooms each on the outskirts of the city. A tenth hut was used as a dwelling and provision store by the agent. For the ten houses the agent paid only $25 a month, but each laborer paid the agent for his quarters in them $1 a month, $215 in all, a clear profit of $190. All supplies had to be bought at the agent's store, the penalty for disobedience being a fine of $5.

The following tables show the food prices current in Brunswick and the prices paid the agent:

Article.	Prevailing prices in the city of Brunswick.	Prices paid by Italians for supplies.
	Cents.	Cents.
Bread ..... per loaf	5	10
Meat ..... per pound	8 to 10	*10 to 12
Lard, 3 pounds for	25	39
Macaroni ..... per pound	8	9
Cheese (the best) ..... do	20	22
Beer ..... per bottle	5	7

*Very few arriving were over 60 years of age, and this small number is included in the above figures.

†A very large proportion of those not laborers were sailors, and the balance chiefly stonecutters, shoemakers, and barbers.

* The price paid for this meat at wholesale in the city was 4½ cents per pound.

Tea, coffee, and sugar were not bought at all, as being too expensive. Purchases were entered in a pass book by the storekeeper, and at the end of each month the total was deducted from the wages. Purchases for this period averaged $8 per man. The banker made still further profit by sending money to Italy for the men.

The native laborers suffered many hardships by this displacement of their labor. Some had come to Brunswick from the adjacent country especially for this work, and not only these but many Brunswick citizens were obliged to go to Savannah and elsewhere to find employment for the winter. The feeling against the hiring of the Italians was very bitter among all classes in the city, but particularly among the business men. (For further facts regarding the padrone system, see Appendix E.)

There is little doubt that a similar padrone system exists among Poles, Hungarians, Greeks, Armenians, and Syrians, and that many hardships have come to native laborers in several localities by the transportation thither of gangs of laborers of these nationalities. This subject demands a far more thorough investigation than the Commission has yet been able to make, but, if continued, the Commission hopes to give it the attention it deserves.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, I have yielded half of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] and I desire to be notified if, in the course of my remarks, I should trespass beyond the limits of half an hour.

While listening yesterday to the eloquent and inspiring address of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DINGLEY] remarked to me: "If the principles involved in the speech of the gentleman from Louisiana are correct, why should we not throw open our doors also to Chinese immigration? If our citizenship is for the people of the world, why should the Chinese be excluded?" That query from the distinguished Representative from Maine brought up the whole question of the emigration history of humanity. It is no reproach to either species that the tiger does not mate with the lion. The reason why we exclude the Chinese from the ports of the United States is that by the very nature of their blood and instincts, they are unfitted to assimilate with our civilization.

I apprehend I am saying nothing new or strange to the members of this House when I recall the fact that human kind is divided into three great families, the Aryan, the Mongolian, and the Turanian. The Aryan family is comprised of those five great branches of the human race—the Grecian, the Italian, the Germanic, the Slavic, and the Celtic. I say, with some pride in the race from which my forefathers sprang, that it was the Celtic race which first pushed its way westward in the march of civilization beyond the tablelands of central Asia. Following the banners of human advancement and human progress came the Italian or Romanic race, against which we have heard so many accusations and criticisms in the course of this debate; a race that produced the foremost man that ever walked this earth, the great democratic soldier of antiquity, Julius Cæsar; a race that gave us the Renaissance when humanity seemed to have fallen into utter wreck and ruin; that gave us a Michael Angelo, a Raphael, and a Dante. I wish to say, in passing, that the Celtic race, although it needs no eulogy from me or any other source, has, in the first or second generation, given five Presidents to the United States, and seems now upon the point of giving us another.

Following in the track of the Italic or Romanic wave of emigration, came the Grecian or Hellenic wave, which gave us—and let me say to the gentlemen who object to immigration from the southern shores of Europe that those people and their kindred who colonized southern Italy and Sicily belonged to the Hellenic race—gave, I say, to art the sculptures of Phidias; to government the statesmanship of Pericles; to pure reason the philosophy of Socrates, and transmitted to us in the best sense the noblest elements of modern civilization.

From the standpoint of popular development we owe an equal obligation to the Germanic race, which formed the fourth wave of emigration in the great western march of the Aryan family. From the early village communities of that race we draw, from the principles of their town councils, those democratic ideas which are the historic foundation of this very House now deliberating on this question. We are indebted to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK] for having raised this discussion above the domain of petty individual selfishness into its proper sphere as a great national consideration. We are not here as aldermen of a city or supervisors of a ward. We are here legislating for the foremost government of history, a government not for Americans merely, but, according to the very principles established by the fathers of that Government, the trustee of liberty for all humanity.

I have no patience with that kind of statesmanship which regards a point of order in the procedure of this House as superior to a great and ever-living principle. The Committee on Immigration reported for the consideration of the Representatives upon this floor four bills, but, by an injustice upon which I will not elaborate at the present time, one bill was excluded. We have three bills now in discussion, all of which restrict, in one direction or another, the immigration that is seeking larger possibilities and nobler opportunities in this land of promise.

The McCall bill provides an educational test. I would like to ask how many men there are upon the floor of this House whose ancestors would have been admitted to this Republic if that bill had been in operation at the time of their advent upon these shores? There is not a Representative in this Chamber but in his district has numbers and numbers of constituents unable to read or write, yet grounded in the great principles of human liberty, loyal to the flag, firm in the faith of this Republic, substantial, admirable, and prosperous citizens of the United States. Yet there is not an anarchist that comes to our ports with his hand raised against all civilization who would not be able to pass the civil-service examination of the McCall bill. It is a little late for Massachusetts to attempt to monopolize the patriotism and direct the possibilities of this country. It is futile for a few people in a self-constituted center of American culture to imagine that they can bind with the Lilliputian threads of their theories the forward march of this Republic. I speak within my knowledge, because I spent four years in the academic halls of Harvard University, and I am familiar with Massachusetts conditions. I have stood within the shadow of Bunker Hill Monument, amid the glorious memories of the Revolution, and wondered how, among such associations, the people of Massachusetts should prefer to be New English rather than old American. [Applause.] The assumption that the Immigration League of Boston has a monopoly of correct ideas on this subject is like the attempt to corner the Presidency of the United States. It must necessarily fail, because the spirit and the instinct of this people are against that which would bind their free will or impede their destined development.

I wish to say in regard to the Stone bill that every man who has had any experience in consular or diplomatic affairs must know the absolute absurdity of that measure. It provides for the establishment of an Ellis Island at every consulate of the United States. The great value of consular and diplomatic officers is their agreeability to the people to whom they are accredited; but if you place upon a consul or a diplomatic officer the necessity of discriminating between the applicants from the region in which his consular or diplomatic post is established, you immediately destroy his popularity, and consequently his usefulness. I have before me the letter of the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee [Mr. HITT] to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], in which the chairman says:

If a fee were attached to this duty, you would hear at once from Liverpool, Hamburg, etc., that it was an excellent, beneficent measure.

Mr. Speaker, I think no more sweeping condemnation of the Stone bill was ever penned than is found in that sentence of Chairman HITT, because a consular or diplomatic officer who would permit a mercenary advantage to influence his public action would be, by the essential theory of the State Department, a useless and a discreditable official. This bill would open the door to all sorts of corruption among dishonest consular officers. It would place a pecuniary premium upon evasions of the laws. On the other hand, if you do not establish some compensation for the consular or diplomatic officer so empowered to give certificates, you heap upon the already overworked and underpaid consular and diplomatic corps a new and onerous burden utterly out of proportion to the compensation they receive. I do not believe it necessary to speak further upon the Stone bill. I think the simple statement of these propositions, aside from the consideration of the enormous expense involved for the establishment of the necessary machinery to carry out the provisions of that bill, sufficiently proves its futility and absurdity.

The Corliss bill in its inception was a valuable measure. But under the action of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization a section was incorporated which seems to me to destroy the usefulness of that bill. I will say here, in order that I may not seem to be inconsistent in opposing a measure which originally had my support, that the committee, contrary to my vote, incorporated also in the bill introduced by me and favorably reported by that committee a similar provision permitting the lake shipowners by a kind of special license to hire foreign seamen to man American vessels. The plea for this proposition is that, owing to the alleged scarcity of American sailors, it would be a serious disadvantage to the merchant marine of the Great Lakes to insist upon the exclusive employment of American citizens on American ships. In regard to that let me say that the demand and the necessity will produce the service. If we insist upon Americans manning American vessels, we shall soon have a seafaring class which in time of war might be of the same value as those who in 1812 upheld the supremacy of the United States upon the seas. In the present condition of the Corliss bill, it is brutum fulmen. Its purpose is good, but its provisions weak.

It is a pity that these bills have been jumbled together in what seems to be a hopeless confusion. Had deliberation commensurate with the importance of this subject guided their presentation, I believe we could have evolved out of this tangle of immigration theories some measure that would have been of benefit and utility to the American people.

Let me say briefly in regard to the bill which I introduced that it had and has the united indorsement of all the American associations and federations of labor. It does not create any new class of excluded immigrants. It simply aims to enforce existing laws by the imposition of penalties for violations of those statutes.

At this point I desire to observe in regard to the immigration bureaus at the various ports of this country, and especially in New York City, that I agree with the statement made yesterday by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] that if there is one bright spot in the dark gloom of present Democratic misrule it is the administration of the immigration laws. But, under the wording of the present statutes, United States district attorneys refuse to arraign violators of these enactments, and the bill which I presented for consideration provides a remedy for that condition of affairs and enables the district attorney to carry out in spirit and letter those provisions of immigration statutes which protect American labor. And, Mr. Speaker, I say to the Republican party, as a loyal member of that party, that these laboring people of the United States do not ask for the exclusion of any new classes of immigrants. They simply ask for the better enforcement of the existing laws. They came to a Democratic Congress and asked for bread but received a stone. It remains for the Republicans of this House to say whether this Republican Congress shall treat them with the same indifference and neglect.

We have before us the most important subject that has been presented at this session of the Fifty-fourth Congress. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] said, it is the only question that has assumed the dignity of a plank in two Presidential platforms. It remains for you, gentlemen of the House, to determine whether we shall go before the people in November next and say to them, "We have done nothing for your interests; we have passed the McCall bill to exclude your friends and relatives, because under the tyranny of European governments they have been beaten down into ignorance, from which they are struggling to emerge"; or whether we shall tell them that "under the provisions of the Stone bill fantastic requirements will impede the path of those whose steps are toward the morning"; or whether we shall take up this labor measure, presented here by the united indorsement of labor in the United States, and pass a bill which, while it excludes the unworthy and unfit, throws wide the doors of our Republic to every immigrant honestly desiring to cast in his lot with the great forward march of human liberty as exemplified in our national progress.

Gentlemen, this is a question which you can not decide upon the basis of pleasing this or that vote. It must be settled on the broad plane of highest American thought, which, while conserving our interests, recognizes our strength, understands our possibilities, and is true to our mission and our destiny. A measure framed in this spirit will exclude none who are worthy to share in the unequaled benefits, the glory, and the grandeur of this Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I understood that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] was to yield to me half an hour.

Mr. MAHANY. I yield half an hour to the gentleman.

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I do not stand here to claim that the bill which I had the honor to introduce will exclude all bad men from this country; I do not claim that occasionally a good man will not be kept out and a bad one let in; but I think it is a rational and on the whole the best test that we can apply to the conditions that exist to-day.

I am perfectly well aware that there are some people in this country who do not believe that we should have any restrictions whatever upon immigration. They would be entirely willing that this country should be made even a penal colony, which is the obvious and one of the first uses to which newly discovered countries have been put in the past. I shall not attempt to convince such persons. I shall assume that when a people have conquered a new country, have reclaimed it from the wilderness, and have set up therein their institutions and their laws, they are under some obligation to the body politic into which they are organized. I shall assume that it is their right to protect themselves against the intrusion of hostile or alien or inferior races and to prevent their entrance to an extent which may degrade their citizenship and impair their civilization. Otherwise the destruction of the savage men and the savage beasts which they supplanted would be absolutely inexcusable, if they were to permit their civilization and their country to be tamely given over to the first race that came along, however degraded it might be. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that I shall take that for a starting point in what I have to say.

On the broad principles laid down in this debate, we should admit every immigrant, no matter what his character might be or how our own power of assimilation might be overtaxed. On these principles the exclusion of the Chinese was a wanton outrage. I, however, believe that even if our ancestors did come from abroad, yet, having set up a government for ourselves, it is our duty to look out for its welfare just as much as if we had spontaneously sprung from this soil. To say that because we are a nation of immigrants, as nearly all other nations have been, we should place no restriction on immigration, is a good deal like saying that because Rome was founded by bandits it should therefore forever have been an asylum for the criminals of every nation. We are to do all those things which are necessary to preserve our liberties and our civilization. Even if we are, as might be inferred from some of the broad principles laid down here, a great charitable organization, an international soup kitchen, for the benefit, primarily, of the rest of the world, we should yet do what is necessary to keep our charity shop running to the best advantage and not adopt such utterly loose and unbusinesslike methods as would speedily make us the objects and not the dispensers of charity. [Applause.] But while I believe, Mr. Speaker, that what is best for this nation will broadly, and in the long run, be the best for the world, I shall not waste time to vindicate my action from an international standpoint. It is enough for me that I sit in this American assembly, representing with you the interests of the American people, and I am willing to leave to others those lofty flights into the affairs of the universe, excepting the United States. I think we should try to keep our feet firmly planted on American soil.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one word as to this educational bill, which, whatever it may be christened, I had the honor to introduce here. It was principally prepared and has been especially advocated by the Immigration Restriction League of Boston. As some preposterous statements have been made in this Capitol concerning this league, perhaps I should say a word about its composition. Its president is John Fiske, of Harvard University, whose name is known and honored among scholars the world over. Among its other officers are Samuel B. Capen, Hon. James R. Dunbar, Hon. George F. Edmunds, George S. Hale, Henry Lee, Richmond Mayo-Smith, Robert Treat Paine, Robert Treat Paine, jr., Hon. Henry Parkman, Thomas F. Ring, Nathaniel S. Shaler, Robert De C. Ward, and Prescott F. Hall. A more reputable set of gentlemen were never associated together for the promotion of a great public end. In this list of names both of the great political parties and the Protestant and Catholic churches are represented. These men freely have given their time and money to secure the most careful and scholarly investigation that could be made of the immigration question, and as a result of their labors they have adopted as the most rational and effective measure the educational bill which I had the honor to introduce. I come now, Mr. Speaker, to the reasons for the bill.

During the first century of our existence our immigration was almost entirely made up of the races kindred with ours and kindred with the men who established the independence of this country. And at the end of that century we formed a compact and homogeneous people admirably adapted to our institutions. But at that particular time a great change was seen to take place in our immigration. In 1869 substantially three-fourths of our immigrants came from Great Britain, France, Germany, and Scandinavia, while less than one one-hundredth of them came from Austria-Hungary, Italy, Russia, and Poland. But in 1880—between 1869 and 1880—a space of ten years, this immigration had grown from less than 1 per cent to nearly 9 per cent, while in the same time the immigration from the other group of countries to which I have referred had diminished and gone down from 73 to 64 per cent. In 1890 the Hungarian, Italian, Polish, and the Russian immigration had increased to 34 per cent, or 35 times as much as in 1869, while the immigration from Great Britain, Germany, and Scandinavia had declined to nearly 50 per cent. Thus from one set of countries and from one class the immigration was rapidly increasing—running up; and from the other the immigration in the same proportion was running down.

Mr. Speaker, we can see that this immigration comes in competition not merely with our own people, but these immigrants come in competition with each other. If we open our doors broadly to the Chinese, on the principle that they are a law-abiding people—which they are—or on the principle that they are skillful and cheap laborers—as they are—then the laborers from the higher civilizations, which require more to support and maintain them, can not compete with them; and in the proportion as you admit more Chinese or more of the cheap-labor races you thereby diminish the immigration of or exclude the better races. And this law is demonstrated practically and clearly in the working of the figures which I have cited, so mathematically and so scientifically that it can not be denied.

Now, the figures show that the races that are so well suited to our institutions and civilization have been in the last twenty-five years becoming less and less factors in our immigration, while the other nations, those races which are not suited to our civilization, which are so radically different from us in education, habits of life, and institutions of government, are taking their place and have been coming in more and more. Let us see how the educational test would work on these conditions. It has been believed by the people of the United States, at least until within a short time, that our republican institutions and our republican form of government rest upon the intelligence of the people as one of the main pillars which support them. I know that there has been within a few days a different doctrine promulgated in this country.

A distinguished citizen in my own State has put forth the doctrine that we are in more danger from the literate classes than from the illiterate classes. I do not think the line of illiteracy will divide the morally good from the morally bad; but if that distinguished gentleman will only make an effort to have his ideas promulgated in the platform of the party to which he has the honor to belong, and to which I do not have the honor to belong, and have it proclaimed as a doctrine of his party that we shall establish illiteracy as the sovereign test of citizenship, and that only the man who can not read and can not write shall be permitted to vote, while those who can read and write shall not be permitted to vote, then we may possibly see the spectacle of a great Republic established on ignorance and witness the result of this beautiful theory of his in actual practice. [Applause.]

So I say, Mr. Speaker, that we have been going on the assumption that intelligence was necessary to the maintenance of our free institutions. In the State of Massachusetts, in a single year, we levy taxes to the amount of more than $10,000,000 to be expended in the maintenance of the public schools. That is a per capita which is almost equal to the per capita tax on the people of this country to maintain our national expenditures. We not merely thereby provide for the education of the rich and well-to-do, but every child who desires an education has access to the schools; and in addition to that we have a compulsory system of education, and it is necessary under our system, in order that any child shall graduate into citizenship and become a voter, that he shall be able both to read and write, and I may say that this is a principle which governs largely amongst the great body of the Anglo-Saxon races. They have a system of public education in Germany, Great Britain, and the other north countries which practically banishes illiteracy, and this is clearly reflected in the statistics with regard to the immigration from those countries.

Of the total number of immigrants from Portugal 67.35 per cent were illiterates, from Italy 52.93 per cent were illiterates, from Poland 39.82 per cent, from Hungary about 38 per cent, from Russia 36 per cent, from Austria-Hungary 32 per cent, and so on down through Greece, Turkey, and other races, until we find when we reach Ireland the percentage of illiteracy is only 7 per cent, and on account of the rapid development of the school system there that percentage will every day be dwindling. In France the percentage of illiteracy is 3½ per cent, in England 3.49 per cent, in the Netherlands 3.38, in Scotland 2.8, in Germany less than 2½ per cent, in Norway 1 per cent, in Sweden three-fourths of 1 per cent, in Switzerland six-tenths of 1 per cent, and in Denmark less than one-half of 1 per cent.

So we see a clear line of demarcation between these peoples. We see that the Anglo-Saxon races are able to read and write, and that this bill will practically not apply to them. We know that they are the people out of whose loins this nation sprang; that our institutions will be adapted to them, and that they will be supports to uphold it. On the other hand, we see that the immigration from the Mediterranean ports and from those nations which, however excellent their characteristics may be, have yet peculiarities very different from ours, is in the main illiterate, and that this bill will especially apply to them.

Mr. Speaker, as bad, as adverse as these facts are which I have been citing, an examination of statistics as to recent immigration will show that the degree of illiteracy is even greater among those races than it has been heretofore. In the first three and one-half months of the present year, according to statistics furnished by the Superintendent of Immigration, there arrived in the city of New York more than 19,000 Italians. One year ago there were 11,869 Italians who landed between the 1st of January and the 30th of April. This year, from the 1st of January to the 17th of April, there were 19,946 Italians who landed. Basing the computation upon those who had already embarked, and the probable number that would arrive by the 30th of April of this year, the total number for the four months of this year would be 27,000, as against less than 12,000 during the corresponding months of last year.

Now, let us see how these people are on the question of illiteracy, and how they would be affected by the bill which I have introduced. Three thousand one hundred and seventy-four of these immigrants were examined. The test was actually applied to them. They were not taken, a few from this ship and a few from that, but they were all of the immigrants upon four steamers that sailed from Genoa and Naples during the month of April last. Of these 3,174 immigrants there were 2,147 who were absolutely illiterate. That is 67.6 per cent, or more than two-thirds of this immigration which, as compared with last year, has more than doubled, were illiterate, and would have been kept out under the pending bill. And of those who came we find this significant fact, that 28.7 per cent had been in the United States before, showing that they do not come here to become citizens and cast their lot with us, but that they come here like birds of passage, in great flocks, to pick up whatever they may be able to get and bear it back with them again across the sea.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the worst of this class of immigration. We have gentlemen saying to us that we need people in this country, that we have vast areas of unoccupied territory in Texas and other States, and that we want those territories to be filled up with new settlers. But the great difficulty is that this particular class of immigrants do not go to Texas, do not go to our unoccupied territory, but they settle down in our large cities, in our congested districts. They add to the labor problems that are vexing them, and most of them go into the dangerous slums of our Eastern cities. The destination of these particular 3,174 immigrants of which I have been speaking to you was taken. One hundred and fifty of them were going to Boston. To other parts of Massachusetts there were 34; to the rest of New England there were 180. To New York State and New York City there were 2,276; to New Jersey, 79; to Philadelphia, 137; to Pennsylvania, 176; to Chicago, 34; to other parts of Illinois, 10. And only 62 of this whole number were destined for the other portions of the United States and for Canada. Of those that were going to New York State outside of the city of New York nearly all were destined for Buffalo, Brooklyn, Syracuse, and the other large cities, and of those destined for the other States, 31, or less than 1 per cent, were bound for States west of the Mississippi River, only 11 to States south of Pennsylvania and the Ohio River, while only 3 were going to the Southern States proper.

Now, if our friends from Texas are not particular about the character of their immigration, then I do not think I should object to having it populated, if they insisted upon it, with these races; but the difficulty is that when we admit them to New York and Boston from the decks of our immigrant ships the statistics show absolutely that they do not go to Texas, and that they have no effect whatever in settling unoccupied territories.

And this is simply illustrated, too, by the labor statistics from the special report of the United States Commissioner of Labor for 1894. That report shows that of the population of the slums of Baltimore 77 per cent were foreigners; of Chicago, 90 per cent; of New York, 95 per cent, and of Philadelphia 91 per cent were of foreign birth or parentage. This same report also shows very significantly the nationality of these populations. In the city of Baltimore less than 2 per cent of the total population came from this Austria-Hungary, Italy, Poland, and Russia group of countries. Although they constitute but two one-hundredths of the population of that city, yet 12.72 per cent of the population of these slums is composed of them. Six times as great a percentage of these people live in the slums as they bear to the population of the whole city.

In the city of Chicago this first group of nationalities contribute 6.41 per cent to the total population of the city, and they have 44.44 per cent of the slum population of the city. About seven times the proportion of them live in the slums that live in the whole city, and practically every one of them who lives in Chicago lives in the slum precincts. On the other hand, of the immigration from the United Kingdom, France, Germany, and Scandinavia 30 per cent of the total population of Chicago is made up of them, and only 10 per cent of the slum population comes from them, showing that less than one-third of the proportion of this group of immigrants live in the slums of that city. In New York about 9 per cent of the total population is from the first group of races to which I alluded, and yet 51 per cent of the slum population is their record there; while of the other group the United Kingdom, France, Germany, and Scandinavia give 31 per cent of the total population, while of the slum population they are only 8 per cent. I say that these statistics demonstrate beyond any question whatever that the immigration that this bill would keep out congregates in the slums of our great cities, where resort those dangerous, festering, and explosive elements which more than anything else threaten the destruction of our whole social fabric.

The danger of the slums was eloquently portrayed by Lord Macaulay in his speech upon "Reelection to Parliament," when he said:

* * * In the very heart of great capitals, in the neighborhood of splendid palaces and churches and theaters and libraries and museums, vice and ignorance might produce a race of Huns fiercer than those who marched under Attila and of Vandals more bent on destruction than those who followed Genseric.

I say that the slum problem, made so formidable by the conditions to which I have referred, may yet sadly justify the prediction of Lord Macaulay that as Rome was destroyed by the Huns of the fifth century so this great Republic may be destroyed by the Huns of the twentieth century, except that the Huns of the twentieth century would come from within and be engendered by our own institutions.

Mr. Speaker, there is another very high authority upon this question of the undesirability of having alien races who do not speak our language, who do not care to become and remain a part of us, and who are not accustomed to our institutions settling down by themselves, living by themselves, and forming separate parts of our community. When this nation was established we had an immense territory and few people. We had no large cities. There was every inducement to encourage immigration, and the wisdom of that far-sighted statesman who established this Republic and who was the equal in practical statesmanship of any man ever set to watch over a state, was never more conspicuously shown than upon this very question. In his letter to John Adams of November 27, 1794, George Washington said:

My opinion with respect to emigration (immigration) is that except of useful mechanics and some particular descriptions of men and professions, there is no need of encouragement, while the policy or advantage of its taking place in a body (I mean the settling of them in a body) may be much questioned; for by so doing they retain the language, habits, and principles, good or bad, which they bring with them.

We see here developed to its full extent precisely the very condition which George Washington saw with the eye of a prophet, and in the slums of our great cities can be found hundreds of thousands of people of alien races who settle there with no intention of becoming American citizens, who maintain separate and apart their habits of life, and as far as possible their laws and institutions, and who constitute a great menace to our civilization.

Mr. Speaker, this situation, so clearly shown by the statistics, is also attended with other great practical dangers, and it brings up for our consideration a question which is of vital importance. I can not present this point better than by this illustration in the report of a special investigating commission sent out by the Secretary of the Treasury, which was printed a few months ago:

When a stranger visits the anthracite regions [of Pennsylvania], he is filled with sympathy for the poor Italian and Slav. He considers the American residents heartless in the extreme. He is amazed at the way the foreigners are regarded. But a single year spent in that land will show him the truth, no matter how tender-hearted he is. He will then know that disgust should take the place of surprise. He sees a thousand idle Americans, and a like number of foreigners slaving for 80 or 90 cents per day. He sees the Americans sending their children to school, supporting churches, living in decent houses, trying to be cleanly and to wear presentable clothing. He also sees the scum of Europe taking the place of the former, content to swarm in shanties like hogs, to contract scurvy by a steady diet of the cheapest salt pork, to suffer sore eyes and bodies rather than buy a towel and washtub, to endure typhoid fever rather than undergo the expense of the most primitive sanitary apparatus.

Mr. Speaker, that is something that every man in this House who has observed anything at all has noticed in the section of country in which he may happen to live. With vast numbers already out of employment, we have thousands more added by the competition of immigrants in our overstocked labor market, and who work for wages upon which an American can not live.

I say that it is the duty of the men responsible for the government of this country to protect our civilization against any such a destructive competition, and if we shut our eyes to this condition and permit the degradation of those millions of our fellow-citizens who labor with their hands, and are to-day the pillars upon which our institutions rest, then I say we are false to our trust. We owe it to those who are here and to the millions who are to come to us in the future to maintain the high character of our civilization and to preserve this country for the institutions of America.

Mr. Speaker, this bill which I have introduced will not forever solve the problem of immigration, but I think it will meet the present situation, and if we pass it we will have taken a substantial step.

If I may be permitted just a moment more, as my time has expired, I will close what I have to say by quoting from one of the broadest-minded men who ever lived, and one who never uttered a word that was not instinct with the love of liberty and of his fellow-man, Bishop Phillips Brooks, who said only a short time before he died:

No nation, as no man, has a right to take possession of a choice bit of God's earth, to exclude the foreigner from its territory that it may live more comfortably and be a little more at peace. But if to this particular nation there has been given the development of a certain part of God's earth for universal purposes; if the world, in the great march of centuries, is going to be richer for the development of a certain national character, built up by a larger type of manhood here, then for the world's sake, for the sake of every nation that would pour in upon us that which would disturb that development, we have a right to stand guard over it. We are to develop here in America a type of national character, we believe, for which the world is to be richer always. It may be the last great experiment for God's wandering humanity upon earth. We have a right to stand guard over the conditions of that experiment, letting nothing interfere with it, drawing into it the richness that is to come by the entrance of many men from many nations, and they in sympathy with our Constitution and laws.

[Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7285) for the relief of George McFarland.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2384) for the relief of David O. Burleigh;

A bill (S. 2583) for the relief of Leonard I. Brownson, late first lieutenant Company K, Fifth Vermont Volunteers;

Joint resolution (S. R. 147) concerning the improvement of the Kennebec River, Maine; and

A bill (S. 2753) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon to the Lake Madison Veteran Association, Grand Army of the Republic, of the State of South Dakota.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 2604) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. VILAS, and Mr. CANNON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and had further insisted upon its amendment, and asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6833) defining the standard shape and size for dry measures in use in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. BACON, and Mr. PRITCHARD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 5490) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. WETMORE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia——

Mr. HENDRICK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would say to the gentleman that this is a privileged matter.

Mr. HENDRICK. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the District of Columbia appropriation bills and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. KEM objected.

Mr. GROUT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the District of Columbia appropriation bill and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GROUT. I take it for granted, Mr. Speaker, that the amendments will be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, and, in order to expedite the matter, I desire to say that this is the same report that was adopted by the House last week, with the exception of a single item. After the report was adopted here it went back to the Senate and was there disagreed to because of a single item. That item has now been left out, and we come back to the House with the same report that has once been adopted here, omitting that particular item.

A MEMBER. What is that?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is in relation to appointing commissioners to negotiate with the Fort Hall Indians with regard to their reservation. Mr. Speaker, I move that the report be adopted.

Mr. MOODY. Has the gentleman conferred with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER]?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the gentleman that this has nothing whatever to do with the school question.

Mr. HERMANN. Does this include the Klamath item?

Mr. SHERMAN. It does not. This contains what the House adopted in the report last week, with the Fort Hall item left out.

Mr. HERMANN. The Klamath item was not in the report adopted last week?

Mr. SHERMAN. It was not, and it is not in this.

Mr. HERMANN. What is its status?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is still in conference. I move that the conference report be adopted, and that the House insist on its disagreement to the other amendments and a conference be agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. PENDLETON.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HENDRICK. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I shall ask the indulgence of the House but a very few moments while I attempt to discuss the measures now under consideration, and during that time I promise to confine myself to the bills which are being considered by the House. A great deal of sentimentality and declamation has been indulged in by gentlemen who have preceded me, but when we come to the sober consideration of this subject it will be agreed by everybody that we can not receive much benefit from that character of speaking.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to a discussion of this question unbiased and unprejudiced. There is no considerable foreign element in my community. What few we have are among our best citizens, and there has been no great interest awakened there recently on this subject, so that I think I am in an attitude to discuss the question without any bias or partiality whatever. Mr. Speaker, I believe that I can prove to every lawyer upon the floor of this House beyond a reasonable doubt that the enactment of the Stone bill would be the sheerest folly. This House is a great deliberative body, and it can not afford to indulge in empty legislation; it can not afford to indulge in legislation that would not amount to anything after it was placed upon the statute book. Let me see if I can make my declaration good. I suppose the members of this House when they come to vote upon this question desire to vote intelligently. They desire to do that which they deem best for the whole country and to act from an intelligent standpoint.

Let us see what laws we have on this subject already. We now have laws excluding (1) idiots, (2) insane persons and lunatics, (3) paupers or persons liable to become a public charge, (4) persons who have a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, (5) persons guilty of a felony or other infamous crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, (6) bigamists, (7) assisted emigrants, unless after careful examination they are found not to fall within any of the excluded classes, (8) contract laborers, (9) women imported here for immoral purposes, (10) anarchists, (11) Chinese. These are the classes that are now excluded by the laws of the United States as they exist to-day. I think any reasonable man will agree with me in the opinion that if these laws are properly enforced they are ample to protect every American interest and American institutions generally. But whether that be true or not, I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that the Stone bill would not assist us in the execution of these laws one iota. Let us see. His bill proposes what? It provides that we shall have consular inspection. With the indulgence of the House, I will read that section of the bill:

SEC. 2. That no alien immigrant shall be admitted within the United States unless, in addition to other requirements and provisions of law, he or she shall exhibit to the United States inspectors of arriving immigrants at the place of admission a certificate, signed by the United States consul or other authorized representative of the United States at the place nearest where said immigrant last resided, setting forth that the said consul or other United States representative has made an investigation concerning said immigrant, and that said immigrant does not belong to the class or classes of alien immigrants excluded from admission into the United States under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act in amendment to the various acts relative to immigration and the importation of aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor, its amendments or supplements," or by any other law of the United States that now exists or may hereafter be passed. Said immigrant shall, in addition, conform to all present requirements of law.

I contend that this bill does not tend in the least to restrict immigration. It only creates thousands of foreign offices, because we know that the present force can not do the work, to go abroad under large salaries, for which the people will have to be taxed to pay. I believe it would necessitate the appointment of at least 10,000 extra consuls or assistants. Surely we have enough offices to burden the people with taxes without creating them by the wholesale.

Let us pass the Corliss bill. There is something real in its provisions. It excludes effectually, I think, that class of immigrants which has become commonly known as "birds of passage"—persons who do not desire to become citizens, but simply drop in from foreign countries during the working season, prey upon our workingmen by destroying their wages and regular employment, causing innumerable strikes, labor disturbances, bloodshed, and violence, returning after the working season is over, carrying with them millions of dollars to foreign countries, and leaving nothing but discontent and the memory of unsavory lives behind. The Stone bill does nothing of this kind; it does not even suggest a remedy, as we shall see from further analysis.

I have recited what classes are excluded from the United States. The Stone bill then proposes that the consul at the port of entry of the immigrant, or the other officer who may be designated, shall make an examination of the immigrant—for what purpose? To ascertain if the immigrant is an idiot, or an insane person, or a lunatic, or a pauper, or is liable to become a public charge upon the people of the United States, or has been convicted of a felony or other infamous crime or misdemeanor, or is a contract laborer, or is a polygamist, or an anarchist, or a Chinese. That is what the consul will be required to do.

Now, I submit this question to every lawyer in this House, and I ask its fair consideration—not with a view to pleasing anybody or pandering to any outside influence, but with a view of doing that which is right from a legal and just standpoint: If those questions are to be passed upon in a foreign country, what use is there in having an immigrant station here to pass upon the very same questions again? Do you wish to have them passed on twice? Will you accredit your consuls or other parties abroad to transact certain business, and then say they are not competent to transact that very business fully and completely, that they are not competent to give a certificate which ought to admit the immigrant into the United States without further examination? If you are prepared to so declare, do so; because it is certain that if this bill is adopted either the consul abroad or the immigration officers on this side—one or the other—must be disregarded in the event of a conflict of opinion.

The very officer upon whom this extraordinary power is to be conferred is directed to examine the immigrants with the distinct understanding that another and similar examination is to be made after the immigrant arrives in the United States; hence, I desire to ask the lawyers in this body the further question—and I would like to hear even the sanguine gentleman from Pennsylvania answer it—If these two different authorities should conflict in their opinion as to the eligibility of the immigrant desiring admission, what will the immigrant do? Whose opinion will prevail? Suppose the consul across the waters, for instance, at Liverpool, or at Naples, should declare a man fully competent to enter the United States, should pronounce him not to come within the inhibition against the excluded classes, and give him a certificate to that effect, and on the arrival of this immigrant at the port of New York the Commissioner of Immigration should make a second examination and say, "I disagree with the consul or other United States authority abroad," in such a case tell me what would become of that immigrant? And what part of your laws would be enforced in that event—that part applying to the examination in the United States, or that part applying to the examination abroad? One examination will be of as much force and dignity as the other.

When we come to consider legislation of this kind these are pertinent questions which address themselves to our intelligence and calm deliberation, unless you intend to bring about a conflict of authority between different officers.

The gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Pennsylvania said yesterday that they felt great sympathy for the poor immigrant; that there are many persons detained now on Ellis Island in New York waiting to be transported to the countries from which they came. Let us consider that matter for a moment. Suppose that a conflict should arise between the authorities, as I have suggested, if this bill passes. Would not your immigrant still be detained at Ellis Island or somewhere else until the question of his eligibility for admission had been adjudicated by somebody, and that somebody not known or even hinted at in the measure before us? There is no authority given in this bill for anybody to pass upon that question in the event of a disagreement between the different officers, and no appeal from either is granted.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HENDRICK. No, sir; I can not yield. I have given away nearly all my time, and have but a few moments in which to discuss the provisions of the bill. The gentleman, therefore, will excuse me, I hope.

Gentlemen forget to tell us that great benefits are claimed from the fact that persons are detained at Ellis Island. Why, sir, when an immigrant is detained at that point or elsewhere waiting to be deported back to the country whence he came he is so detained at the expense of the steamship company which brought him here; he is not only supported during his stay at the island at the expense of that company, but when he is carried back to the home from which that company brought him his expenses are also defrayed by that company. You ask me, What of that? I say it means much. It induces the shipowners and persons interested in navigation not to bring persons here without careful examination and inspection. Gentlemen talk about consular inspection. If they will examine the law, they will see that these very shipowners to whom the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Pennsylvania referred are sworn to make an inspection before bringing immigrants here or else return them at their own expense in case of a mistake. They are compelled to ascertain whether the immigrants whom they propose to land here belong to any of the prohibited or excluded classes; they are compelled to ascertain whether the person proposing to come to this country is an idiot, a lunatic, a pauper, whether he proposes to come here as a contract laborer, whether he has been assisted by anybody, whether she, if woman, is coming for immoral purposes, whether the person is a Chinese or an anarchist, etc.

Mark you, this requirement of the law makes the steamship owner personally interested in this matter. He is sworn to look after it. And if a mistake should be made there is a way of correcting it by making the company bear the expenses of the correction. There is no conflict of authority between him and somebody else, both being equally recognized by law.

Gentlemen have talked about the character of the examinations that will be made in foreign countries by our consuls, and about the value of knowledge that will be thus disseminated among foreign nations showing the great trouble of emigrating to America, and all that sort of thing. Answer me in all sincerity. Do you believe there is any character of information that could be furnished to people abroad so potent as the returned immigrants? His rejection here and return would be a perfect object lesson.

Let us see how these examinations resulted last year. We sent back from the ports of the United States to foreign countries 2,419 immigrants. Do you not know that every one of them, when they go among the people of their respective countries, their neighbors and friends, will tell them they could not remain in the United States; that the laws there were so constructed that they could not be permitted to remain? "Why," they would say, "2,419 of us have been there, have been examined, and have been returned to our homes because the laws are so strict as to exclude us." Do not gentlemen know that such deported immigrants will deter more people from coming, if that is what you want, than all the advertising you can do in years and years? It is the most efficient system of advertising that could be devised, if you simply desire to deter immigrants from coming. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says he sympathizes with the poor immigrants; that his bill is for the benefit of the immigrants.

In this connection I want to ask this very pertinent question, and I want the House to consider it well. I have heard it claimed that the German Government, from whence comes a very large, desirable immigration to the United States, have laws requiring military service of the young men between certain ages, and that law prohibits these young men from leaving Germany when that service is due to the Government, unless they come away clandestinely. I do not know whether such is the law in Germany.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is a fact.

Mr. HENDRICK. The chairman of the committee, who is a German, says it is true. That being the case, then, the question I desire to submit is, Will Germany permit the United States to set up examining boards right in her own territory and select emigrants to come to the United States when the law of Germany declares that the most desirable part of her population shall not emigrate, because they owe military service to the mother country? Indeed, is not France, England, Germany, Italy, and all other civilized powers directly interested in keeping their good and desirable citizens at home, and sending the bad and undesirable ones away? And if we pass this bill and attempt to convert our consulates into examining boards, is it not a great incentive to foreign Governments to look after the best part of their population and take steps to prevent their emigrating, and at the same time to do all that can be done to force on us their criminal and undesirable classes? I think before we pass this bill that these questions should be considered well and with great deliberation.

Let us suppose that this bill has been enacted into law. It is a very violent presumption, but we will indulge in it for the present in order to ascertain if possible the exact relationship which we would occupy toward foreign countries.

Let us for the purpose of appreciating the situation consider what we would do if a foreign Government should attempt to enforce a law similar to this if the situation were reversed. If England, for instance, should attempt to give her consuls extra-territorial jurisdiction by ordering them to examine every subject within the United States when he should attempt to embark for a foreign country.

What would the United States do? Why, to ask that question is to answer it. We all know what would be done. The United States within less than twenty-four hours would send to England an unconditional demand to remove such agents and spies from among our people, and it would not be a good government or one worthy of respect if it failed to do it. And yet we are proposing here, under the provisions of the bill we are considering, to send a consular agent into every foreign port and have him inspect the citizens of other countries to determine the question of the right of admission to our shores.

How could we possibly adjust our consular service so as to work in harmony with the provisions of this bill? Last year, for example, we only had 250,000 emigrants to this country, while during previous years we have had as high as 800,000. Some years the immigration has been very light from some foreign countries, and probably the very next year exceedingly heavy from that same country. It seems to me that unless we had the power to foretell future events we would not know how to meet the demands which might be made upon us for examiners.

In some ports our consuls would have to be supplemented with hundreds of assistants, while in others a very few would suffice.

The trouble would be that we could never tell where the extra force would be needed until the rush came, and then it would be too late.

The fact of the business is that all this bill does is to force upon the people thousands of extra officials at high salaries to perform labors in foreign countries, and probably over the protests of foreign governments, that will have to be performed again by home officials, and that, too, when this double performance can only serve to promulgate a conflict of opinions between two sets of United States officials.

It has been contended during this entire discussion by gentlemen advocating the passage of the bill that the United States Government has power to confer extra territorial jurisdiction by empowering her consuls to administer oaths to the subjects of foreign countries who might contemplate emigrating to the United States. No man who has license to practice law should indulge in such wild assertions upon this floor. A good lawyer can not entertain such an opinion. Suppose the United States should pass a law providing that if anyone should be guilty of murder in England he should be incarcerated in a penitentiary in the United States for life. Does it need a legal interpreter to say that such a law would be void and without effect? Suppose we pass a law providing that if a consul of the United States swears anybody in a foreign port, and the party so sworn makes a false oath, he shall be guilty of perjury and subject to punishment. Is it possible that there is a lawyer here who does not know it would be simply an enactment without any effect whatever, not meriting the least consideration in any court? And yet that is exactly what is sought to be done by this bill.

But I want to invite your consideration to one or two other objections. I asked the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] on yesterday if he proposed to have visitors and tourists, when they come to the United States, inspected or examined by the consul abroad before starting. He said no, he did not, and added that my objection was an imaginary objection. Let us see if it is. If it is an imaginary objection, then the bill is an imaginary thing. Why, if the gentleman is right, and nobody is to be examined who is coming here simply as a visitor, all that would be necessary for an emigrant who desired to avoid the effects of this bill would be to walk aboard a ship and say, "I am not an emigrant; I am going on a tour or visit." I simply point out this objection to show how frivolous the bill is and how futile it would be to attempt to execute it. We can not afford to pass a bill that does not apply to every citizen of a country alike. All must be equal before the law.

I know that the Republican party does not usually favor laws which treat everybody alike, but no Democrat can afford to pursue that course.

If the Republican party had not for thirty years dealt in such class legislation as to teach the people to rely on the Government for support instead of on their own manly, individual exertions, there would not be such a constant clamor for legislation in favor of particular classes. It will ruin our country if it is not stopped. But let us go back to the Stone bill. Does the distinguished gentleman know that during the World's Fair at Chicago we had over 70,000 visitors who came here from foreign countries, and every one of them spent money and left it here with us? That is a fact, and the records show it. How would the gentleman have examined those 70,000 people? If he admits that under his bill they could come without examination, he must admit also that the same number of immigrants could have done likewise. If not, how would he have managed them? He says no examination whatever would have been made. Very well, then, he virtually admits that the whole number could have remained here under his bill as immigrants, and could thus have avoided the bill which I have read to you.

Is not that true? Is there any possible escape from it? I think, gentlemen, that before we adopt such legislation as this, before we go in simply to gratify the caprices and the whims of some particular section, we should look into the merits of the measure and have the manhood to condemn it if it is wrong, and to stand by it if it is right. No great deliberative body like this can legislate properly and promulgate wholesome laws if it undertakes to pander to any section of the country or to any class of the people in any section. I suppose everybody on the face of the earth will agree with me in that declaration. We must treat everybody and every section alike if we wish the law to be respected.

But I want to examine a little further into this question of immigration while I am upon it. When did the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] become so thoroughly aroused to the dangers of immigration? We have grown from 3,000,000 to 70,000,000 of united and happy freemen. Our territory has extended from 13 sparsely settled British colonies to 45 free, independent, and happy States. Our borders have extended from those same little colonies, across the continent—from the Atlantic Ocean on the east to the Pacific on the west, from the frozen lakes of the North to the sunny isles of the South—and during all this time we have never been threatened by this inundation from foreign countries to overwhelm, to crush, and to blot us out, as he would now have us believe is about to be done. As was said by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BUCK] yesterday, there is something more behind it than what has been proclaimed on this floor. If I could, without wishing my country harm, I would wish to see you put such statutes as this upon the statute books. With all your boasted majority, you would see where that majority would go at the next election; but even for the sake of hoping to see Republicans defeated I could not wish such a calamity to my country.

It was in 1856 that the other great howl was raised by the Know-nothings and by parties opposed to immigration. Suppose we should banish from our shores the immigrants who have come in since then and their children. What would be the result? Instead of being the great and powerful civilized nation that we are we should be a mere stranded hulk on the outskirts of respectability. How much would be taken from our vaunted wealth? Why, in a little more than a hundred years our wealth has grown from five billions to over $94,000,000,000, and during all that time the immigration to our shores has been steady and continuous, year in and year out.

Some of the greatest men we have ever had have come here under the privileges accorded to immigrants. James Beck, one of the greatest Senators who ever adorned the other end of the Capitol, was an immigrant, and when he came to Kentucky he was uneducated. Lafayette came over here to help us fight our battles. Judah P. Benjamin was a foreigner. So is Carl Schurz. Take away from us the long list of those who have glorified our country and who have fought its battles, both civic and military, and I will tell you we would not have a great deal to brag about. I am not very much afraid of any immigrant getting ahead of me in the race of progress. If he does, instead of pulling him back I want to say godspeed to him. Any other view is narrow and selfish.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this much in regard to the Stone bill. I desire to answer a few suggestions made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WILSON]. Before I do that, however, I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STONE] this question: Does he think it was right and proper to enfranchise the negroes of the South? Did he vote for the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, providing that they should not only have the right of citizenship, but that they should be officeholders? Certainly he did. I am not upbraiding him for it. I am not criticising him. But will he now turn on the white race and say that he honestly believes that the immigrants who are coming to our shores from foreign countries are worse than the uneducated negroes of the South who were raised in slavery? We all know that he will not say it. We all know that he can not say it truthfully. I dislike to think that anybody is forcing on us and advocating a bill so foolish as this because of some unknown, outside pressure, some sinister power behind it, but I declare when I consider the measure I am irresistibly driven to that conclusion.

Now, let us see. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WILSON] says that nobody in the South wants immigration.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. What I said was that nobody in the South wants immigration of the class that will be affected by these bills—these excluded classes from southern Europe.

Mr. HENDRICK. Well, I understood the gentleman to say that the South did not desire immigration. I may have been mistaken in that. I do not wish to do him any injustice. I remember that a few years ago committees were sent all over the State of Kentucky for the purpose of raising funds to send to foreign countries to induce immigrants to come to Kentucky, and I was one of those who tried to promote the movement. Many other States did the same thing, and it will not be many years before the question will again be agitated and immigration solicited.

Immigration has heretofore been regarded as very beneficial to America. Not only is that——

Mr. BRUMM. Do you discriminate as to what immigration you want? Is that done by the scheme now practiced?

Mr. HENDRICK. As a matter of fact, that was not discussed, as I now recollect, but I know English, Germans, and French would have been preferred; but I am now discussing the Stone bill. What does the Stone bill prefer? That is the thing that is under consideration.

Mr. BRUMM. It prefers the enforcement of the laws as they are, since you have asked the question.

Mr. HENDRICK. I have just made the point, if you had listened to me, that you can not enforce the law which we now have if this foolish bill should be adopted.

Mr. BRUMM. I have listened to you, but you failed to prove that.

Mr. HENDRICK. I am not responsible for your failure to understand.

Mr. BRUMM. But there are many things which you are responsible for that you have not proven.

Mr. HENDRICK (continuing). And which nobody could do to your satisfaction. That is all I intend to say to you. I do not yield for an interruption. Here is a document furnished to me by the Immigration Commissioner, and comes down as late as January, 1896. I desire to read from it what some of the governors of the States say about immigration:

Arkansas.—We prefer American, German, and English immigrants—farmers.

You will notice that nearly every one of these governors here says that there is a dearth of farm hands and that they need farm hands all over the South. Why should we not be permitted to have them through immigration? Simply because a few cities are overcrowded with undesirable immigrants?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAHANY. I yield the gentleman five minutes of my time.

Mr. HENDRICK. No. I have more time. I promised to yield some time to other gentlemen; but I will not detain the House much longer.

California——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Very well.

Mr. HENDRICK. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that I have an hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is a member of the committee, the Chair understands, and has an hour. The Chair understood the gentleman only desired to speak for thirty minutes.

Mr. HENDRICK. I desired to be informed by the Speaker when I had spoken thirty minutes; but I did not think that I would be precluded from going on further if I desired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair simply advises the gentleman that thirty minutes has expired.

Mr. HENDRICK (continuing):

California.—All desirable immigrants of the classes indicated (farmers, horticulturists, etc.) who have the capacity and determination to become good American citizens will be gladly received.

Colorado.—Colorado desires first-class immigrants in nearly every portion of the State. * * * For horticulture and agriculture we prefer Germans and Scandinavians.

Florida.—The first preference as to race is given to the English-speaking people.

Georgia.—We prefer Germans, French, Hollanders, Belgians, Scandinavians, Swiss.

Idaho.—Scandinavians or Germans are preferable.

Illinois.—Just at present the State of Illinois is not seeking to have further immigration.

Iowa.—As to the immigration of any class of foreigners to this State at the present time, I should say that it is very undesirable.

Kansas.—The preference of immigrants would be in about the following order: Germans, English, French, Swedes, and Norwegians.

Kentucky.—In Kentucky there is less disposition just now to secure immigrants direct from foreign countries than from other States.

So far as the governor of Kentucky is concerned, I happen to know better myself. I can say that there is a great desire in Kentucky to have a character of labor brought there that can be relied on, such as farm hands; not men who will work in the fall and sponge on you all the winter and desert you when working time comes in hot weather. Farm hands are needed that can be relied on to work and not to loaf. I know what Kentucky desires as to immigration, the governor to the contrary notwithstanding.

I will read the remainder of his statement:

The nationalities preferred are British, Germans, Swiss, and Scandinavians.

So, then, Mr. Speaker, in nearly all of the States in this Union answering to this inquiry the governors say that immigration is desired. Why, what is it that has made the great cities but immigration? What is it that has made the property of this capital city worth hundreds of dollars a foot but immigration? What is it that has made a foot of ground in New York City worth as much or more than a whole farm in the Western country? It is immigration. Are you willing to stop it here? Are you willing to shut it off and say that other men shall not enjoy the same privileges which were enjoyed before you by your forefathers and has been likewise enjoyed by you? Thomas Jefferson, Patrick Henry, and George Washington, all of them, encouraged immigration instead of retarding it.

I am astonished, in view of the past history of political parties in this country, to see so many gentlemen over there hugging the delusion to their bosoms that they will get any consolation from the Republican party. There you sit shivering behind its shadow, many of you foreign born, representing a foreign-born constituency in a great measure, and yet you are afraid to open your mouths. The Democratic party stands to-day right where it stood in 1856, when an effort was made by Know-Nothings to deprive our foreign-born citizens of their rights under the Constitution, and right where it stood when the alien and sedition laws were put in force. The Democratic party believes in making this the grandest and the most glorious Government beneath the sun. That is what it ought to be and will be if we do not permit the fanatics and cranks to destroy it; and while the Democratic party is saving it let our foreign population not sit back shivering behind the shadow of the Republican party, hoping that it will reform and come to their rescue and give them a chance. Let me tell you, gentlemen, you are hoping in vain.

If you depend on the Republican party you are lost. It is high time you were showing your gratitude to the Democratic party, the party which has fought your battles from the organization of the Government down to the present time.

If the pampered kings of protected monopolies had not gone to foreign countries and imported labor, "scum," if you please, into this country, there would be no such complaints as are now going on. You gentlemen upon the other side are the ones who have fostered classes in this country. You have nurtured the men who have brought this objectionable immigration upon us, if we have such, and now you ought to stand up like men and reap what you have sown and not try to cut off the development of the whole country, simply because there are a few cities overcrowded with unworthy immigrants brought here by your tariff barons. If they are criminals, enforce the laws against them. If, as some one has said here, half are in the penitentiary and the other half will not obey the laws, put the other half there also [applause]; but in God's name, where a man seeks to better his condition by coming to a new country and taking a new start in the race of human progress, do not cut him off and say that he shall not enjoy the same rights and the same privileges that you have enjoyed. [Loud applause.]

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word at the outset as to the parliamentary situation, and I do this at the suggestion of other gentlemen. There are pending in the House, reported from the Committee on Immigration, three bills, familiarly known, respectively, one as the McCall bill, providing for an educational test of immigrants; another, known as the Corliss bill, aimed at labor coming in from Canada; and the other, the Stone bill, providing for consular inspection. Those three bills are all incorporated in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] on yesterday; those three measures are all pending as a substitute for the three bills reported by the committee—the substitute, in fact, includes them all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make any appeals to sentiment or to anybody's passions, but I want to call the attention of the House to a condition of things which exists in this country, and which demands of the representatives of the people immediate consideration. Much has been said here as to the progress of our country in the past and our growth from a few insignificant colonies to a great and mighty power among the nations of the earth. Prior to the civil war we were in the main a pastoral people, engaged mostly in agriculture. We had no considerable number of large cities and no congestion of population in particular districts. It is only since the close of the civil war, and, in fact, within the last two decades, that the subject of immigration and kindred subjects have begun to plague the American people.

The very next matter to be considered by this House—a matter which has been assigned for consideration immediately after the pending measure—is a bill reported from the Committee on Labor, authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission "to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital," and in the report upon that bill the committee say that they report the bill "because there is a widespread dissatisfaction with the laws governing labor, as shown by discontent, strikes, and violence, causing great misery and danger to society."

That labor bill, I repeat, is the next measure that is to be taken up for consideration by the representatives of the people here. The questions that grow out of the relations of capital and labor did not trouble the American people years ago, but to-day there are no questions that press more urgently or with more persistency upon the consideration of the lawmakers of this country than the questions growing out of the relations of capital and labor. We have been in the habit of saying in the past that capital and labor would adjust themselves in this country, and until very recently there was no necessity for legislation on the subject, no necessity for any interference on the part of the State or the National Government for the purpose of keeping the peace between capital and labor. But in the last few years all this has changed and these questions have continued to grow in urgency until they have demanded consideration and are to be given consideration by this House as against other questions that seek and demand our attention during the short time that we have remaining of this session of Congress.

The conditions in this country have greatly changed even within the last twenty years. Let me call attention to a significant fact which will be found in the report of the Census Commissioner, a volume issued and distributed to members only recently. It contains the social statistics of the United States. By examining those statistics it will be found that while the population of this country increased but 24 per cent from 1880 to 1890, yet the population of our cities of 10,000 and upward increased in the same decade 60 per cent, showing the disposition of our people to gather and congest in the centers of population. And it must be remembered that the 60 per cent includes only those who live in cities having a population above 10,000, and that there is a great deal of the same kind of congestion in mining towns and manufacturing towns which are not included in these figures.

The same condition of things which grew up between 1880 and 1890 is going on in this decade. It is clear, then, that we are no longer dealing with a people who are mostly agricultural. We are brought face to face with a condition of things which demands our attention and demands it imperatively. I do not undertake to express any opinion as to the various questions of difference between capital and labor. I speak only of the fact that such differences exist. Within the last two years I have seen the guns of our State militia trained upon the camps of labor in order to keep the peace. I have seen the officers of the United States Government, the marshals and their deputies, taking possession of persons and property in the same district for the purpose of keeping the peace.

Let me say further that, whilst years ago labor was in demand in the mining regions and in the mills in the manufacturing communities, and whilst at that time the laborer could in a calendar month make from thirty to thirty-five days' work, the condition of things is so changed that now in our mines and in our mills the laborer is fortunate if he can make from twelve to fifteen days' work in the calendar month. That is the condition of things in this country to-day, with the labor question pressing not only upon State legislatures, but upon Congress. And a proposition comes from the Committee on Immigration which we think will aid very largely in the solution of this question—the solving of the problem that we are called upon to meet.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DANFORD. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does not the gentleman think that the free-trade policy and the present Democratic Administration of the Government have something to do with the hard times?

Mr. DANFORD. I will answer the gentleman in this way: I am, as he is, a protectionist of the most pronounced character and type. About two years ago or less I met a Welshman, a man whom I had known for many years, a laborer in one of our iron mills. He was out of work; his employment was gone. I undertook to talk to him in the same direction that the chairman of the committee [Mr. BARTHOLDT] now suggests. I spoke of the tariff, of the changed legislation. But he said to me, "Oh, Mr. DANFORD, that is not the great trouble"; and, pointing across to the mill where he had worked, he said: "There is the great trouble; there is the camp of Italians that have taken my job away from me." [Applause.] He went on to say, "I am trying to raise my children and make good American citizens of them; I am sending them to school; I am trying to make out of them just as good citizens as those of the native-born population. But I can not work against those people; I can not educate my children and make good Americans of them and work against those people." That was his answer to the proposition that I made, that the trouble was the tariff.

Now, I agree with my friend the chairman of this committee, as a matter of opinion, that the change of the revenue policy of the country has done much to bring about the present conditions; but I am talking about a remedy for this condition of things, and I believe that a good way to begin is to stop to some extent, and to the full extent that these several measures go, immigration into this country.

Mr. Speaker, I am not hostile to naturalized American citizens; I am not hostile to those who come to this country to make homes here. I am speaking of a condition of things with which we are confronted and one for which we must find a remedy, and find it in the very near future. I could not be hostile—and that is one of the unfair things about the argument on the other side, that those of us who favor this measure are held up as being opposed to foreigners, as being hostile to that class of our citizens who were born across the water—I could not be hostile to these people. In the brigade in which I served in the Army there was a gallant regiment composed entirely of Germans, the Thirty-second Indiana, as good a regiment as ever carried muskets; and in the same brigade there was a regiment composed entirely of Norwegians, the Fifteenth Wisconsin, as good men as ever followed the flag anywhere. I could not be hostile to these people, and I am not. But I am speaking for my country, for a condition of things that I find existing; and I believe a remedy, a partial remedy at least, will be found in passing these bills.

I do not know what views other members may have of the various measures proposed here and incorporated in this substitute. Much has been said against the Stone bill, the bill requiring consular inspection abroad. I favor that measure along with the rest. I reported it to the House. I believe that it would be a good bill to pass; that it would restrict immigration; that it would go further to do so than any other measure now pending.

Something has been said here as to the Germans who perhaps owe military service to the German Empire. It has been urged that such persons would be unable to get away from their Government if this test were required. I do not know that we have statistics on that subject; we are perhaps without means of learning anything as to the exact facts. But I do not believe there are many men owing military service to the German Empire who embark for this country from German ports. My information is that they generally seek some other country; they cross the lines into France or countries lying north of Germany, and in that manner get away from the vigilance of the German police. It is very well known that Germany is one of the best policed nations on the face of the earth—possibly, next to Russia, the very best. I do not see how the mere matter of consular inspection or a consular certificate can in any way interfere with the passage of a German from his own country to this, especially if, as I believe is generally the case, he goes out of his own country across the line into France or some other country for the purpose of embarking. It would be but a very small matter for the surveillance of the German police to follow up persons intending to emigrate, to ascertain who were proposing to embark for this country and whether they owed military service or not.

As to the educational test, I am fully in favor of it, although I do not expect as much from it as many of our friends do.

I do not know—it is not my opinion—that men get their morals out of the spelling book or arithmetic, altogether. They are good things to know about, and they are good things to study. But I believe in that test. And it has been already said in the debate: Why not apply it to those who come here as immigrants from foreign countries between 16 and 60 years of age? We are applying it in our own country to our own people. In my State every parent must educate his child, and we have our truant officers to enforce education. Germany does the same. She stands, so far as education is concerned, perhaps without a peer in the whole world.

Now, let me say that this educational test, as was shown clearly by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL], the author of this bill, will cut off many undesirable immigrants—undesirable for other causes than simply the want of education. I believe in that test, and believe it will be something toward a solution of the troubles that confront us in this country at the present time. I believe in the American schoolhouse with the American flag waving over it, Mr. Speaker.

This cry for restrictive legislation comes to us mainly from a portion of the New England States, from New Jersey, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, New York, and from the North Central States. The statistics that I referred to a moment ago show that of the total population of Massachusetts 66 per cent of her people are in her large cities. New York, a great broad empire as she is, has 58 per cent almost of her population living in the large cities and towns, and the cry comes to us from them to stop this immigration. And I want to say here that there has been sent to the Committee on Immigration many thousands of petitions in favor of the passage of the Stone bill. I want to say that many petitions have been received in favor of the passage of all of these measures. They have come to us from almost every section of the country; and I desire to say in this connection that while I represent many Germans, many men of foreign birth, I have not received, although I think it is well known in my district that I am a member of the Committee on Immigration—I have not received one single protest from a single citizen in my district against the passage of the bill, nor has any been received that I know of.

About the first I knew of any opposition to the measures of restriction proposed by the committee came from the great steamship lines of this country. Their representatives have been vigilant before the committee and the House, and before the country, in attempting to defeat the passage of restrictive measures. As has been already said, great steamships have been built for almost the sole and express purpose of carrying immigrants from other countries to our shores, and one of the agents of these companies in talking before our committee said, when speaking of the consular inspection system, that their steamship companies had agents in every village in Europe. They are there for the purpose of inducing immigration to this country. We had in 1890 and 1891 500,000, I believe, of these people thrown upon our shores, and that immigration has been stimulated by these great corporations. They are in Europe for this purpose. They are there for the purpose of stimulating immigration, and they dilate upon the higher and better wages paid in this country than in European countries, and one gentleman said before the committee that these men who come across with their families know as much, or more, about the organized charities of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and the cities of the country generally—as much or more than the citizens of these cities themselves. They are informed by the agents of the great corporations—the steamship lines—of the charities of this country, as well as the labor conditions, and they come here thus stimulated and come, as the statistics report, soon to find themselves in these very charitable institutions.

I said a moment ago that the country had changed greatly since the civil war. Population has gathered largely toward the great industrial centers, and these are being largely populated by persons who come here stimulated, as I have just said, to seek labor in the mines, mills, and factories of this country everywhere.

Mr. BRUMM. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to ask unanimous consent at this time that the time for debate be extended to 5 o'clock.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That would be too late for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The Chair can hardly recognize the gentleman to make that request in the time of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DANFORD. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Before the gentleman from Ohio proceeds, I will suggest that if the gentleman yields for a moment or two, the gentleman from Pennsylvania would make the motion he has suggested.

Mr. DANFORD. I must decline to yield, Mr. Speaker.

Much sentiment has been indulged in in this debate as to this country being an asylum for the oppressed of all nations. Well, when our forefathers announced that as the principle upon which the States and colonies would be built up they had reference, if you will examine history, to political offenders, to those who were driven from the old countries by religious persecutions; but our forefathers never contemplated that this country should be an asylum for the paupers, for the criminals, and for the undesirable people of the whole world. I know very well, Mr. Speaker, that sentiment sometimes strikes higher than the logic of events; but on this occasion our sentiment should be directed, if we have any, in the consideration of this case, to our own people, to those who are demanding of us some relief from the present condition of things, some relief from the clouds that gather every few months over some labor center in the country, some relief for those who are without labor in this country.

This legislation will inure to the benefit not of the native born alone but of the naturalized as well—to those who are here now, to those who have already made this country their home. Their appeal is certainly stronger than the appeal which comes to us from any other quarter.

Quoting from the same authority which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] quoted on yesterday, "He that careth not for his own household hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." That doctrine is as good now as it was when it was proclaimed nineteen centuries ago. It is a doctrine that the American people ought to consider as being brought home to us, and we ought to consider it in connection with this very measure.

I have already said that the great complaint comes to us from the Atlantic Seaboard cities, from that portion of the country where our mills and our factories and our mines are situated. What part of the country asks for immigration? Is it the agricultural portion? Well, Mr. Speaker, we are not getting very many agriculturists from our foreign immigrants at this time. We are getting very few in fact. There is no very great encouragement for men engaged in agriculture at this time in the United States. With 16-cent wool, with 45-cent wheat, and with other agricultural products about in the same proportion, there is no great demand for adding to our agricultural products at this time. I have already said that our mills and our mines are overcrowded; that those who are not out of employment are working on short time, and that there are threatenings from the labor conditions of the country. I believe that the questions that grow out of the differences between capital and labor should be reconciled among themselves; but if it becomes necessary to reconcile those differences in some other way, I shall very much deprecate the hour or the day when American labor is to be beaten down at the end of American guns. That is not the policy at which we should aim. If there is relief in any other direction, we should give it in that other direction and not in the direction of force.

Now, it has been said here that the time to apply the educational test is when the foreigner makes his application to become naturalized. I do not believe in that policy. I do not believe that we should have in this country, working in our mines and our mills and on our farms, any considerable number of people who have not at least declared their intention to become citizens of the United States. We should extend the time as far at least as present legislation goes, before full citizenship is acquired; but the intention to become a citizen of the United States, to take a part in this Government, to be a part of our people, the intention on the part of the alien to remain with us as one of our people, that intention should be present when he first lands upon our shores and makes his domicile among us.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, for my time has about expired, I desire to repeat what I have already said, that it is an unfair thing to attempt to array those who are in favor of this legislation against foreigners as a class, or as against the naturalized citizen. There is no feeling of that kind here. There is nothing of that sort in the country, I think; no such feeling of exclusiveness, as is intimated, on the part of those who are pressing these bills before the House and before the country. I do not believe that there is in the Committee on Immigration a single member who has any other feeling than simply a desire to protect the people of this country against the evils that seem to be threatening us from this foreign immigration that has been pouring upon our shores during the last twenty years. I do not know how many immigrants will come into the country during this year; but whenever the burdens are lightened, whenever the fires in our factories are lighted, whenever the mines are opened, then the agents of these great steamship companies and others interested in encouraging immigration throw them by hundreds and thousands upon our shores. In the beginning of this year it was supposed that the number would reach fully 300,000, far more than in 1893 and in 1894. The number swells whenever prosperity comes.

I say, then, Mr. Speaker, that these bills that are now before the House would, if passed, shut out a great proportion of this undesirable population, and would ease up the labor question. It would save this country from a very great amount of illiteracy, save it from a great amount of pauperism and of crime, and I believe that the people of this country demand such legislation as this. As was said yesterday, if it does not come now it will come later. It is a question that will not down as long as the labor question is before the country. It is a question that will not rest as long as questions growing out of capital and labor are before the country. This question goes along with them, hand in hand; and when times are hard, when adversity presses upon the country. these questions grow closer and closer, and we shall be compelled before very long to give relief in some direction. I know of no direction in which relief can be had more readily than by the passage of these bills.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio having concluded his remarks, as chairman of the committee I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that I have nine minutes remaining to me, and I would like to close debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Has the gentleman from Ohio, my colleague, any time to reserve?

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the time for this debate be extended.

Mr. MILNES. I object.

Mr. PARKER. There are four or five members of the committee who desire to participate in the debate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My colleague reserved his time, supposing, apparently, he had time to reserve. How is the fact?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he has some time to reserve; but the gentleman from Missouri is entitled to the floor to conclude debate, having reserved nine minutes.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of this debate be extended.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that gentlemen may be allowed to print remarks upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that gentlemen may be permitted to print remarks in the RECORD on this subject. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM] objects.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, in closing the debate on this question I do not desire to take up the time of the House and to again enter into a general discussion of the subject, but I desire to more particularly address myself to the bill proposed as an amendment by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] and to some of his statements made upon this floor yesterday. I do not think it is the intention of this House to slander the naturalized citizens of this country, and for that reason I take it upon myself to answer some of the palpable misstatements made by my friend from Pennsylvania. Among other things he said that 50 per cent of the inmates of the penitentiaries and prisons of this country were foreigners. The statement, Mr. Speaker, almost took my breath away, and even to-day I can hardly find language to express my surprise at such a statement, the accuracy or inaccuracy of which every member of this House can ascertain within ten minutes. The fact is, as the census shows, that in the prisons and in all institutions of the kind in the country—the total number being 82,329—the native-born prisoners number 40,471 and the foreign born 15,932. Percentage of natives, 71.75; of foreign born, 28.25. Then as to paupers: I find in the Compendium of the Census—and that is in the possession of every member of this House—that the percentage of purely native paupers is 82.61; paupers of purely foreign origin, 13.75 per cent, and of mixed origin, 3 per cent.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; I have not time. I have but a few minutes.

Another statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was that the immigration exceeded the number of births in this country during the years from 1880 to 1890. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the increase of population, not the births of children, but the excess of births over deaths between 1880 and 1890, was 14,000,000, while the immigration was only 5,000,000.

Another statement made by the gentleman was that the Germans of this country were in favor of the consular inspection bill. I desire to read here from a telegram sent to me by the editor of the most high-toned, most influential, and the greatest daily Republican German newspaper of the country. The editor of the Westliche Post, Dr. Emil Preetorius, has this to say about the Stone bill:

GERMAN PRESS A UNIT AGAINST STONE BILL.

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 11, 1896.

Hon. RICHARD BARTHOLDT, House of Representatives:

German press a unit against Stone bill. Compare Tuesday's paper.

EMIL PREETORIUS.

And he follows it by a letter of his associate editor, which reads as follows:

ST. LOUIS, April 13, 1896.

DEAR SIR: I take it for granted that the author and the friends of the Stone bill would never advocate that measure if they were as well informed in regard to its unavoidable effect on German immigration as every intelligent German-American is. If they could be convinced that the consular inspection will only help Germany to unload its worst elements on the United States and to prevent the immigration of the most desirable class of Germans, of course the bill would be withdrawn at once. I am sure that every United States consul in Germany, as well as the United States ambassador at Berlin, agrees in this matter with the German-American press, which, if it were less American and more German, might hail with delight a bill that would bring blessings to Germany, bad immigrants to the United States, and fees to our consuls.

Yours, truly, FERDINAND HARRSEN,
Managing Editor Post.

Hon. RICHARD BARTHOLDT, M. C., Washington.

Mr. Speaker, I have here reports made by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury on the so-called Stone bill in response to a letter of Senator HILL in the last Congress. The then Secretary of State, Mr. Gresham, said:

In brief, I do not believe the State Department could execute so much of the proposed statute as would devolve upon that Department with the present consular force, or even with that force very largely increased.

The Secretary of the Treasury said:

The commission—

A commission appointed to report on the consular-inspection bill—made its report, which is exhausted, and contains valuable information on the subject embraced in this bill, from which report it appears that the system of consular inspection was not considered with favor.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I had time to read these official documents in full, but I have not. In conclusion, permit to me to say, let us pass a clean-cut bill, let us make a plain issue, which we can explain to our people when we go out for reelection this fall—a bill which every man, woman, and child can understand in two minutes, an educational-test bill—and do not let us permit others to befog the issue and confuse the minds of the people by amendments which few will understand and will put us on the defensive in the great campaign before us.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the previous question is now ordered. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] to the original bill presented by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. After that is disposed of, a vote will be taken on the bill presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] as a substitute. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. It can be read, without objection.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM]. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Has not the House a right to have the amendment read?

The SPEAKER. It has been read to the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not to be voted upon.

The SPEAKER. It was read to be voted on. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker declared himself in doubt as to the result.

Mr. CORLISS. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 45.

Mr. MAHANY called for the yeas and nays, but almost immediately withdrew the demand.

So the amendment of Mr. CORLISS was adopted.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. QUIGG. Suppose the substitute adopted; where does that leave the proposition upon which we have just voted?

The SPEAKER. It leaves it attached to the original bill.

A MEMBER. Is an amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the substitute read.

The SPEAKER. It can be read, without objection.

There was no objection; and the Clerk read the substitute at length.

The question being taken on the adoption of the substitute, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 131.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, only 24 members voting in favor thereof. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BRUMM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRUMM. The bill as it is before the House and on which we are to vote is now practically the McCall bill with the Corliss amendment attached.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that perhaps describes it. [Laughter.]

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker, is an amendment now in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the Chair please state what we are voting upon?

The SPEAKER. Upon the bill presented by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] as amended by the House on motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks consent that the bill be read.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM]. [Laughter.] The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I understood the announcement to be that the question was on the third reading of the bill. I desire to hear the bill as amended read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill as amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, in amendment of the immigration and contract-labor acts, be, and hereby is, amended by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission to the United States the following: All male persons between 16 and 60 years of age who can not both read and write the English language or some other language. But no parent of a person now living in, or hereafter admitted to, this country shall be excluded because of his inability to read and write.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, to facilitate the enforcement of the immigration and contract-labor laws, shall apply to the persons mentioned in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any alien who resides or retains his home in a foreign country to enter the United States for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor within the borders thereof while residing or retaining his home in a foreign country: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may permit aliens to come into and enter this country for the purpose of teaching new arts or industries, under such rules and regulations as he may provide.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ in any mechanical trade or manual labor in the United States any alien who resides or retains his home in a foreign country: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels of the United States, or railroad-train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen, whose duties require them to pass over the frontier to reach the termini of their roads.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any alien to enter the United States, except subjects of the Dominion of Canada and other American countries, except at the places where the United States maintain an immigrant inspection board.

SEC. 6. That any violation of the provisions of this act shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for the term of not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. That all persons convicted under section 3 of this act shall be deported to the country from whence they came.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect three months after its passage.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 195, noes 26.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, only 36 members voting therefor. [Applause.]

On motion of Mr. BARTHOLDT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question for information. Will the McCall bill, with the Corliss amendment, as passed, be printed in the RECORD? It is impossible to respond to the requests of our constituents for that bill, and as I understand the House has refused to reprint it, I trust it will be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The House ordered a reprint of the bill this morning, the Chair thinks. [After a pause.] The Chair understands that the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

Many MEMBERS. All right.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it in order to move that a larger number of copies of this bill be printed than the rules require?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order except by consent of the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I ask unanimous consent that double the number of copies required by the rules be printed in this case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I ask unanimous consent that the privilege be given to every member to either extend his remarks in the RECORD or to print what he has not spoken on the floor, this privilege to continue for ten days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] asks unanimous consent that gentlemen may be allowed within ten days to print remarks in the RECORD or to extend their remarks.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I move, then, to suspend the rules in order to grant this leave.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. It would be if it were certain that we are within six days of the end of the session.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 7395) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to reconvey to the former owners a certain tract of land in Valverde County, Tex.

An act (H. R. 5481) to restore the lands embraced in the Fort Lewis Military Reservation, in the State of Colorado, to the public domain;

An act (H. R. 5105) to abolish days of grace on promissory notes, drafts, etc., in the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. 5790) to permit the Pintsch Compressing Company to lay pipes in certain streets in the city of Washington;

An act (H. R. 8532) to establish certain harbor regulations for the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. 7264) to provide for the drainage of lots in the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. 6663) to authorize and regulate the sale of unclaimed freight, baggage, and other property in the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. 6195) amending the statutes relating to the sale of printed copies of patents; and

An act (H. R. 4787) to establish the port of Conneaut, in the State of Ohio, as a subport of entry in the district of Cuyahoga, in said State of Ohio.

LYDIA A. TAFT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 577, entitled "An act granting a pension to Lydia A. Taft."

In 1858 the beneficiary named in this bill became the wife of Lowell Taft, who afterwards enlisted in the Union Army as a private in a Connecticut regiment, and served from August, 1862, until June, 1865. The records of the War Department show that he was captured by the enemy June 15, 1863, and paroled July 14, 1863.

No application for a pension was ever made by him, though he lived until 1891, when he died at a Soldiers' Home in Connecticut.

No suggestion is made that he incurred any disability in the service, or that his death was in any manner related to such service.

In 1882, nearly twenty-four years after her marriage to the soldier and seventeen years after his discharge from the Army, the beneficiary obtained a divorce from him upon the grounds of his habitual drunkenness and failure to afford her a support.

It is now proposed, five years after the soldier's death, to pension as his widow the wife who was divorced from him at her own instance fourteen years ago.

A government's generous care for widows deprived of a husband's support and companionship by the casualties or disabilities of war rests upon grounds which all must cheerfully approve; but it is difficult to place upon these grounds the case of this proposed beneficiary, who has renounced a wife's relation, with all its duties and all its rights, and who by her own act placed herself beyond the possibility of becoming the widow of her soldier husband.

If, as stated in the report of the House committee on this bill, the beneficiary, for some reason, contributed something toward the soldier's support after her divorce and paid the expense of his burial, the fact still remains that this soldier died in a Soldiers' Home wifeless and leaving no one surviving who, claiming to be his widow, should be allowed to profit by his death.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 20, 1896.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that this veto message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. LACEY submitted a conference report; which was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2221) having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That in lieu of the Senate bill and the House amendment thereto, the following substitute be passed:

"An act for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That those persons, their heirs, or legal representatives, who, between the 15th day of August, A. D. 1887, and the 1st day of January, A. D. 1889, settled upon and made final proof and entry, under the homestead or preemption laws, of lands within the so-called second indemnity belt of the Northern Pacific Railway Company's grant in the State of Minnesota, which entries were afterwards, without their fault, canceled, upon establishing these facts before the register and receiver of the local land office, in such mode and under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be allowed to make final homestead entry, and receive a patent therefor, of a quantity of land of any of the unappropriated public lands of the United States subject to homestead entry, equal in acreage to the land proved up and entered in the said second indemnity belt, as aforesaid, without being required to make any settlement or improvement upon or cultivation of such land so entered prior to such entry; and those persons, their heirs or legal representatives, who, within the period aforesaid for the space of six months settled upon, improved, and cultivated any of said indemnity lands with a view of entering the same under the homestead or preemption laws, being competent to make such entries, and who were not permitted to make such entries, upon establishing these facts before the register and receiver of the local land office, in such mode and under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, shall be allowed to enter under the homestead laws of the United States a quantity of land of the unappropriated public lands of the United States, subject to homestead entry, equal in amount to the land settled upon, improved, and cultivated, as aforesaid, and under the homestead entry so made shall, when making proof and final entry, receive credit for the settlement, improvement, and cultivation made upon the said indemnity land as aforesaid: "Provided, That the law in force in 1889 governing the commutation of homestead entries shall apply to the commutation of entries under this section.

"SEC. 2. That those who are entitled to make the homestead entries prescribed in the preceding section may make such entries of any of the agricultural lands embraced in the provisions of an act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,' approved January 14, 1889, upon condition of paying for such lands the price prescribed in said act.

"SEC. 3. That the right of homestead entry conferred by the provisions of this act shall not be assignable, and no conveyance, sale, or transfer of the land so entered shall be valid or of any effect if made before patent has issued."

THOS. H. CARTER,
FRED T. DUBOIS,
J. H. BERRY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN F. LACEY,
EDGAR WILSON,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LACEY. I ask that the statement of the House conferees be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The substitute reported for the bill and the amendment thereto, while preserving the general form of the Senate bill as to administrative process, embodies the principles embraced in the House amendment in that it permits the persons for whose relief the bill provides to select lands subject to homestead entry in the State of Minnesota or anywhere else on the public domain, and it likewise gives unto said settlers the benefits of the commutation feature of the homestead law as it existed at the time they made their filings on the indemnity lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. LACEY. I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. McRAE. I should like to be heard for a few minutes on that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, this Senate bill was amended in the House by the adoption of a proposition in the nature of a substitute, recommended by the Committee on Public Lands. The Senate disagreed to that amendment, and the matter went into conference without any discussion. We are now asked by this conference report to vote upon a new substitute for the two other propositions. As I have not had an opportunity to examine this new proposition, I am not, of course, prepared to point out fully the objections to it; but I am to some extent familiar with the bill as passed by the Senate, and if this substitute is substantially the original Senate bill, it is a dangerous precedent and it ought not to pass.

The act of which this proposition is in the nature of an extension was passed October 1, 1890, by the Fifty-first Congress. It allowed to certain settlers within the second indemnity limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad grants, who had made final proof and entry and afterwards lost the land, to make a new entry, and fixed a time within which they should initiate and perfect these new entries. That time was permitted to lapse and some of the entries were not transferred under that law. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TOWNE] introduced a bill which was perhaps too broad in its scope; but in order to reach a deserving class of people the committee saw fit to recommend it as an amendment in the nature of a substitute. As I understand it, the pending Senate bill goes very much farther than this Congress has ever gone in the direction of allowing new entries to be made upon the public lands. It requires no residence and cultivation.

As I have already stated, not having had a chance to examine carefully the changes which have been made by the amendment, I will not be able to state as clearly and concisely as I should like to do the objections to the proposition and the difference between the two; but in substance it provided that those persons, their heirs or legal representatives, who settled upon, improved, and cultivated with a view of entering, although they had initiated no claim and acquired no rights under any of the public-land laws, should be allowed the same rights as those who were permitted under the ruling of the Department to initiate such rights. This gives these squatters a legal status they never had, and I am unable to see how it can be justified.

Mr. McMILLIN. Are we to understand from the gentleman's statement that the measure upon which he is commenting allows to the squatter who has never declared any purpose to enter the land under the general entry laws the same privileges as those given to persons who comply with the law?

Mr. McRAE. That is the effect of the bill, as I understand it. Now, if the conferees are able to state just what the conference bill provides I should be glad to have it done, so as to obviate, if possible, the criticisms I make on the Senate bill.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him to point out the objectionable features of the bill as proposed in the substitute?

Mr. McRAE. As I have just said, I have had no opportunity to read the bill; my attention has not been called to it; and the statement made by the conferees is only six or eight lines and furnishes no explanation. It does not afford the information that I think we ought to have. I am now examining the report itself to ascertain precisely what it proposes. I have pointed out the main objection to the bill as I understand it.

Mr. McMILLIN. In view of the importance of this question and the brevity of the report—no adequate explanation having been furnished as to the changes in the two bills—would the gentleman from Iowa not allow it to be printed in the RECORD and go over until to-morrow?

Mr. LACEY. I have no objection in the world. I am satisfied my colleague would not make the remarks he has been making after he has had an opportunity of examining it.

Mr. McMILLIN. That would be the most satisfactory way.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that it go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. McMILLIN. That would save time.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM] objects.

It can be withdrawn, however, and brought up to-morrow.

Mr. LACEY. Then I will withdraw it. Having been read, it will of course be printed in the RECORD anyhow.

The SPEAKER. The report is withdrawn temporarily.

Mr. LACEY. I am satisfied my colleague on the committee will make no objection when he examines it.

STANDARD SHAPE AND SIZE OF DRY MEASURES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a privileged report—a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6833) defining the standard shape and size for dry measures in use in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the first and third amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its second amendment.

G. M. CURTIS,
A. MILNES,
S. W. COBB,
Managers on the part of the House.

A. O. BACON,
J. A. PRITCHARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The effect of the conference report is to make it optional whether potatoes shall be sold by weight or by measure, the House having made it mandatory that potatoes shall be sold by weight.

The second amendment of the Senate provided a different standard of measure for potatoes when sold by retail from the weight when sold by wholesale, and from this amendment the Senate recedes.

The third amendment refers simply to the phraseology of the bill.

The report of the conference committee was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I send a conference report to the desk for immediate action.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 25, 26, 27, 29, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, and 37, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same amended to read as follows: On page 8, section 7, line 22, strike out "examination" where it occurs the second time; and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the thirtieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same amended to read as follows: On page 11, section 12, line 9, strike out "any" where it occurs the first time; and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that section 10 shall read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That the board of medical supervisors of the District of Columbia may, by a vote of four members, refuse to grant or may revoke a license, and may cause the name of any person to be removed from the record of the supreme court of the District of Columbia and from the register of the health office for any of the following causes, to wit: The employment of fraud or deception in passing the examinations provided for in this act, chronic inebriety, the practice of criminal abortion, conviction of crime involving moral turpitude, or unprofessional or dishonorable conduct. In complaints under this section the accused shall be furnished with a copy of the complaint and given a hearing before said board in person or by attorney, and witnesses may be heard for and on behalf of the accused, and for and on behalf of the said board. Appeal from the decision of said board may be taken to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, and the decision of said court shall be final. Said board may at any time within two years from the refusal or revocation of a license, or the cancellation of registration under this section, by a vote of four members, issue, without examination, a new license to the person so affected, restoring to him or her all the rights and privileges of which he or she had been deprived by said board."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4 and 28.

R. C. SHANNON,
J. W. BABCOCK,
S. W. COBB,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The House recedes from its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate designed to correct the phraseology of the bill.

The House also recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to section 10, and agrees to the same with an amendment, by which a physician inserting an advertisement in a newspaper would not come under the provisions of the law.

The Senate recedes from amendments delaying the time when the act shall take effect, and leaving it to take effect from its passage.

The report was adopted.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill H. R. 6119 and the report thereon.

Mr. CANNON. What bill is that? Is that the labor bill?

Mr. PHILLIPS. That is the bill to be considered to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PHILLIPS] asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill to be considered to-morrow, reported from the Committee on Labor. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM].

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PHILLIPS] can introduce a resolution and have it referred to the Committee on Printing.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a change of reference. The bill S. 1420 should go to the Committee on Pensions instead of to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation in said State as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4324) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver one condemned cannon to the city of Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8590) granting to the Denver, Cripple Creek and Southwestern Railroad Company a right of way through the South Platte and Plum Creek forest reserves, in the State of Colorado;

A bill (H. R. 5226) to give increased pension to Gen. James C. Parrott;

A bill (H. R. 5217) making one year's residence in a Territory a prerequisite to obtaining a divorce there;

A bill (S. 1837) granting a pension to Ellen C. Ewing, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Ewing;

A bill (H. R. 4452) to amend section 416 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 8260) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at Port Huron, on the coast of Lake Huron, Michigan;

A bill (H. R. 7285) for the relief of George McFarland;

A bill (H. R. 4179) to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes, relative to guaranties on proposals for naval supplies;

A bill (H. R. 9030) declaring a certain bridge across the Tallahatchie River, in Tallahatchie County, State of Mississippi, a lawful structure, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 270) changing the time of holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of California;

A bill (H. R. 5379) making it unlawful to shoot at or into any locomotive or car, or at any person thereon, or to throw any rock or other missile at or into any locomotive or car in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 3013) to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the merchant-marine engineer service and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills and resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table, and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 2753) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon to the Lake Madison Veteran Association, Grand Army of the Republic, of the State of South Dakota—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 2583) for the relief of Leonard I. Brownson, late first lieutenant Company K, Fifth Vermont Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2384) for the relief of David O. Burleigh—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JOY, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. MILLER of Kansas, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WHEELER, for four days, on account of death in his family.

CONFEREES ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House on the District of Columbia appropriation bill Mr. GROUT, Mr. PITNEY, and Mr. DOCKERY.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—MITCHELL VS. WALSH.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I have an agreement with the Committee on Elections No. 2 that the views of the minority may be filed to-morrow in the contested-election case of Mitchell vs. Walsh.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for an extension of time for filing the minority report in the contested-election case of Mitchell vs. Walsh, with the consent of the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. How long an extension?

Mr. MAGUIRE. For one day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM].

Mr. MAGUIRE. I move, then, that the time in which to file the views of the minority in that case be extended one day. That request is agreed to by the committee. It is a complete surprise that there should be any objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not a privileged question, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM] having objected.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit that the question involves the right of a member to his seat, and that any motion in connection with that or incidental to it ought to be privileged.

The SPEAKER. The time has already been agreed upon by the House. The Chair would be glad to afford relief, but it is not possible under the circumstances.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is a question incidental to the matter of the right of a member to his seat.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it extends to that.

And then, on motion of Mr. DINGLEY (at 4 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred House bill No. 5356, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 21, 1896.

Prayer by Rev. W. L. WATKINSON, of London, England.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. ALLEN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will, without objection, stand approved.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 19th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 2642) to provide for the safety of passengers on excursion steamers.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CULLOM. If there is no morning business, I desire to call up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays the conference report on the river and harbor bill before the Senate by virtue of the unanimous-consent agreement made yesterday.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not hear anything of such an agreement. All right, however.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, as printed in the Senate proceedings of yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The question is, Will the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. PLATT. May I be permitted to put in some morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair will receive routine morning business.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of the Buffers and Polishers' Organization of Meriden, Conn., praying for the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented a petition of the Maryland Christian Endeavor Union of Baltimore, Md., praying for the enactment of legislation raising the age of consent from 16 to 18 years in the District of Columbia; and also for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law in the District of Columbia, and remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to promote race-track gambling in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Onekama, Mich., remonstrating against the introduction of military training in the public schools of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Detroit Lodge, No. 82, International Association of Machinists, of Detroit, Mich.; a petition of Mineral King Lodge, No. 129, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Escanaba, Mich., and a petition of the Council of Trades and Labor Unions, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the Government control and ownership of the telegraph lines; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PRITCHARD presented the petition of J. W. Howard and 113 other members of the Sixth life-saving district, praying that their salaries be paid to them monthly; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST presented a memorial of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BRICE presented a memorial of the Produce Exchange of Toledo, Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Civil Engineers' Club of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the establishment of engineering experiment stations in connection with colleges in the several States; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. QUAY presented a memorial of the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 1552, for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of Chapter II, Colonial Dames of America, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 3087, to incorporate the National Society of Colonial Dames of America; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Washington Chemical Society, of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the enactment of any legislation on the subject of vivisection; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Rhode Island Business Men's Association, of Providence, R. I., praying for the establishment of a department of commerce and manufactures; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the memorial of Alice May Douglass and 44 other citizens of the United States, and the memorial of S. J. Fernald and 12 other citizens of Portland, Me., remonstrating against the introduction of military training in the public schools of the country; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the National Convention of Railroad Commissioners, of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the adoption of certain proposed amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6111) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Sargent;

A bill (H. R. 3857) granting a pension to Thomas Brewer; and

A bill (H. R. 4283) granting a pension to Delia A. Marsh.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (S. 2753) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate 1 condemned cannon to the Lake Madison Veteran Association, Grand Army of the Republic, of the State of South Dakota;

A bill (H. R. 8495) granting to John Hill Post, No. 86, of Boonton, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls;

A bill (H. R. 8324) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate 4 pieces of condemned cannon and 4 pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the Grant County Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association of Wisconsin; and

A bill (H. R. 7771) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to certain posts of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8262) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish condemned cannon to certain Grand Army posts, a monument association, and army post, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. ALDRICH April 30, providing for the purchase of Lookout Point Park, Lookout Mountain, Tennessee, intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill, reported it favorably and submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3582) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against Henry H. Bailey, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2) disposing of two condemned cannon, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5280) for the relief of George W. Freeman, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2048) for the relief of Rufus Betz, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5999) to correct the military record of Elbridge McFadden, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 795) for the relief of John Little and Hobart Williams, of Omaha, Nebr., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7255) authorizing the establishment of a life-saving station on the coast of Maryland, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 3088) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Potomac Electric Light and Power Company, heretofore reported.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1589) in relation to refunding certain sums to port wardens, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

WILLIAM H. FOSTER.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 33) for the relief of William H. Foster, of Boston, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, receiver of the Union Steamship Company, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, accompanied by the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the bill S. 33, as amended, entitled "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of William H. Foster, of Boston, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, receiver of the Union Steamship Company," together with all the papers accompanying, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to inquire whether this is the claim involving importations by ship agents?

Mr. WARREN. No; it is not.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. PASCO. I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that it should read: "In pursuance of the fourteenth section of an act entitled," etc., instead of in pursuance of the provisions of the act generally. I think that is the usual form.

Mr. WARREN. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Florida, and ask that the resolution be so modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

WILLIAM F. JOHNSON.

Mr. SEWELL. I move that the vote by which the bill (S. 2184) granting a pension to William F. Johnson was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3182) granting a pension to Susan E. Cunningham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 3183) granting a pension to Harriet Clarissa Mercur, widow of James Mercur, late professor of civil and military engineering in the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3198) granting a pension to Edward Stanley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3199) granting a pension to Jackson Osborn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PRITCHARD (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

TRADE NAMES OF LIQUORS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4580) to amend section 3449 of the Revised Statutes; which was ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the various Departments of the Government to complete the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for prior years, amounting to $356,115.59; and for the postal service, payable from the postal revenues, amounting to $18,669.95; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the conclusion of the routine business, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections (S. R. 6) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of Senators by the votes of the qualified electors of the States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to state that I have already given notice that I shall move to take up what is called the filled-cheese bill. I hope that bill will be taken up to-morrow morning.

Mr. WHITE. We can not hear the Senator from Ohio on this side.

Mr. SHERMAN. I stated that I have already given notice (and I hope it will not be interfered with) that I shall try to call up the filled-cheese bill to-morrow. The Senator knows the bill by that name. There is a great mass of people who take an interest in that measure.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Of course, if notice has been previously given by the Senator from Ohio, I do not wish to interfere with his notice. I was not aware that such a notice had been given. I will change my notice, then, to Saturday morning, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business. I give notice that I shall move at that time that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution which I have indicated.

Mr. FAULKNER. I suppose that is with the implied understanding, of course, not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I gave notice some time ago of my intention to move the consideration of the joint resolution. I take it there will be no appropriation bill for that time.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think there will be one here for that time, unquestionably.

Mr. CULLOM. I should think the Senator from Oregon had better except appropriation bills. The conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill will perhaps be up for consideration by the Senate. I suggest to the Senator that he except conference reports and the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose there is nothing in the rules to prevent a Senator from giving a notice as to what he intends to do in the future?

Mr. CULLOM. Of course not.

Mr. FAULKNER. I thought it better to have a proper understanding of the matter.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have given the notice, and I shall be governed by circumstances when the time comes.

Mr. FRYE. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has been recognizing Senators to present morning business.

Mr. FRYE. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that morning business is not the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business had not been declared closed, but a conference report is privileged at all times according to the rule.

Mr. FRYE. Unanimous consent was given that the conference report should be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal, and now half an hour is gone and it is hardly up.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6833) defining the standard shape and size for dry measures in use in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GROUT, Mr. PITNEY, and Mr. DOCKERY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 33, 37, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 55, 64, 66, 69, 70, 71, 76, 77, 78, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, and 94 to the said bill, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. PENDLETON managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as stated by me to the Senate yesterday, I shall ask the Senate to disagree to so much of the conference report on the river and harbor bill as relates to the harbor of Brunswick, Ga. I recognize, of course, the rule that the motion can only be made as to the entire report; in other words, the disagreement has to be made as to the whole report in order that the particular item to which I refer may be remitted to the conference committee.

Since I had the opportunity to address the Senate on the subject yesterday I have had conference with some of the members of the conference committee and have agreed to some very liberal concessions, or, rather, I have made some very liberal concessions, which, I think, will put the matter in a condition where the conference committee will deal with it satisfactorily both to themselves and to those whom I represent. If, however, this is to be accomplished, it can only be done by a disagreement on the part of the Senate, in order that the whole matter may be returned to the conference committee. In view of that fact, I shall not make the detailed speech which I expected to make in the presentation of this question to the Senate, and I shall give only such an outline of it as will put the Senate in possession of the facts necessary to enable them to act advisedly upon the question whether the report should be recommitted to the conference committee.

The harbor of Brunswick is one which is recognized as among the best upon the whole Atlantic coast. The water within it is deep and it is very extensive. The commerce from this harbor is one in which all of the prominent Atlantic seaports are very much interested. In other words, ships from all the other seaports find at Brunswick cargoes which they are anxious to get if they can find sufficient water to enable them to enter the harbor.

Up to the year 1890 there had been a continuous shoaling of the water upon the bar, which is situated some 5 miles out of the harbor, so that it had been reduced to a depth of about 18 feet at mean high tide. The consequence was that with the constantly increasing size of ships the harbor was becoming practically closed to those vessels which would naturally engage in the trade of that port. The result was that the commerce of that city ran down to an insignificant figure, and it was evident that as a port it was to be permanently closed to the ordinary commerce of the country.

There being no appropriation by Congress for the opening of the harbor, some public-spirited citizens, in the hope to save their town from what would be equivalent to its destruction, conceived the plan of removing the obstructions from the bar by dynamite. At the head of those was the gentleman who afterwards made a contract with the Government under an act of Congress, Mr. Goodyear. In the absence of any appropriation by Congress these gentlemen went forward and spent some six or seven thousand dollars of their private means in the necessary expenses in making a test as to whether the explosion of dynamite upon the bar would remove the obstructions. The test made, although a very partial one, was so successful that they came to Congress, and under an act of Congress made a contingent contract. A certain amount was to be paid if a certain depth of water was obtained.

The first contract made by the Government with Mr. Goodyear was for a certain depth, 21 feet, I think, for which when obtained the United States would pay to him as contractor the sum of $10,000. That contract was made in utter inexperience as to what would be the cost of it, and he was guided in making it by the large success which he had had in the expenditure of the $6,000, which, of course, related to work which was much cheaper than the work subsequently performed, because it was on the surface. Mr. Goodyear went forward and got some 20 or 21 feet (I have forgotten which) and came to Congress and showed the amount of money which had been expended and the results which had been accomplished; and although the contract was for $10,000, Congress paid him $30,000 on a quantum meruit. Congress also entered into an additional contract by which upon the procurement of the depth of 23 feet there would be $30,000 additional paid.

The contractor under this act of Congress has gone forward and it is in controversy whether or not the 23 feet have been obtained. The engineers of the Government claim that the amount obtained has been over 22 feet and less than 23 feet. The engineers for the contractor presented evidence to the effect that they have procured the entire 23 feet. In addition to the measurements of the contractors, there is the evidence of all the pilots at that port and all of those who are engaged in commerce that ships drawing 23 feet have repeatedly passed over the bar and through the channel thus made.

I have a list here which has been before the committee, but it is not necessary that I should detain the Senate with a discussion of the question whether the 23 feet have or have not been obtained. The matter was before the other House, and upon a full examination by the committee of the House and by the House itself, the bill was sent to the Senate with a provision in the nature of a compromise as to the particular question whether the contractor was entitled to be paid the $30,000 which would be due when 23 feet were obtained. The bill provided that the contractor should go on and continue to deepen the harbor, and that when he had procured 24 feet he should then be paid not only for the 23 feet the $30,000 which had been provided by the previous act, but that he should be paid a certain additional amount for making the 24 feet.

In that shape the bill came from the other House. When it came to the Senate the representation was made, which I think is a very reasonable one, that a 100-foot channel is entirely inadequate to the proper safety of vessels passing in and out of that harbor. It was shown that a vessel in attempting to go through the narrow channel by reason of its failure to obey its rudder had at one time run outside of the channel and had run aground, although there was plenty of water there inside of the narrow channel. For that reason it was sought to get authority to extend, or rather to widen, the channel to the extent of 300 feet, and that was the amendment put on by the Senate making payment at the same rate for the extra 200 feet that was given for the first 100 feet. That was the amendment put upon the bill by the Senate, and it was that amendment upon which the conference committee was engaged, and which they finally reported as one from which the Senate ought to recede.

There are two aspects in which I think this matter is entitled to the very serious consideration of the Senate. In the first place, that of the public interest; that this is a bar which should be removed from one of the most important harbors upon the South Atlantic coast. If the legislation stands as it would stand with a simple consent on the part of the Senate to recede from this amendment there would be no appropriation whatever for the Brunswick Harbor; it would have to go without any work whatever except upon the original 100-foot channel. That is a consideration which affects the public. The other consideration—and I will state that I am not going to detain the Senate with any lengthy discussion; I simply desire to present the facts——

Mr. PLATT. May I make an inquiry?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. How is this matter to get back to the consideration of the conference committee? I was not present when the Senator began his remarks.

Mr. BACON. I recognize the fact, I will state in reply to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, that the only way in which it can get back is by a disagreement to the entire report, and in that way send it back in order that the conferees may again act upon it.

Mr. PLATT. Then, as to the other items with respect to which the conferees have agreed, the disagreement is considered as being merely formal for the purpose of allowing them to consider this item?

Mr. BACON. That is all, so far as I understand.

Mr. DUBOIS. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me, I will state to the Senator from Connecticut that an exactly similar proceeding was had in regard to the Indian appropriation bill a few days ago; precisely the same. The entire report was disagreed to in order to correct an error.

Mr. PLATT. I am very much interested in it, and I want to get the item before the conferees again.

Mr. BACON. I am obliged to the Senator. I have alluded to the public interest in this matter, which I think is really an important one. There is not a port on the Atlantic coast that is not interested in having the Brunswick Harbor in a condition where ships from those ports can go in. There is one single article of commerce from that port in which the entire country is interested. It is one of the largest ports, if not the largest port, from which yellow pine lumber and timber are shipped, which are used all through the country; and unless the Government does properly attend to this bar the port will be practically closed for the entrance of ships of the size which it is now profitable to use in that commerce.

But to return to the question of the private interest of the contractor, I think his action in this matter is one which should appeal to the careful consideration of Congress. As I said, he has not only put in his private money and has spent all the money which he has obtained from Congress, $30,000, but in addition he has spent all the money he could borrow and he has mortgaged every particle of property he could lay his hands on that he could not sell. He has expended, as I am informed, about $100,000 in this improvement. If the Government drops it where it is he is absolutely a bankrupted man. There is no doubt about it in the world. Not only that, but this important work must stop. He can not even get the credit which will be necessary for him to complete the hundred-foot channel he is on, because he has exhausted all resources and all credit. He has certainly done that which I think should commend him to the generous treatment of the Congress of the United States in this matter.

Mr. FRYE. Of course the Senate understands that in order to have any correction made in the report there must be a disagreement to the entire report. It must go back to the conferees. As a matter of course the conferees can in a very few moments report again.

The trouble, and the principal trouble, with the amendment referred to by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] was that there was a provision in it which authorized a departure from the experiment which is being tried and the obtaining of this channel by the old methods of dredging. The committee of conference never could agree to that proposition under any circumstances. The whole thing was entered into as an experiment. If it was a successful experiment, it was important for the Government. If it was an unsuccessful one, as a matter of course it was a misfortune of the man who was making the experiment.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to make one statement which I have made to him in private; and that is, I did not even know that that feature was in the amendment. I had not charge of the details of it, and as soon as the distinguished Senator from Maine called my attention to it in private conversation I said to him that I would yield it, and without hesitation.

Mr. FRYE. All I have to say about it is simply that if the Senate thinks the Senator from Georgia is entitled to a change in this matter all it has to do is to disagree to the report, and the conferees will immediately meet and make another report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it not a quicker way to disagree to that item of the report?

Mr. FRYE. That can not be done. There must be a disagreement to the whole report or none.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Maine thinks this particular item ought to go back, we had better send the whole report back.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Maine was persuaded by the Senator from Georgia, after he had made the great concessions in the amendment which he did, to favor the proposition of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] ought to have another opportunity in this matter, but I wish more particularly to say that I observe in the report of the conferees that there is a disagreement as to three items affecting the Santa Monica-San Pedro matter in California. One of those items as it came to the Senate was for the improvement of Wilmington Harbor, in accordance with the proposition of Colonel Benyaurd, $50,000. That item was in the bill as it came from the other House. To that proposition the Senate merely added a continuing contract, the House having adopted the Benyaurd project. The conferees on the part of the House object, as I understand, to that item.

The other provision, regarding which there was extended debate in this body, with reference to a deep-sea harbor, is also the subject of a disagreement, and then a third provision inserted in the survey portion of the bill, providing for an examination with a view to ascertaining whether a depth of 25 feet could be obtained in the Wilmington or San Pedro inner harbor is also included in the disagreement.

I presume that at this time it is unnecessary to make any motion with reference to this matter, since the whole report is to be disagreed to. I desire, however, to state that I will request the Senate to insist upon its amendments and make the matter the subject of further conference, if I am right in my view of the parliamentary situation.

Mr. FRYE. That will have to be done when the committee reports again, providing it reports to the same effect.

Mr. WHITE. I so understand it, and desiring to have no trouble hereafter I make this statement now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was nonconcurred in.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate request a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. FRYE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ALLEGHENY RIVER.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to call up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which is now upon the table.

Mr. VEST. I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3170) to authorize the Butler and Pittsburg Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Allegheny River, to report it with an amendment, and to ask for its immediate consideration. It is a formal matter, and I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Is it a long bill?

Mr. VEST. It is an ordinary bridge bill and is not very long.

Mr. CULLOM. As the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] has appealed to me and says it is an important bill, which should be passed at once, I yield for that purpose, if there will be no debate.

Mr. QUAY. If there is any debate it can go over.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, at the end of section 4, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all railroad companies desiring the use of the bridge authorized by this act shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privilege relative to the passage of trains or cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use, and in case the owner or owners of such bridge and the several companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties. And equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we may now proceed with the consideration of the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator from Illinois allow the filled-cheese bill to be taken up?

Mr. CULLOM. I can not afford to do that. The conference report has been laid aside two or three times to accommodate other appropriation bills. The filled-cheese bill will be discussed and opposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. To some extent, but not much.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator ought not to ask me to yield for a general bill of this sort which will delay a very large appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give notice that after the report is disposed of I will ask the Senate to take up the filled-cheese bill.

Mr. CULLOM. The report, which is the third one on this bill, was read some days ago and laid on the table and printed, so that everybody in the Senate, I suppose, has seen it. All that I desire is that the report shall be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report indicated, which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. Report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, there are two matters in the conference report to which I think the attention of the Senate ought to be called, and, as it seems to me, the Senate ought not to agree to the conference report, basing its objection to an agreement upon two grounds. In the bill as it came from the House originally there was a provision similar to what has been agreed to here—and I do not know but that it was precisely the same—relating to the matter of commissioners of the circuit courts. That matter was considered in the Judiciary Committee in connection with the matter of providing fees for district attorneys and marshals of the United States courts, and the opinion of the Judiciary Committee was unanimous against the provision of the House with reference to the appointment of commissioners.

Then the Appropriations Committee refused to consider favorably the proposition which the House had made with reference to commissioners. My recollection is that when the matter came up on the passage of the bill in the Senate the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] practically asked whether the Senate conferees intended to give away the amendment by which the provision relating to commissioners was stricken out. Perhaps I do not state it exactly as it was put in the Senate, but substantially I think that was the effect of what the Senator from New York said.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Connecticut will permit me. While the question was being discussed, I called attention to the fact of the impropriety of legislating upon an appropriation bill, and instanced the fact that the Judiciary Committee had recommended that the whole matter relating to United States commissioners should be stricken out. The Committee on Appropriations struck it out. Therefore it was not discussed at all in the Senate.

I then called attention to the fact that if the conference committee should agree to the amendment of the House, it would be done without ever having been discussed in the Senate at all. I was then assured in the most positive language, and it can be found in the RECORD, that there would not be an agreement to that effect.

Mr. PLATT. That is my recollection.

Mr. CULLOM. I perhaps ought to say a word in reference to this point, as there seems to be an effort to put the committee in the attitude of going back upon its word.

Mr. PLATT. Not that I know of.

Mr. CULLOM. The truth about it, if the Senator from Connecticut will allow me to interrupt him, is that the whole subject involving attorneys, marshals, and commissioners came before the Senate in the consideration of the bill. The question as to what should be done with them was discussed at some length in the Senate before the bill was taken up for consideration by the Committee on Appropriations at all, as I remember it. It then went to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee referred the whole subject to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. They made their report, leaving out as a matter of fact the commissioners, and the Committee on Appropriations proceeded with the consideration of the bill and reported it, leaving out the commissioners, but reporting finally in favor of an arrangement with reference to attorneys and marshals.

It then got into conference, after the bill had passed the Senate and gone back to the other House, and action was taken by the conferees of the two Houses, a disagreement resulting at first, as I remember, by the conferees of the two Houses in reference thereto. But finally an agreement was had between the conferees of the two Houses as to attorneys and marshals, the conferees of the Senate still disagreeing to any provision in reference to commissioners.

The House conferees insisted upon the regulation of commissioners as well, and in the third conference which has been had upon the bill there was an agreement on the part of the conferees. In every report before this the Senate has known very well exactly the state of the case as it progressed before the conferees of the two bodies.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to state that I am not finding fault with the conference committee. I trust the Senator from Illinois will not think I am.

Mr. CULLOM. I only felt that it was probably due from me to state exactly the history of the matter, so that the Senate might not feel that we have not been strongly disposed to stand by the action of the Senate so long as it seemed at all proper that we should do so with regard to this item.

Mr. PLATT. In reference to that, it seems to me that if the action of the Senate now taken is such as to show that the Senate had decided opinions upon this subject it may not be impossible that the conferees may not agree with the House in accordance with the views of the Senate.

I wish to say that it is hardly the proper way to determine the question of even the salaries of marshals and district attorneys and of the law relating to the commissioners of the United States by disposing of it on an appropriation bill. The effect of it is, and has been so far, that the House has had its own sweet way and will upon the whole matter. I do not mean to say that in every instance the Senate conferees have given up to the House conferees as to salaries of attorneys and marshals, but I do mean to say that with very few exceptions in the matter of marshals' salaries the conferees receded from the position taken by the Senate as to those salaries. Looking at the former report, Senators will see a hundred items from which the Senate receded and agreed to the House bill. I speak now of marshals, and although that matter is passed, I can not help saying that I think very great injustice has been done in some of the districts, my own district especially, in reference to this matter. The truth is that the conferees simply had to take the sums fixed by the House or they could not have an appropriation bill, or thought so. It comes to that again. Practically, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] tells us that the Senate conferees had to recede; they must recede. The House insisted upon this provision with regard to commissioners.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator is making another statement a little strong. Neither the Senate conferees nor the Senate have to do anything because the House asks them to do it, but it is a question of practicability, of what is right and proper, under all the circumstances. These items in the hands of the conferees of the two Houses must be settled in some way, and if we are to agree to the passage of a bill at all somebody must yield. We must give and take, to use a common expression. That is the usual rule. We have simply tried to do the best we could, and we thought that under the circumstances perhaps what we had done was the best that could be done in reporting the result of the conference.

Mr. PLATT. I beg again to assure the Senator from Illinois that I am not criticising the conference committee. I am criticising the result which is reached when we undertake to deal with questions of this sort upon appropriation bills. The very language which the Senator uses—and he uses it because it is absolutely true—that when you go into conference you have to settle things by giving and taking, shows the impropriety and the difficulty of legislating upon subjects of this sort in that way, because all the while the House has the advantage of saying to the Senate conferees, "If you do not do this, you simply get no appropriation bill." The Senate conferees are therefore under coercion to give up things which they know, or ought to know, the Senate does not want them to give up, because the House conferees are in a position to say, "Take this or you do not have any appropriation bill." That is the real truth of the matter plainly stated, without exaggeration and without prevarication.

The Senator says they have had to give and take on this matter of marshals, attorneys, and commissioners. Mr. President, they may have taken a little, but they have given a great deal. I do not think that in relation to the marshals' salaries the House provision has been changed in more than ten or twelve cases; in all the others they remain precisely as the House fixed them in the first place, and in many cases are manifestly unjust. That is so also with reference to the attorneys' salaries. When it comes to the matter of commissioners, it is all given up to the House to fix it just as they had it in the first place. That may be giving and taking, but it is receiving very little, and giving away the lion's share.

With reference to this matter of changing the law as to commissioners, I see no reason for it as proposed in the bill as it came from the House and agreed to by the committee of conference. It has been rejected by two committees of the Senate upon deliberation and investigation, and yet it is given away. What we take is altogether more shadowy than what is given in this legislative game of give and take.

What does this propose to do? I want to call attention to it for a moment, though first I want to call attention to the fact that there is a technical objection to it, which, I suppose, was overlooked by the conferees.

In the Indian Territory we have officers who are called United States commissioners. We have a great many of them, necessarily, for the administration of justice in that Territory. They are clothed with the powers of circuit court commissioners. This bill proposes to legislate all circuit court commissioners out of office, and to confer upon commissioners who are to be appointed by the district courts the powers which are now conferred upon United States circuit court commissioners; but it will leave the commissioners in the Indian Territory without any powers whatever, because the office of circuit court commissioner is abolished, all power is taken away from them, and no power is, by this act, conferred upon the United States commissioners in the Indian Territory. So, if this becomes a law and there is no further legislation—and it is highly improbable that we can get any further legislation at this session—on the 1st day of January next, or whenever it is, all the powers of the United States commissioners in the Indian Territory to have any preliminary examination and to hold for bail in cases of offenses against the United States law will be entirely swept away. But that, I say, is a formal objection, perhaps, to the provision.

This is remarkable legislation, Mr. President. It proposes to legislate out of office every circuit court commissioner in the United States. I do not think any such sweeping provision was ever enacted by Congress, legislating out of office, I do not know how many, but probably four, five, or six hundred court officers in the United States.

Mr. GRAY. What necessity is alleged for that provision of the bill?

Mr. PLATT. Nobody has advocated it; there has not been even one word of discussion of it on this floor.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator know what reason is alleged for such action?

Mr. PLATT. I have heard that there are some United States commissioners somewhere in some of the States who are supposed to be using their offices to make too much money out of them; but that is all that I have ever heard suggested anywhere. I want to say, if that is true, it is local and not general. I want to say that in the older settled States in the country that does not apply at all.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the complaint is that a large number of these commissioners were appointed some time since, and that the authority which appointed them—the judges—are very loath to remove them, although the Attorney-General has complained in some instances that they were not discharging their duties properly; that they were attempting to make too much money out of their offices, and in that way were annoying and robbing the citizens; yet the judges have declined to make any changes. The feeling is, unless we legislate upon the subject, some of them will remain in office and continue such practices.

Mr. PLATT. That is a reflection upon the judges of the United States courts.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, the power to remove exists for any good cause, does it not?

Mr. PLATT. It certainly does.

Mr. HILL. It is purely within the discretion of the circuit court judges, if they desire to make removals.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me an astonishing argument that the judges of the circuit court will not remove a man who is improperly exercising the duties of his office when their attention is called to it by the Attorney-General. I am not going to speak to the question of fact, but it is a very remarkable statement to make in support of this legislation. But however that may be——

Mr. TELLER. I do not make the charge. I say that is the complaint made, and that is the ground upon which this legislation was proposed in another body.

Mr. PLATT. I think it is an insufficient ground, because I take it that it can not exist to any considerable extent that a United States commissioner anywhere is discharging the duties of his office in such a reckless manner as would justify and make proper his removal, and that the judges of the circuit court will not remove him when their attention is called to it by the Attorney-General.

Now, I want to look at the matter once more with regard to the arbitrary character of this legislation. It is a pretty dangerous thing to commence, Mr. President. I suppose we have in Congress in particular instances legislated one or two men out of office somewhere; but here we propose a wholesale legislation of incumbents out of office because there are two or three or half a dozen people somewhere in the United States who are improperly discharging the duties of their offices, as it is claimed, though it has never been alleged on the floor of the Senate, because we have had no discussion of it. That of itself is enough to condemn this legislation, and it is enough to make the Senate take a firm stand that it will not submit at the dictation of the House conferees that such an arbitrary, unjust, and uncalled-for act as the legislating out of office of all the commissioners of the circuit courts in the United States, good and bad.

What is proposed to be done? Having legislated them out of office, we must provide such officers in some way. So it is proposed that the district courts shall appoint district commissioners, who shall perform the same duties which are now performed by the United States circuit court commissioners by law; that is to say, they take away the appointing power from the circuit courts and confer it upon the district courts, whose judges are inferior in rank. It is not only a reflection upon all the United States commissioners in the country but a reflection on all the circuit judges in the country. I do not want to use harsh language about it, though I am tempted to do so. I say it is an utterly unjustifiable method of legislation.

Then, again, it creates a new term of office of United States commissioners. I think that is all wrong. Mr. President, from the foundation of the Government, from the enactment of the judiciary act, it has been the settled practice of this country that these commissioners should be appointed by the circuit judges, and to remain commissioners until the circuit judges found reason to remove them. Now it is proposed to revolutionize the whole system and have these men appointed no longer by the circuit courts, but by the district courts, which is synonymous with saying the district judges, and gives them a term of four years. What does that do? It makes the office a political office, an office to be scrambled for, an office which a man will have to leave on account of his political standing every time there is a change made in the office of district judge and a judge of another political faith takes the place of the person who for any reason goes out.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. The Senator has given considerable attention to this subject, and I should like to ask him whether there is any provision whatever for those United States commissioners holding over after the expiration of their terms until their successors are appointed or whether their terms absolutely expire? I do not discover, upon a hasty examination, any provision for their holding over at all.

Mr. PLATT. Unless there is something in the general law or the common law which permits them to hold over; there is certainly no provision for it in this proposed legislation.

That is all unnecessary; it is arbitrary; it can not be justified. It turns the office of clerk of the courts, district and circuit, into an office to be scrambled for as the political situation in the country changes. It does away with men of experience, and, except upon the idea that the persons who now occupy the positions and who are legislated out of office, are to be reappointed, it will induct into these very important offices a lot of men who have had no experience whatever. Is there any ground upon which this can be justified? Has there been any such complaint, or is there any such evil as requires it, or even excuses it?

I remember something in Blackstone that in the construction of laws we should consider the old law, the mischief, and the remedy. This is not the construction of a law, but it is quite well to consider the old law, the mischief, and the remedy. In this matter the old law is all right, the mischief is but a minimized mischief, if at all, and the remedy is tenfold worse than the disease. So I say that it seems to me upon this matter the Senate ought to take a firm stand.

It might be supposed there was a great reform here in the matter of fees, but there is no reform in the matter of fees of the commissioners which justifies this extreme and arbitrary legislation. There is a provision here to which I should like to call attention.

> And no person shall at any time be a clerk of a United States court and a United States commissioner without the approval of the Attorney-General.

It may be said that the Attorney-General, when it is quite proper that the clerk of the court should be a commissioner, will approve. Perhaps he will and perhaps he will not. I do not think Congress ought to commit any such authority as that to the discretion of the Attorney-General, which may be exercised even according to his whim or according to any misinformation he may have as to the character of the clerk.

Mr. President, in all the Eastern States, in the State of New York, the State of Pennsylvania, and in all the older States of the country, the acting commissioner, the commissioner who does the business, almost always is the clerk of the court. Ever since I have known anything about the practice of law, in the State of Connecticut the clerk of the United States district and circuit courts has been the acting commissioner there; and I venture to say that during that whole time there has not been a complaint of his action. He is the most proper man in the State to perform that duty. I might refer to the clerk and commissioner in the southern district of New York, Mr. Shields, who has achieved a national reputation as clerk and commissioner, who, I might say, is almost as well qualified to judge of offenses arising under our treaties with foreign countries as the Secretary of State himself, yet he can not be a commissioner unless he comes down and begs the Attorney-General to continue him as commissioner, if indeed he should happen to be appointed as commissioner.

I did not intend to spend half so much time on this subject as I have, but it is a matter of too much importance to pass the Senate simply because the conference committee says so, and without any investigation and discussion.

There is one other thing in the report of which I do not speak so earnestly, but to which I wish to call attention. This report provides for the appointment of a register of copyrights, and I wish to call attention to the method of appointment provided for by the report.

Prior to 1870, I think, copyrights were obtained by entering the thing for which a copyright was required in the office of the district court of the United States in the respective districts. You take up an old copyrighted book, and you will find "Entered according to act of Congress in the district court of the district of Delaware," for instance, and signed by the clerk. In 1870, upon the revision of the patent and copyright laws, the duty of receiving and registering copyrights was transferred to the Librarian of Congress, with whom it still remains; and the copyright law requires that the person desiring to procure a copyright shall deposit two copies of the work to be copyrighted with the Librarian of Congress, and he is then entitled to receive from him an official certificate, which is prescribed in the statute.

Now it is proposed to take that duty away from the Librarian of Congress and give it to a register of copyrights. That register of copyrights is to be appointed, I think, in a method unknown to the Constitution. He is to be appointed—no, it does not say appointed—but he is to be "selected * * * by the Joint Committee upon the Library of Congress, consisting of the Committee on the Library of the Senate and the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives." They are to select him. There is no provision that he shall be appointed at all. It is of the highest importance that the person who has charge of copyright matters shall be an officer of the Government.

Mr. GRAY. A legal officer?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, a legal officer, because the title to every copyright in the country depends upon his official act.

Mr. GRAY. I will ask the Senator from Connecticut if that method has been decided upon, that the register of copyrights is to be selected by a joint committee?

Mr. PLATT. It is so stated in this report.

Mr. GRAY. In the conference report?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; it is in the conference report, and I will call attention to it.

Mr. GRAY. That seems to be a most amazing provision.

Mr. PLATT. I call attention to it. Here is the provision:

> For register of copyrights, $2,500, who shall be selected on or after June 1, 1896, by the Joint Committee upon the Library of Congress, consisting of the Committee on the Library of the Senate and the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives, and who shall give good and sufficient bond to the United States in such sum, not less than $20,000, as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, and to be approved by him, faithfully to account for all public moneys and property which he may receive.

Here is something from which it will appear that if these powers are conferred upon him they are conferred very crudely:

> He shall have and exercise all the rights and duties touching copyrights now devolved upon the Librarian of Congress.

It will be observed that this takes him away from the Library. He is not an officer of the Library except as he gets connected with it by this clause:

> He shall, without additional compensation, disburse the sums appropriated for the salaries and expenses of his office and also the salaries and expenses appropriated for the Library of Congress.

That is all that connects him with the Library. Now, it is claimed, as I understand it, that he can be appointed in this way because the Library of Congress is an institution of Congress, solely within the charge of Congress. It might be interesting to go into the history of how the Library has been built up.

Mr. GRAY. The Houses of Congress, if I may interrupt the Senator, do not undertake to appoint the Librarian of Congress, but he is appointed by the President.

Mr. PLATT. Congress does not appoint him. I was coming to that in a moment. The Librarian is appointed by the President. That was ordered by a statute away back in 1802, I think, before we had very much of a library. The Library started when Congress was coming from Philadelphia to Washington by an appropriation to purchase $5,000 worth of books for the use of Congress, and when Congress came here they provided for the appointment of a Librarian; that he should be appointed solely by the President, and the President for the first few years appointed the Clerk of the House as Librarian ex officio. Then President Monroe appointed a Librarian of Congress as the Library grew, and that is the way it comes about; that is the way the appointment has been continued up to the present time.

How can Congress appoint an officer under the Constitution? I do not say that it may not appoint agents under the Constitution to perform certain duties, and, if money is appropriated for the purpose, to pay them legally. I do not say a Capitol policeman can not be appointed by the joint action of the Architect of the Capitol and the Sergeant-at-Arms, but when you are talking about a legal and constitutional officer, I doubt very much—I will not put it any stronger than that—whether Congress can appoint, or, if they can appoint, whether they can delegate the appointment to a joint committee of the two Houses. The Constitution is familiar to everyone.

Mr. GRAY. Congress is not the head of a Department.

Mr. PLATT. Section 2 of Article II of the Constitution provides that the President—

> Shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

Under that provision of the Constitution there was vested, as it might constitutionally have been, the appointment of the Librarian in the President alone. I do not know of the case of any other officer where the appointment has been vested in the President alone. But Congress can not appoint a legal officer of itself. You will find here under the head of the Senate and the House of Representatives——

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks that that is an unconstitutional provision?

Mr. PLATT. What is an unconstitutional provision?

Mr. TELLER. The one providing for the appointment of a register of copyrights by a joint committee, as provided in the conference report.

Mr. PLATT. That is just the argument I am trying to make.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the Senator answer the question categorically. I am not expressing any opinion about it myself, but I want to get his view of it.

Mr. PLATT. I think there is no power under the Constitution giving Congress the right to appoint a legal and constitutional officer of this Government.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut this interesting question in the hearing of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]: I ask, if Congress may appoint this officer, who is to be clothed with these important and responsible duties, what limit is there on the power of Congress to appoint officers in every Department of the Government?

Mr. PLATT. I do not find any power in this Constitution giving to Congress the right to appoint an officer. That is what I was trying to argue.

Mr. TELLER. Then I will put the question, does the Senator from Connecticut think the register of copyrights is an officer?

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. TELLER. He is not an officer?

Mr. PLATT. I think I said some time ago that I supposed Congress might appoint an agent to attend to any of the duties of Congress, but he does not become a constitutional and legal officer. It will be observed, the Constitution having provided that the Vice-President shall be President of the Senate, that—

> The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President, or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States.

Mr. GRAY. Its officers.

Mr. PLATT. Its officers, but they are constitutional and legal officers of the Senate, and the same thing is true with regard to the House of Representatives. The provision of the Constitution as to the House of Representatives is:

> The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers.

So they become officers of the Senate and of the House, but you might just as well commit to the janitor of Congress—whom I agree that the two Houses can appoint—you might just as well commit to the janitor of Congress the power to act in this copyright matter as to the person whom it is proposed to call register of copyrights.

I am not going to say that it will invalidate the copyrights of the United States not to have a constitutional and legal officer who shall discharge the duties of the copyright law, but I am going to say that it is not seemly, and it is not proper, and we had better not begin this matter. It will be observed that this man is taken thoroughly out from the Library, the only ground for this appointment being that Congress, having charge of the Library, can make appointments of persons to take charge of matters in the Library of itself, without authorizing it to be done by the President; but Congress never yet has done it, though it is said it can do it.

This man, too, is pretty far removed from the Library. It is only by a very thin, elastic, and well-stretched cord that he is connected with the Library at all. The duties of this person regarding copyrights are taken entirely away from the Librarian, and so far as he is a register of copyrights he has no connection with the Library; he is only connected with the Library because he is made disbursing officer for the Library.

I submit that he is not and can not be, under this appointment, a constitutional and legal officer, and that we ought to have one to attend to this copyright business, and that we ought not to commit the important matters which have heretofore devolved upon the Librarian to a mere agent or employee of Congress.

Having said this much, I have said all I desire to say about this report. I think I have said enough to show that the Senate ought to send it back to the committee and insist upon its action in regard to the appointment of commissioners and for some other method of appointment of the register of copyrights.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I wish to submit a few remarks in continuation of the argument made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] in closing. The conference report provides, as he says, for the appointment of a register of copyrights by the joint action of the Committees on the Library of the Senate and House of Representatives. I maintain that the Constitution confers upon the Executive alone the power to appoint every officer in this Government except as to those which are given to the heads of Departments and to the courts.

Mr. GRAY. By law.

Mr. MILLS. By the Constitution, the supreme law.

Mr. GRAY. The Constitution says Congress may invest that duty.

Mr. MILLS. When Congress makes a law it passes through both branches of Congress and is submitted to and receives the approval of the President of the United States, or it is passed over his veto and then becomes a law. The law creates the office, but the Constitution has placed the appointment alone either in the President of the United States or in the head of one of the Executive Departments or in the courts of the country.

Now, this is no Congressional Library. It has the name of Congressional Library, but the property belongs to the nation. It is the United States Library, created by the law of the United States, and its officers must be appointed by the President. There are no heads of Departments who can have jurisdiction of this appointment. Courts can not have it. I suppose that under the Constitution, calling this an inferior office, we might confer upon the head of a Department the power to make this appointment.

Mr. President, I find in one provision of the Constitution the power given to Congress "to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries." In this one single paragraph of the Constitution provision is made for patents and copyrights.

When the Congress established a Patent Office Bureau they provided for the appointment of a Commissioner of Patents. Will anyone contend that Congress could have conferred that appointment upon the Joint Committee on Patents of the Senate and House of Representatives? If they can do that, they can create ambassadors, and they can confer upon the Joint Committee on Foreign Relations of the two Houses the appointment of those ambassadors.

Mr. President, if Congress can do this thing, they can emasculate the Executive of all the appointing power. It is his duty under the Constitution to see that Congress shall not so encroach upon the Executive as to destroy the Constitution. All officers of the Government are required to support the Constitution and to take an oath to that effect. Every one of us has taken it. Every State officer from governor to constable has taken that oath by the command of the Constitution of the United States and of every State in the Union. Why is that? Why were the founders of republican government so anxious about the Constitution as to require every officer in the national and State governments to take an oath to support it? Such a thing is a novelty in governments. No other government upon earth that I know anything about ever required of its officers, executive, legislative, and judicial, an oath to support the constitution of its government. It was the jealousy for liberty and free government that laid that down and required the officers in all the departments of the Government to observe a limitation and not cross it.

Mr. President, we ought to observe the distinction drawn by our fathers in the Constitution where they required each officer to swear to support the Constitution. But when the President is inducted into that high office he is charged not only to see that the laws are faithfully executed, but to take care—that is a strong expression—to take care that the laws are faithfully executed. What law? The Constitution is the highest law; the laws of Congress and treaties after it. But he is sworn not to support, he is sworn to protect, to preserve, and defend the Constitution. When we are sworn to support the Constitution we are confined to our own action; we are to govern our own action; but the President is sworn to see that we do not transcend that action, and he is invested with the power to prevent it as far as the Executive veto can accomplish it.

Mr. President, if this office is created by the proposed act of Congress it will be a nullity. If the officer is inducted by the appointment of the committees of the two Houses, I say his appointment will be a nullity. He is a disbursing officer, charged with the disbursement of all the moneys both in the copyright and in the library department, and is not responsible for a single, solitary dollar of it. If I were Comptroller of the Treasury and had to pass upon the moneys to be placed in this officer's hands under this appointment, having sworn to support the Constitution by my own action, and that obligation appearing to me as it does now, I would never pass one of his accounts. I never would put a dollar into his hands until by the mandamus of a court I was compelled to do it.

This is all I desire to say on the constitutional argument. But this same provision, to which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] referred a while ago, has a remarkable conclusion:

> The assistants in the Library of Congress now employed on work relating to the execution of the copyright law shall continue to be so employed, in the discretion and under the direction of the register of copyrights, until the close of the fiscal year 1897.

Mr. President, why are these people to be turned out at the end of the fiscal year 1897? Why is there a provision of law that invests this officer, even though he be appointed by the President, with the power to sweep without cause every officer under him out of existence and appoint his own friends and favorites or the friends and favorites of some other person after the 30th day of June, 1897? I am opposed to such a sweeping provision. I am opposed to giving power to any officer of the Government to turn everybody out of his department at his pleasure without giving some good cause.

Subordinate officers in all departments of our Government are secure in their places as long as they discharge their duties faithfully and are efficient and faithful officers; but these people are not secure even though they perform all their official duties correctly. Though no cause whatever can be assigned for their removal, it is in the discretion of this newly appointed officer under the control of the two Houses of Congress to sweep all these people out of existence and appoint his own favorites at his pleasure.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I am opposed to agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I agree in a general way with the proposition made by the Senators from Connecticut and Texas that Congress can not appoint an officer of the United States. I have been a great advocate of the proposition and I do not consider my devotion to that correct principle of constitutional law as less than that of the Senators from Connecticut and Texas. But I submit that the argument does not apply in this case. This is not such a question, in my belief, as they have stated. The register of copyrights is not to be an officer of the United States in the constitutional sense. He is only an appointee in the Library of Congress.

The whole question resolves itself into this, whether Congress can constitutionally have a Congressional Library and appoint all the officers in that library. If it can not, then the argument of the Senators is sound. But if it can have a Library of Congress, belonging solely to Congress, and can provide that copyright publications shall be deposited in that library, with the legal effect of giving the owners of the publications the protection which the law intends to give them, then the whole argument of the Senators is gone.

Can Congress have a Library of Congress, and can it require copyrights to be registered there and nowhere else? One fact is certain. We in fact have a Library of Congress. To be sure, there is a provision that the President shall appoint the Librarian; but I hold and I think the correct position is that Congress can appoint its own Librarian. Why not? No other branch of the Government has any control over this Library. It was the intention of the two Houses in creating a library that it should be absolutely within the control of the two Houses and not in the control of the Executive, and not even in the control of the Supreme Court. The law provides distinctly for a Congressional Library under the sole management and control of Congress.

How is it controlled by Congress? By the two Committees on the Library in the two Houses of Congress? The Library is carried on under the management of those committees. I do not propose to argue at any length the proposition that this is the Library of the two Houses, because here it is established in chapter 6 of the Revised Statutes, and every provision in this chapter shows the intention of Congress to keep the Library of Congress as an institution belonging to Congress in a special sense, and not belonging in any sense to any other branch of the Government.

Now, Mr. President, what is the copyright law? It is found on page 957 of the statutes. The first section is headed "Copyrights to be under charge of Librarian of Congress."

> SEC. 4948. All records and other things relating to copyrights and required by law to be preserved shall be under the control of the Librarian of Congress and kept and preserved in the Library of Congress, and the Librarian of Congress shall have the immediate care and supervision thereof, and, under the supervision of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library, shall perform all acts and duties required by law touching copyrights.

Then follow all the other provisions as to copyright, requiring the deposit of books and everything for which a copyright is desired with the Librarian of Congress, and there is no other officer of the Government who has anything to do with copyrighting except the Librarian of Congress and his assistants.

Mr. GRAY. And he was appointed by the President.

Mr. CHANDLER. And he was appointed by the President; but if my argument is good for anything, it is that the Librarian of Congress by law may be appointed by the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator, under his view of the power of Congress to invest this appointee of the two Houses with this function, what limit is there upon the power of Congress to invest any of the employees of the House or the Senate with any function entirely outside of their duties to the House or to the Senate? Why can not we invest the assistant doorkeeper of the Senate with the functions of a United States commissioner?

Mr. CHANDLER. Any extreme case can be supposed. I am not arguing that Congress might take the functions of the Government for collecting revenue or connected with the Army or the Navy into the Library of Congress. I am only arguing that it is within the fair discretion of Congress to make the Librarian of Congress the keeper of the copyright publications; that it is competent for Congress to require copyrighted books to be deposited in the Library of Congress. The desire to do this was one of the causes of the transfer of the depositing of copyrighted books from the circuit courts, where the books were of no use, to the Library of Congress, where the publisher is not only obliged to register the title of the book, but is also obliged to deposit a copy of the book itself. Whatever may be said as to an extreme case, no one can read this statute without seeing the absolute intention of Congress to connect the copyrighting of books and publications with the Library of Congress. It seems to me that it is impossible to contend that it is the exercise of an unconstitutional power for Congress to make the Librarian of Congress or a subordinate of the Librarian of Congress a register of copyrights.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether he would consider it an extreme case if I suggested that under the same contention we might appoint the Commissioner of Patents, for instance, who is the officer invested by law with the judicial power of deciding upon a patent and issuing that privilege under the Constitution to the person who has made a valuable invention.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not certain that we could not. I do not argue that we could. I say an extreme case may be supposed where a constitutional line ought to be drawn. I do not think the governor of a State can vote for a United States Senator under any circumstances. The Senator from Delaware thinks he can. That is a very extreme case. But I say here, first, that it is a very weak argument to say that we can not have a Library of Congress solely under our control, and to say further that having such a library, we can not make it the copyright office of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator a question? Whoever has charge of the copyrights, whether it be the Librarian of Congress or some man who shall be appointed for that purpose, has to exercise judical functions with regard to determining who is entitled to a copyright. If he issues a certificate it gives a man a copyright. If he refuses to do it the man gets no copyright. Does not the Senator think that a man charged with that duty ought to be something more than an employee of Congress?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator does not argue that the register of copyrights is a judicial officer?

Mr. PLATT. In one sense.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not necessary that he shall be even an executive officer.

Mr. PLATT. He is.

Mr. CHANDLER. He is not, I think.

Mr. PLATT. The Librarian of Congress is made an executive officer of the United States, exercising judicial functions.

Mr. CHANDLER. Congress, through some notion such as the Senator from Connecticut has been arguing in favor of, after it had made a Library of Congress, which it was perfectly competent for it to keep under its sole control, did say that the President should appoint the Librarian of Congress, but it was an unnecessary concession, as it seems to me, to an unsound opinion. Read the whole statute as to the Library of Congress, and no man can doubt that it is perfectly competent for Congress to establish that Library. Then read the whole statute as to copyrights, and no one can doubt that it is competent for Congress to place the copyright office of the United States in the Office of the Librarian of Congress. If you concede these two things, then the whole constitutional argument falls to the ground, because the register of copyrights is not an officer of the United States within the provision of the Constitution, which says that the appointing power shall be given the President. He is an officer of Congress, performing his duty, as the Librarian of Congress now does, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, and he may be appointed just as Congress chooses to provide for his appointment.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator will permit me right here, conceding all that he says, that Congress may establish a Library and Congress may make that Library the depository of copyrights, I insist that what he says follows does not follow and we do not give away our case. When the Library was established there was no copyright business committed to it; but in 1870 Congress found a Librarian of Congress appointed by the President who was an officer of the Government, and then they committed the issuing of copyrights to that officer of the Government. I insist that whether it be the Librarian or whether it be a register of copyrights, he exercises both judicial functions and executive functions with relation to the issue of copyrights, and he must under the statute.

Mr. CHANDLER. He has not any discretion about anything.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly he has.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is it?

Mr. PLATT. He rejects applications over and over again.

Mr. CHANDLER. He has no power to do it.

Mr. PLATT. He certainly has; and he does.

Mr. CHANDLER. He has no power, whatever, except to take a document and file it.

Mr. PLATT. How does a man get a copyright? Can a man get a copyright which is valid under the law simply by sending something to the office which he is not entitled to copyright?

Mr. CHANDLER. Most certainly he can get into the court with the copyright. He is obliged to do nothing but make his deposit with the Librarian.

Mr. PLATT. Most certainly he can not. He can not get into court unless he has upon the article which he says is copyrighted these words: "Entered according to the act of Congress in the year ——, by A B, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington"; or at his option the word "copyrighted," together with the year when the copyright was entered.

Mr. CHANDLER. He can put that on himself.

Mr. PLATT. He would be thrown out of court very quickly if he had not a certificate of the Librarian.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. PLATT. The Librarian rejects applications for copyright over and over again.

Mr. CHANDLER. He has no right whatever to do it. Is it possible that the Senator seriously thinks the provision for the appointment of the register of copyrights by Congress is contrary to the Constitution? He argues that, does he not?

Mr. PLATT. I have not said that we can not appoint any person in connection with the Library. What I say is that in appointing a person to have charge of the copyright system and the registration of copyrights, and the decision whether a thing is entitled to a copyright, we should have a legal and constitutional officer of this Government, and that we can not appoint such an officer.

Mr. CHANDLER. I again reply that the register of copyrights, the Librarian of Congress, has nothing whatever to do with deciding whether anyone is entitled to a copyright or not. But I am opposing the argument that it is unconstitutional for Congress to provide for the appointment of a register of copyrights. If that is so, then I ask the Senator whether a certain clause that I am about to read is not also unconstitutional:

All records and other things relating to copyrights and required by law to be preserved shall be under the control of the Librarian of Congress, and kept and preserved in the Library of Congress; and the Librarian of Congress shall have the immediate care and supervision thereof, and, under the supervision of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library, shall perform all acts and duties required by law touching copyrights.

Now, is it an unconstitutional law which provides that the copyright business shall be done under the supervision of a joint committee of Congress on the Library?

Mr. GRAY. I think it is.

Mr. PLATT. It may not be, for the reason that the Librarian of Congress was a constitutional officer when the law was enacted.

Mr. CHANDLER. But if as an appointee of the President he belongs to the executive and not to the legislative department of the Government, then it is unconstitutional to put such an appointee of the President in the performance of his duties under the supervision of a joint committee on the Library of Congress.

Mr. GRAY. I do not see how the constitutionality of that can be defended. I accept the logic of the situation.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Delaware always follows his constitutional theories to the uttermost limit; the Senator from Connecticut wants to run away from his, whereas I take the Library of Congress as I find it on the statute book, and I take the copyright law as I find it on the statute book, and

I say it was a solecism to authorize the President of the United States to appoint the Librarian of Congress. I think the provision for his appointment grew out of a notion that had no foundation in correct constitutional law, and that the provision might be repealed to-morrow, and I say that it ought to be repealed to-morrow, and the Librarian of Congress ought to be appointed by Congress itself, because if it is the Library of Congress, if it is our Library, the President has nothing to do with it, and we should appoint the Librarian and all other subordinate officers. I have no doubt about it as a matter of constitutional law.

I have no doubt, further, that Congress can impose the functions of register of copyrights upon the Librarian of Congress. It is a constitutional statute. It is a very natural and judicious and proper procedure. Congress can, moreover, provide not only for the appointment of the Librarian of Congress, but for every subordinate of his, and necessarily, therefore, it can provide that the register of copyrights shall be appointed by the joint committees.

On this point I end, as I began, by saying that I have very strict notions myself as to the interference of one branch of the Government with another branch of the Government. I remember that Congress once sent a committee of the two Houses to the State, War, and Navy Department building to divide the rooms in that great building equitably between the War Department, the State Department, and the Navy Department. I had the honor then to be the Secretary of the Navy. I welcomed the committee with courtesy, but I took occasion to protest all the time that they were in the performance of an unconstitutional function; that they could not be sent there for that purpose. Congress might have divided the building as it chose by explicit law, but it had no business to send a committee of the two Houses to survey the building and make an adjudication how it should be divided. That was an unconstitutional act, and this would be an unconstitutional act if Congress had no power to establish a Library of Congress under the sole control of Congress. Congress has done that very thing, and the total control of the Library and of the copyright office is with Congress.

Having argued against my friend the Senator from Connecticut on this point, I take occasion to say, before finishing, that I concur entirely with him on the other branch of the case which he argues. I hope that the conference report will be disagreed to, for it is one of the most astonishing pieces of legislation that I ever heard of to provide by a rider on an appropriation bill for the removal of all the district and circuit court commissioners at one fell swoop.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I have very high respect for the Constitution of the United States, and I have not yet been long enough in the Senate to have it blunted or dulled by my greater respect for the powers of this body or of Congress. The report of the committee provides an appropriation for a "register of copyrights," and I call the attention of the Senate to some of the provisions with respect to the character and duties and actions of this officer. In the first place, he is to give "good and sufficient bond to the United States in such sum, not less than $20,000, as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, and to be approved by him, faithfully to account for all public moneys and property which he may receive."

What are the public moneys and property that he may receive? If he is a mere employee of the Congress of the United States, why require him to give bond to the United States to account for the moneys of the United States to be received officially by him? The moneys he is to receive are not the moneys of Congress. They are not received by him for Congress, but under the proposed act he is vested with the power to demand from the citizens of the United States money for acts performed as register, for the registry of copyrights by the United States, and the moneys he receives become the moneys of the United States, and he must account for them as such.

Not only that, but he shall have an official seal containing the words "Register of Copyright, United States of America," and there in the proposed act is an official designation of his title. For it will not be contended by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that a mere employee of the Congress of the United States is to use a seal with any other than his official designation and character, and if upon that seal he is authorized to have inscribed, and to record upon every certificate, "Register of Copyright, United States of America," it seems to me it puts beyond all question the proposition that under the proposed act Congress is creating an officer of the United States.

I do not pretend to say that Congress may not employ a Librarian to take charge of its Congressional Library, to look after all the property that is within the possession of or designed for the use of the Congress of the United States, but even if Congress provides a Librarian I do not believe that he becomes an officer of Congress, for in my judgment there is no such thing under the Constitution of the United States as an officer of Congress. The Constitution expressly provides that the Senate may choose its officers; it expressly provides that the House may choose its officers, and it expressly provides that all officers of the United States must be appointed by the President of the United States by and with the consent of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. The President has to commission them.

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; there is another provision in the Constitution which requires that the President must commission all officers of the United States, and we are driven to the irresistible conclusion, it seems to me, that if the two Houses of Congress, acting jointly, for the care and preservation of its property, for the custody and safe-keeping of the buildings and institutions which are provided for its use, selects a man to perform a service for it, he is not an officer of the Senate nor an officer of the House. He is not and can not be an officer, but he must remain a mere employee of Congress.

I do not believe it is contemplated under the Constitution of the United States that there shall be conferred upon a mere employee, who is not a constitutional officer under any section or provision of the Constitution, the performance of those public duties and of those acts which ought to be and must be in the truest sense of the word official with respect to matters and things not in any wise connected with the Senate of the United States. I do not believe there should be given to such an employee these official duties which have been reserved under the Constitution for those officers and those alone who are commissioned and created officers under its provisions.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me?

Mr. THURSTON. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator admits that the Senate might have a library and might appoint a librarian who would not be an officer of the United States within the meaning of the clause relative to the appointing power; and of course he admits that the House of Representatives may have a library of the House which would be its own.

Mr. GRAY. Allow me to interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire, and to say we have such a Librarian.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very good. Does the Senator from Nebraska contend that when Congress proposes to have a library belonging to the two bodies jointly it thereupon becomes necessary that the appointees to take charge of such joint library shall be appointed by the President of the United States because they become officers of the United States?

Mr. THURSTON. Not at all; I have just stated the contrary. But even if we concede that a Librarian can be appointed by Congress and is an employee of Congress, the Constitution does not permit Congress to give him any of those official or executive powers which the Constitution intends shall be exercised alone by an officer of the United States. I say you are proposing to confer upon this mere employee of Congress executive and official powers with relation to the performance of duties that in no wise pertain to the business of Congress or to its affairs, but pertain solely to the business and affairs of the American people.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I conclude that the Senator from Nebraska thinks that the provision of the copyright statute that the Librarian of Congress shall do his work in reference to copyrights under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library is unconstitutional?

Mr. THURSTON. I do not understand that that provision is of the character stated. I see nothing extraordinary in providing by act of Congress, approved by the President of the United States, that a committee of this body or of the other House or a joint committee may make rules and regulations for the administration of some certain office. But however that may be——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me for a moment?

Mr. THURSTON. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator certainly does not contend that a mere act of Congress can authorize a committee of this body to perform an executive act or to supervise the performance of an executive act which he argues is exclusively within the function of the Executive?

Mr. THURSTON. No; but I do hold that Congress may by act authorize any individual to make mere rules and regulations for the administration of one of the offices of the Government.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, he does not quite meet the case.

Mr. THURSTON. If the Senator will pardon me, for instance, Congress can by act authorize a judge of the circuit court of the United States to make rules and regulations governing the performance of the duties of a commissioner of the United States. It can not be contended that by mere delegation of authority to prescribe regulations there has been vested any of the powers of Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to keep the Senator to the exact case which is contained in section 4948. It is not a provision that regulations may be made, but it says:

The Librarian of Congress, * * * under the supervision of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library, shall perform all acts and duties required by law touching copyrights.

Now, the word "supervision," as the Senator from Nebraska knows, is one of the broadest words. It gives control and it gives direction; it authorizes participation, and it creates superiority. If the Senator's argument is good for anything it must be unconstitutional.

Mr. THURSTON. If it is intended by the act that the committee of Congress shall arrogate to itself any of the powers or functions of that office, then it is unconstitutional.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether it does not?

Mr. THURSTON. I do not so believe.

Mr. CHANDLER. What power has the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library over the operations of the copyright law under section 4948?

Mr. THURSTON. I can conceive of many mere directory rules and regulations which the committee of Congress might prescribe for the orderly and proper transaction of the business of that office——

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator contend——

Mr. THURSTON. But I will go to the extent——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. THURSTON. But I will go to the extent the Senator asks me to go, and I say if that provision requires that the committee of Congress shall perform as a directing force or otherwise any of those duties, then I believe it is unconstitutional.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator must admit that it is, then, because he says that if the power to direct is given to the committee it is unconstitutional.

Mr. GRAY. I suppose, if the Senator will allow me, he means that if the word "supervision" means control it is unconstitutional.

Mr. THURSTON. Unquestionably. I do not concede and I have not conceded and I expressly refused to concede the proposition made by the Senator from New Hampshire that under that provision there is any absolute power of control given to the committee of Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the Senator contends that when an officer is to perform his duties under the supervision of another body, there is no power of direction or control given under the power to supervise. Does the Senator say that?

Mr. THURSTON. I do contend that the power of supervision given is not a power of control with reference to the discretionary exercise of any function given to that officer by the law of the land.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the power to supervise is not the power to supervise.

Mr. THURSTON. I say it is entirely unnecessary for us to determine the constitutional construction of that section, but if that power is given under that language then I do insist it is clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not want to be unreasonable with the Senator, but I should like him to give me an opinion without an "if" as to whether the power reserved to the joint committee of Congress in section 4948 is or is not unconstitutional.

Mr. THURSTON. I do not care to act judicially here upon the construction of an act of Congress which is in no wise necessary to the proper determination of the matter before the Senate.

All I say, and all I care to say, is that if Congress, in some previous act, has given to a committee of this body the performance of official duties entirely outside of the line of Congressional action, that provision is unconstitutional.

Mr. President, on the other matter involved in this report, our judicial system is composed of judicial circuits and districts, the circuit comprising several districts. There are the circuit courts of the United States, having jurisdiction throughout the circuits, and the district courts, limited to jurisdiction in the several districts. All district judges are also judges of circuit courts within their districts. The old law providing for the appointment of commissioners of those circuit courts therefore gave the authority to all the district judges acting as circuit judges, and also to circuit judges, to participate in the selection of those commissioners. In other words, heretofore the commissioners have been officers of the circuit courts of the United States, to be appointed by those courts.

The judges of the circuit court of the district in which I reside are the justice of the Supreme Court of the United States assigned to that circuit, the three circuit judges, who now constitute the circuit court of appeals therein, and the district judge for the district of Nebraska. All of them are judges of the circuit court of that district of Nebraska, and in the selection of the present commissioners for that district the action has been by the court, and the joint judgment and the joint wish of all those judges could be exercised in the selection of those commissioners. They have been chosen by these distinguished judges of ours and are in office. No complaint is made against them. They are honorable, capable, distinguished men.

Now, why is it that it is proposed to take away from one of the supreme judges of the United States and from each of the circuit judges the power to participate in the selection of commissioners of the courts of the United States? I think, sir, it is a reflection on the highest judicial officers in the land. No wrong is pointed out in the present system except that it is suggested that some of the men now in office are unduly exercising the power of their office to secure too much emolument for themselves. If that be true, then the same practice will grow up under whatever individuals are selected to become their successors by the proposed act.

Without entering into any extended argument upon the subject, as a practicing attorney of one section of this country, acquainted with the men who are now in office in that part of the country in these important positions, who have been selected as the choice of the highest judges of the highest court, I protest against this unwarranted, unreasonable, unexplained, and unnecessary attempt to legislate out of office a whole class of men against whose actions, characters, standing, and manner of selection there has as yet been no official complaint.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to state that I heartily concur in the last portion of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. I think the legislation of the character last criticised by him is wholly uncalled for. If there are certain incompetent commissioners of the United States, it is little less than an outrage to remove all the commissioners in the country in order to get at two or three men who are supposed to be incompetent and whose names, as far as I know, are still sub rosa.

As far as the proposition is concerned regarding the appointment of a register of copyrights, I think the legislation is, to say the least, ill advised. It will be remembered that during the latter part, in fact about the close of the Administration of President Harrison, a bill passed both Houses of Congress providing for the Record and Pension Office of the War Department, and for other purposes, and in that bill there was contained this clause:

The President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint the officer now in charge of said Record and Pension Division to be a colonel in the Army and chief of said office.

When the bill was presented to the President he returned it with his objections, and among other things he said as follows:

It is fairly to be implied from the bill that in the opinion of Congress the public interest would be promoted by making the contemplated change in the grade of this office and by giving the rank and pay of a colonel in the Army to the chief. A new and rather anomalous office is therefore created, that of "colonel in the Army and Chief of the Record and Pension Office of the War Department," but upon the condition that the President shall nominate a particular person to fill it. I do not think it is competent for Congress to designate the person who shall fill an office created by law, and practically nothing remains of the bill under consideration if this person is not to be appointed. The office is an important one, connected with the active civil administration of the War Department. I can not agree that the selection of the officer shall be taken out of the discretion of the Executive, where the responsibility for good administration necessarily rests.

There are other arguments contained in the veto message. So far as the record discloses, there was no action taken upon this message, but a bill was passed authorizing the President to appoint, and an appointment was afterwards made, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It is needless, I think, to indulge in refined argument and close distinction for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the provision in the present bill is or is not constitutional. It is sufficient for me to know that it approaches so near the brink as to be, in my judgment, dangerous.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am very sorry that my distinguished friend the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] gets so scared when he approaches the Constitution. I say, and I think I can show conclusively, that this is no infringement of the Constitution. The Constitution gives to the President this power:

He * * * shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

This is not a United States officer. Therefore the President has no exclusive right to his appointment. The Library of Congress is not a library of the United States. No one connected with it is an officer of the United States. It was established by the act of April 24, 1800. That act reads as follows:

That for the purchase of such books as may be necessary for the use of Congress at the said city of Washington, and for fitting up a suitable apartment for containing them and for placing them therein, the sum of $5,000 shall be, and hereby is, appropriated; and that the said purchase shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, pursuant to such directions as shall be given, and such catalogue as shall be furnished by a joint committee of both Houses of Congress to be appointed for that purpose; and that the said books shall be placed in one suitable apartment in the Capitol in the said city, for the use of both Houses of Congress and the members thereof, according to such regulations as the committee aforesaid shall devise and establish.

The Library remained in charge of the Congress of the United States, and no constitutional lawyer will dare to say that it was not under the exclusive control of Congress and that the President had the right to appoint a Librarian or any other person connected with it.

Mr. GRAY. Unless Congress clothed him with that power.

Mr. COCKRELL. I mean under this language, as a Library of Congress, the President had no authority under the Constitution, pure and simple. That is the point.

Mr. GRAY. I will say to the Senator, although I differ with him there, that undoubtedly Congress or either House may appoint a librarian for itself.

Mr. COCKRELL. It can establish a library, and the establishment of a library does not vest in the President any executive authority to make an appointment.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Missouri is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I knew the distinguished Senator from Delaware would admit that proposition.

Now, then, the Library was established, a Congressional Library, with full power in Congress to appoint, to select, to designate, to elect a librarian, and every subordinate officer. Congress in 1802 (I have not been able to hunt up the history as it occurred just at the time, but it is represented to me that it was in consequence of a difference between the Senate and House with regard to who should be librarian)—Congress passed the following law:

That the books and maps purchased by direction of the act of Congress passed the 24th of April, 1800, together with the books or libraries which have heretofore been kept separately by each House, shall be placed in the Capitol, in the room which was occupied by the House of Representatives during the last session of the Sixth Congress.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being be, and they hereby are, empowered to establish such regulations and restrictions in relation to the said library as to them shall seem proper, and from time to time to alter or amend the same: Provided, That no regulation shall be made repugnant to any provision contained in this act.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That a librarian, to be appointed by the President of the United States solely—

Why solely by the President? That the Senate should have no more power in the selection than the House, and because between them they had not adjusted the method of selecting the Librarian—shall take charge of the said Library, who, previous to his entering upon the duties of his office, shall give bond, payable to the United States.

Here is a Congressional Library, the creature of Congress, with full legal and constitutional right and power in Congress to control it as they choose. Here is the Librarian whom Congress have a right to select, and they delegate that right to the President solely, without the advice and consent of the Senate. That power Congress can resume at any time it chooses. It is not a power parted with never to be regained or recalled. To-day we have the absolute power and authority to displace the incumbent, to create a vacancy, and to select another Librarian.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Do I understand the Senator from Missouri to claim that the officer to be selected by the joint committee is one of the inferior officers referred to in the Constitution in section 2, Article II?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. He is an officer of Congress, not of the United States; a member of the library staff, an employee of Congress, just as much so as any other employee, just as much so as the employee who is in charge of the Senate library. You can not make any distinction between them. He is not a United States officer.

Mr. THURSTON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. THURSTON. Under this proposed provision, what is it that this officer or his employees are to do for the business of Congress, and how are they connected with the affairs of Congress, except that they are given a side room in its Library? Are not all the powers and all the duties imposed upon them under this provision those of a public character with respect to the general public, concerning which Congress has no exclusive right?

Mr. COCKRELL. That makes no difference. I want to bring to the attention of the Senator a recent resolution of Congress, which was passed without these distinguished constitutional lawyers having discovered it, and that was the appointment of the superintendent of the Congressional Library here by its own act, without any reference to the President. If we can appoint a superintendent for the construction of a building costing millions of dollars, who is to supervise the entire construction, can we not select a subordinate to go into that Library and perform the duties which Congress may impose upon him? It is hairsplitting, it is worse than hairsplitting, it is hairsplitting improperly, and drawing distinctions where they do not exist. No, sir; this is not a violation of the spirit nor the letter of the Constitution. If we have not the power to maintain this Library, if we have not the power to cause that building to be erected, and if we have not the power when we have done that, to say who shall be the Librarian and who shall be his subordinates, then let us abjectly surrender every particle of power in the Senate and in the House of Representatives to the President and ask him to appoint our officers, our Sergeant-at-Arms, our Librarian, our clerks, and all our subordinates. Let us simply give up all our power and be done with it, or, upon the other hand, let us assert and exercise the power which belongs to us as a coordinate and coequal branch of this Government.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish to ask the Senator whether there would not be a distinction which would be very clear to his mind in such a case as this: If, for instance, it be conceded that we can impose upon subordinates in the Library the duty of taking care of copyrights deposited there as we impose upon them the duty of caring for the books, still, if we should authorize a subordinate official to grant certificates in behalf of the United States as to the fact of registration of copyrights in accordance with the provisions of the law and of the Constitution, would not the imposition of that particular duty upon that official create and give him the powers of an officer of this Government?

Mr. COCKRELL. He issues a certificate. This simply devolves upon him the duties of registering copyrights. Why were copyright duties imposed upon the Librarian of Congress? It was because this was a library within the jurisdiction and control of Congress. We permit other branches of the Government to reap the benefit of the Library by reference to it; we determined to make every author or publisher of every book furnish two copies of that book; we made the issuing of copyrights a part and parcel of our Congressional Library institution partly for the purpose of supplying it with books. We provided that to every book published which it was desired to copyright that copyright should be issued by the Librarian, and the law requires two copies of every such publication to be placed in the Library. We have a right to impose by law upon our officers duties not directly connected with either the Senate or the House of Representatives. As we appoint this officer, we have a right to impose upon him the discharge of the duties of Librarian or assistant librarian or register of copyrights in the Library of Congress, and we place the office under the control of the Joint Committee on the Library of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. If I understand the Senator's contention, then, it is that, having the authority to provide for a library for the use of Congress, and of course to provide for a librarian, therefore we have the right to impose the duty specified by this provision of law of issuing copyrights upon the Librarian or upon any other officer whom he chooses to appoint and give accommodations to in the library building.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have the right to impose it upon any officer of the Library in connection with the functions of the Library. We have joined the two together.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator think that under that contention we should have the right to impose the duties of Commissioner of Patents upon the Librarian of Congress?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. GRAY. Or upon any employee of the Senate?

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. GRAY. And yet a certificate to an inventor of a useful invention is provided for by law under the same constitutional provision by which copyright is issued to an author. They both derive their authority from the same section and clause of the Constitution, and the laws providing for the issuance of patents and the laws proving for the issuance of copyrights derive their constitutional authority from precisely the same source.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the proposition of the Senator. I am speaking with reference to existing conditions. The laws now would not permit us to devolve those duties upon the Librarian. We have chosen to devolve them upon a Commissioner of Patents. This is the Library of Congress; and we have the right to replenish it with books. We have the right to appropriate directly or indirectly for securing books; but the issuing of patents has nothing to do with the Library.

Mr. GRAY. We might provide, might we not, if I may ask the Senator, that a copy of every diagram of a useful invention be deposited in the Library?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; we could do that.

Mr. GRAY. And that would give a certain connection with the Library?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. GRAY. That would not give us the right to appoint a Commissioner of Patents, would it?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all; and yet we could require the deposit of such diagrams in the Library. Here we have placed in that Library for the purpose of adding to its volumes the control of copyrights, and we designate the officer who shall have charge of them; and I say he is an officer of the Library and not an officer of the United States—that the Senate and House have a perfect right to have him appointed or selected in the manner indicated by this provision.

In addition to that, we can require our own officers to give a bond to the United States. The fact of a man having to give a bond to the United States does not make him a United States officer.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me right there to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The argument was that the register of copyrights had to do something. I have examined the copyright law carefully, and I find that all he has to do is, after the title of a book has been deposited with him, to give a copy to the person depositing it. This is the language:

And he shall give a copy of the title or description, under the seal of the Librarian of Congress, to the proprietor whenever he shall require it.

The person taking out a copyright gets his rights, whatever they are, by the mere deposit of the title, and the Librarian of Congress does nothing whatever about it, except to give him a certificate.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no judicial function whatever, and hardly any executive function.

Mr. COCKRELL. None in the world.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will read what is now the method of procedure.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am through, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. I read from a copy of the certificate of copyright issued by the Librarian:

No. —— AA. LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Copyright Office, Washington.

To wit: Be it remembered that on the —— day of ——, 1895, —— ——, of ——, has deposited in this office the title of a ——, the title or description of which is in the following words, to wit: —— —— ——, the right whereof —— claim as —— in conformity with the laws of the United States respecting copyrights.

—— ——,
Librarian of Congress.

The Librarian does not do anything except certify that the book has been deposited there. He performs no function whatever, except as the receiver of the claim of the man who wants a copyright.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not think there ought to be much embarrassment about determining this question. Certainly I have none in determining it for myself. The power to appoint officers to fill offices created by law is lodged by the Constitution in the President of the United States—

But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

So all the officers contemplated by the Constitution, absolutely all, are included within these three categories: Those whom the President may appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; those he may appoint solely under authority of Congress, and those that by authority of law may be appointed by the heads of Departments or by the courts of law. There are no other officers in a legal constitutional sense known to our scheme of government.

The executive function thus described in the Constitution does not belong in any wise or in any fashion to Congress, and Congress can not assume it without a usurpation, which I think we all would condemn, or ought to condemn. If this office is an office within the meaning of the clause to which I have just referred, then clearly it is not within the competence of Congress to appoint to it, unless Congress can derive its power and authority to create, and not only create this office, but to fill it, from that provision of the Constitution which confers upon each House of Congress the right and power to choose its presiding officer and appoint all their other officers respectively. Unquestionably each House may appoint its own officers, but those officers must be confined to perform duties which are owing to the House by which they are appointed, and certainly it could not be contended that they can be compelled to perform duties, or invested with power to perform duties, as officers which do not belong in any wise to the functions of Congress or to the due administration of the business of each House.

I quite agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that either House of Congress can provide a library for its own use, and can provide for a custodian of that library as one of its officers; and perhaps the two Houses jointly, by law or otherwise, may provide for a Congressional Library and provide for an officer to take charge of it. If they can do it, it is by virtue of this power conferred on the Houses separately to appoint each its own officers; but that certainly does not confer upon Congress the right to invest any of those officers so appointed for the convenience of the two Houses with powers and authorities that are not germane or in any way related to those special functions; for, if it were so, then there would be no limit to the power of Congress to invest officers of the two Houses with the powers which belong to the administration of government in any of its multiform phases. They could invest the Sergeant-at-Arms with the duties of a United States commissioner; they could invest the assistant doorkeeper with the power and responsibility that belongs to some executive officer; and I do not care whether the office is executive or judicial for the purpose of my argument now. But, if it be not an office with functions that relate to the convenience and to the due administration of the duties of each House, then it is not an office which the House can, under the Constitution, fill.

So, Mr. President, I can quite readily admit, as I do and did, that while Congress has the right and either House has the right to provide for a librarian, it has no more right to invest that librarian or any of his subordinates with powers which concern the administration of governmental functions than it has the right to invest any other of its employees with such; and yet the contention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], it seems to me, and of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], must go to the logical extreme of declaring that when officers are appointed for the convenience of either House we can invest them with any governmental function whatever. That, of course, would be absurd, and would overthrow all the distinction between Executive and Congressional functions which was intended to be so clearly demonstrated in the Constitution.

This officer which this provision of law seeks to create and appoint is an officer who has nothing to do, so far as this function is concerned, with the administration of the duties of either House or of both Houses jointly. He does not perform any functions necessary to the organization of the House, to its convenience, or to its proper duties. We have created an office here in order to fulfill an intent of the Constitution, to provide for the protection of authors and inventors. The same clause provides for both. That is a public function which concerns the grant of legislative power to Congress; that is a function which concerns the whole country, not Congress, and unless we shall contend, as I said a while ago, that we can invest any of these wide governmental functions in the mere employees of either House, then, it seems to me, we must give up the claim that we have a right to invest this Librarian of Congress, or to create a man, call him what you will, and give him accommodations in the Library building, and thereby attach a jurisdiction to make him a complete officer in the constitutional sense. That I do not think can be done. What is he to do? I do not care whether he has a judicial function or merely a ministerial function. It is provided:

For register of copyrights, $2,500, who shall be selected on or after June 1, 1896, by the Joint Committee upon the Library of Congress, consisting of the Committee on the Library of the Senate and the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives.

What right have we to confer upon one of our committees the power to appoint to an office? The committee is nowhere recognized in the Constitution. It is one of the instrumentalities of legislation, to be used for our own convenience. How can we erect a committee into a governmental agency? We can not do it. Much less can we confer upon it the executive power of appointment.

And who shall give good and sufficient bond to the United States in such sum, not less than $20,000, as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, and to be approved by him, faithfully to account for all public moneys and property which he may receive. He shall have and exercise all the rights and duties touching copyrights now devolved upon the Librarian of Congress.

He is not the Librarian of Congress, even according to the contention of the Senator from Missouri, who seems to think the question is solved when we have created a library, and that we can then confer upon this officer any duties we choose, or only confer upon him duties in reference to copyrights, which heretofore have been performed by the Librarian of Congress, appointed by the President.

He shall, without additional compensation, disburse the sums appropriated for the salaries and expenses of his office and also the salaries and expenses appropriated for the Library of Congress.

That is the only connection that he has with the Library.

He shall have an official seal of such pattern and design as he shall designate, and it shall contain the words "Register of Copyrights, United States of America"; and by this seal all records and papers issued from the office of the register of copyrights shall be authenticated. He shall be provided with suitable rooms in the building for the Library of Congress.

The issuance of a copyright has no more to do with the establishment of a library or the convenience of either House of Congress than the issuance of a patent—not a particle. The mere fact that the copyright law requires two copies of each copyrighted publication to be deposited with the Librarian can not confer the appointing power. We might require, as I said in interrogation of the Senator from Missouri, that two copies of each model from the Patent Office, or each drawing, or each publication of the Patent Office report, should be deposited there. That would not confer jurisdiction to appoint a Commissioner of Patents, nor is the deposit of two volumes or two copies of each publication meant or intended in any wise to build up a library, for, if it did, it would be a taking of private property without just compensation.

What right have we to require for the establishment of a library that authors shall contribute? Now, think of it for a moment. The Senator from Missouri gravely contended that authors should contribute copies of their publications, for what purpose? To build up a library. That may commend itself on the score of economy to Congress, but it can not commend itself in any other wise that I know of. We have no more right to levy upon the authors of publications in order to build up a library than we have a right to take the books out of the library of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to fill our shelves. If that provision of law has any justifiable purpose at all, it is to file there as an exhibit, precisely on the same ground that a diagram of an invention is filed with the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. CHANDLER. As a matter of fact, we do require it.

Mr. GRAY. We do require it.

Mr. CHANDLER. But the Senator says we do not require it from a particular motive, because if we did that motive would be unconstitutional. That may be so; but does the Senator dispute the constitutionality of the present copyright law of Congress, which makes the place for making an entry for copyrights the Library of Congress?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I am not disputing it now. I only say that if the Senator from Missouri were right, then he would be taking private property without just compensation, put it upon what grounds you please, either as a part of the fee charged for a copyright or as an exhibit to be filed there for all time for identification. As to what is copyrighted, that is quite another question. So that all I want to say about that is that the mere requirement of the law that two copies of each publication shall be filed in the Library of Congress has no relation to the question that we are now discussing as to the power sought to be conferred upon committees of Congress to appoint to an office to which are attached wide and important and constitutional governmental functions.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] contended that the register of copyrights was not a United States officer. There are two kinds of officers known to this Constitution—the State officer and the United States officer. This Constitution requires all United States officers and all State officers to take an oath to support this Constitution.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will excuse me, he forgets that there is another class of officers, and that is, officers of the Senate and of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MILLS. They are officers of the United States also, and required to take an oath of office.

Mr. CHANDLER. They are not officers of the United States.

Mr. MILLS. Will the Senator tell me whether they are required to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator did not let me finish my sentence. I say these are not officers of the United States within the clause of the Constitution which provides that the appointing power shall be in the President alone. They are officers of the United States who may be appointed by the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. MILLS. I never disputed that.

Mr. CHANDLER. The only question is whether Congress can run a library and appoint that class of officers.

Mr. MILLS. I never disputed that these officers were not provided for by the Constitution and that their appointment is given to the Houses of Congress under the power to regulate their rules of procedure. That is a very different proposition; but, at the same time, they are officers of the United States, and required to take an oath to support the Constitution.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator state again what his two classes of officers are? He stated there were only two classes.

Mr. MILLS. State officers and United States officers.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then everyone who serves the United States, whether in the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Government, is an officer of the United States? That may be true, but that does not help us along in this discussion at all.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, the last clause of the sixth article of the Constitution says:

> The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution.

Then, if this register of copyrights is not an officer of the United States, we know that he is not an officer of a State government, and he is not required to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. Every one of the officers at the desk of the Senate, every officer at the desk of the House of Representatives, and all the other officers created by the Houses of Congress in pursuance of the special provision of the Constitution giving them power to make rules to govern their own procedure, are all officers of this Government of the United States; and every one of them has taken the oath to support the Constitution in accordance with its prescription.

Mr. CHANDLER. Are Senators and Members of the House of Representatives officers of the United States in the same sense?

Mr. MILLS. They are either officers of the State or of the United States, and they are required to take an oath to support the Constitution.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am glad the Senator is making progress in that direction.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] contended that the Congressional Library belonged to the Congress of the United States—the Senate and House of Representatives. I want to know by what provision of the Constitution these two Houses of the legislative branch are empowered to purchase and own property? They can not hold a nickel's worth of property. This Hall in which we meet is under the jurisdiction and power and regulation of this body, but it belongs to the United States, and can be sold, or torn down, or dealt with as the United States pleases to deal with it.

Mr. GRAY. It is provided for by law.

Mr. MILLS. It is provided for by law, and it takes both Houses of Congress to make a law.

Mr. GRAY. And the President.

Mr. MILLS. And with the approval of the President, or, in case of his disapproval, by a two-thirds majority of the two legislative branches. The United States can own property; the United States can own a library; but the Senate can not own a library beyond the jurisdiction and control of the lawmaking power of the United States. We have a library that we call the Senate library; we have some books, but they have been bought by virtue of appropriations made in an appropriation bill of the United States. She gave us the money—or they gave us the money, to speak correctly, for the United States are plural and not singular—the United States gave to this body the money to buy these books. They are called the Senate's books, but they belong to the United States. The policemen who are appointed to keep order around this body, in the galleries, or anywhere else around here, are appointed in accordance with the rules of the Senate, under the power given to it to protect itself in its deliberations. But the Senate itself is a part of the United States, and is not an independent power. There is no imperium in imperio here. Both branches together are limited in the exercise of their power and both of them constitute the two legislative arms of the United States. The United States own the Library of Congress, and the United States, in pursuance of its Constitution, which its people made, says that the Executive shall appoint these officers and not the two branches of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on concurring in the report of the committee of conference? [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it.

Mr. CULLOM. I supposed the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] desired to make some remarks.

Mr. HILL. I do not care to say anything if the decision of the Chair stands.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to make a few remarks myself before the final vote is taken.

Mr. HILL. Then I prefer to hear the Senator from Illinois first.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Cockrell,	Hill,	Platt,
Bacon,	Cullom,	Kyle,	Pritchard,
Baker,	Daniel,	Lodge,	Quay,
Bate,	Davis,	McBride,	Roach,
Berry,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Brice,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Thurston,
Brown,	Frye,	Mills,	Tillman,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Vilas,
Butler,	George,	Mitchell, Wis.	Walthall,
Caffery,	Gray,	Nelson,	Warren.
Chandler,	Hale,	Peffer,
Clark,	Hawley,	Perkins,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I did not expect to detain the Senate for more than a very few minutes, and I do not propose to do so now. I supposed that the chief opposition to this report would come from the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], and therefore when the question was put to a vote I was not observing particularly, supposing that that Senator would follow the Senator who had just spoken.

I merely desire to refer to the action of the Senate and of its conferees in the disposition of the bill so far as it has gone. I desire to say in the outset, in referring to the remark of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] in reference to this kind of legislation, that it is extraneous to an ordinary appropriation bill. I do not believe in it myself; and I would have much preferred, when the bill came from the other body to the Senate and was under consideration before it went to the conferees at all, that the Senate had taken positive ground against entertaining any such legislation as was proposed in the bill. But Senators will remember that there was a very strong feeling on the part of Senators and members of the other body in favor of some reforms touching attorneys and marshals especially, and on the part of the other body in favor of changing the law with reference to commissioners.

The conferees practically were ordered to do the best they could with reference to these three different classes of officials. There were but two classes at first, but subsequently the other came up. While the Senator from Connecticut has intimated that the Senate conferees have given up almost everything which was in controversy in relation especially to these Government officials, the truth is that we did not. I may say that there was a disposition on the part of the conferees of the Senate (and I want to be absolutely truthful about it) to feel that the Senate itself had perhaps put up the salaries of district attorneys and marshals a little above what the people of the country expected we would do; and I am inclined to think that many Senators themselves felt that we had increased the salaries of those officers too much above the amounts fixed by the House. But, however that may be, when we got into conference about these items we were disposed to meet the members of the House generally about halfway upon the question of salaries of marshals and district attorneys, and the salaries relating to those officers have passed out of the present consideration, because they were disposed of by the Senate in the adoption of the second conference report upon the bill. So I do not need to refer to those items now except to state the historical fact as I remember it. While there are some Senators who are disposed to feel that the salaries of marshals and district attorneys of their States or districts were a little too low, it was the best that the Senate conferees could do. The report has been ratified by the Senate and House, and it will be very easy, as we have felt, where there were mistakes made (and it is a pretty extensive and important subject to deal with in conference) to have it righted by legislation at a future session of Congress, when we can see definitely how the operation of the law affects the interests of the people in different districts and States and the interests of the officers holding these positions. So the consideration of those officials has passed.

During the last conference, the third conference upon the bill, after we had refused to consider the commissioners in the first conferences, we found that it seemed to be the proper thing for us to do. I do not wish it to be understood that the Senate or the Senate conferees are under duress in any sense, but we and the representatives of the other body find ourselves in dealing with this question compelled to do what seems to be right in the premises when we get to the point where a decision is necessary to be made.

I desire to say that so far as the commissioners are concerned we had the approbation of the Attorney-General. I am not sure that it is the fact, but I am inclined to think that the provision incorporated in the proposed law is the production of the Attorney-General's Office. However, I am not certain that I am stating the exact fact in reference to that point.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator whether that may not account for the fact that a district judge can not appoint a commissioner in any place unless the Attorney-General first names the place? It is one of the most extraordinary provisions I ever heard of in any law.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know as to that. I am inclined to think that I ought not to state that the Attorney-General is responsible for the exact provisions of the proposed law touching the commissioners; but I desire to call the attention of the Senate to that point. In the first place, as everybody knows, the court commissioners are appointed by the circuit courts of the United States, and everyone who has anything to do with courts knows substantially as well that the circuit judges of the United States practically do not hold trial courts at all any more in the different circuits of the country. In other words, the district judge of a district substantially holds all the time both the district court and the circuit court as well. Therefore it is that these commissioners, who are to be appointed as heretofore by the circuit judge, are substantially under the supervision and control of the district judge, because the district judge holds the court, and it is seldom that anyone sees a circuit judge at a place where a district court is being held.

So it was the judgment of the other body, as I take it, and it was the judgment of the conferees, so far as they have had anything to do with it, such being the state of facts, that it was better perhaps that the district judge should appoint the commissioner than that it should be left to the control of the circuit judge, who seldom comes to the place where the court is held. So the terms of office of the commissioners of circuit courts heretofore appointed was made to expire on the 31st day of December, 1896, under the provision as reported by the conferees. When the provision came to the Senate it provided that those terms should expire, I think, on the 1st of July, 1896.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the tenure of office of the commissioners as now fixed? Is it during good behavior, for life, or what is the term?

Mr. CULLOM. Under the present law, under which they have all been appointed, they have no term of office. They are appointed subject to removal simply by the circuit court under the present law.

Mr. GEORGE. Unless removed they hold for life?

Mr. CULLOM. Unless they are removed they do not go out of office until they resign or die, as I understand it. The conferees of the two Houses thought it was proper that the term of office should be limited to four years. That is the ordinary term of an officer nowadays who is not appointed for life. In view of the fact that they are subordinate to and supervised by the district judge more especially than any other, the conferees thought it was wise legislation that the district judge should have the appointment of the new commissioners after the terms of the old ones should expire.

Now, it seems to me that there is nothing wrong in that provision. It appears to me that it is a fair one. Some Senators have indicated that it is a great wrong to make a term for an officer of the United States circuit or district court, and that it brings the office into politics. I do not see that at all. Take, for instance, the district in which I live, where the court is held in my own little city. The United States judge under this proposed law would appoint all the commissioners in that district when the term of the present incumbents expire. I am perfectly certain that that district judge will reappoint every man there who has performed his duty as the judge may deem he ought to perform it. When he is appointed once he has the same judge over him as when he receives his first appointment, and of course the same judge will keep his own appointee so long as he performs his duty. So practically the point made that it makes a partisan office of the commissioner of the court is entirely, it seems to me, without foundation.

Now, referring to the provision which authorizes the Attorney-General to pass upon the question of the appointment of these men, or at least that he shall be notified—I forget the exact terms of the provision—when the appointments are made, I think there is force in that proposition, because the Attorney-General is the law officer of the whole United States, and all the clerks, marshals, district attorneys, and commissioners are in a degree under the surveillance and control and are to be called to account by the Attorney-General of the United States. It seems to me proper that it should be so. Otherwise nobody knows when he would get the accounts of the marshals and attorneys or of the commissioners settled, if they have any accounts to render, as I understand they have.

I would have much preferred myself if the commissioners had been left out of the bill and that we should not have been required to legislate about them. But it seemed to be the judgment that we were called upon to do something in regard to the commissioners. In the first place, as the Senate will remember, we had a provision, a portion of which is in the conference report made, requiring the Attorney-General to report at the meeting of the next Congress, after an investigation, as respects the compensation to be paid, by salary or otherwise, to clerks of the United States circuit and district courts and to the commissioners of the circuit courts. I preferred the provision the Senate in the first place inserted in the bill, but it seemed that that could not be agreed upon, and subsequently, after changing the fees to an extent in the provisions of the bill as it came from the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate agreed to it.

I do not care to take up any more time in referring to that, but I desire to say a word in reference to the copyright provision, which has claimed the attention of the Senate so much, and upon the question of the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of the provision as inserted in the bill. I desire to be perfectly frank. I will say that personally I had some doubt as to the constitutionality of that provision, but my colleagues on the conference believed that it was sound; that it was within the purview of the Constitution, and we agreed to the provision. When Senators refer to the statute, as has been done by my colleague on the conference, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], it seems to me that all through the statute referring to the appointment of a Librarian, if you please, who is given the power to act as register of copyrights, the distinction was kept up by Congress in the enactment of that law different from the ordinary provision for the appointment of an officer of the Government to perform any particular line of duty. The provision of the law relating to the appointment reads as follows:

The President solely shall appoint from time to time a Librarian to take charge of the Library of Congress.

Why did Congress put that provision in as it reads in the law that is now in force? In my judgment it was because Congress was seeking to keep within its own control, its own power, the Librarian of Congress, and as a matter of convenience they delegated the power to the President to name the Librarian, and the gentleman occupying that position was in that way appointed. Now, why should Congress have used the word "solely"? I do not remember seeing it in any statute creating any other office.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The Constitution of the United States permits expressly that Congress may vest the appointment of officers in the President alone or in the heads of Departments and in the courts.

Mr. CULLOM. I am perfectly well aware of that provision of the Constitution, but have never had my attention called to any other statute on the books providing that Congress alone or solely should have the appointment of anybody.

Mr. GEORGE. Was not the Venezuelan Commission appointed in that way, by the President alone? The names were not submitted to the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. That is true, I believe. They were not required to be confirmed; but I do not think those Commissioners were regarded as officers in any proper sense. A law was passed placing the duty upon the President to appoint a set of men to perform a particular duty of investigation as to a line, and I do not think that anybody regarded them as officers in the constitutional sense of the term.

I do not believe another law can be found in the statute book where, when a man was to be appointed and called an officer, the Congress of the United States said that the President alone or solely should make the appointment; and I reason from that and from other provisions of the same statute that Congress was attempting to give the President the power to do this merely as a matter of convenience and to accommodate Congress in the selection of a Librarian, being in the proper sense under the control of the Congress of the United States.

Now, let us go a little further to show that the Joint Library Committee of Congress has much to do with the subject. In the same act where the President solely is to make the appointment it is provided:

The Joint Committee upon the Library may from time to time appoint such agents as they deem requisite, to carry into effect the donation and exchange of documents and other publications placed at their disposal for the purpose.

And so along all through the statute. Again:

The Joint Committee upon the Library is authorized to establish regulations, not inconsistent with law, in relation to the Library of Congress or either department thereof, and from time to time to alter, amend, or repeal the same.

Then it says:

And until they impose new regulations or restrictions, the care and business of the Library shall continue to be regulated by such rules as may have been heretofore imposed by any lawful authority.

So the whole theory of the law, it seems to me, is that the Congress of the United States is the sole controller of the Library of Congress, and they give the President power, simply as a matter of convenience to themselves, to designate the man who shall be Librarian of Congress.

Upon the question of giving bond and all that, of course the language of the provision raises a sort of impression that it is an office, because the word "office" is used; but, if Senators will observe, the provision reads:

For register of copyrights, $2,500, who shall be selected—

We do not use the word "appointed"— on or after June 1, 1896, by the Joint Committee upon the Library of Congress, consisting of the Committee on the Library of the Senate and the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives, and who shall give good and sufficient bond, etc.

I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in discussing this matter. I am very anxious to get a vote upon it. I wish to say in perfect candor that the conferees on the part of the Senate are not undertaking to be, and do not desire to be understood as assuming to be, above the men who appointed them. We are simply trying to carry out the will and the wishes of the Senate as nearly as we can do so, and if we have agreed to any provisions which in the judgment of the Senate are not right or are not satisfactory, the Senate has a right to say so, and either to appoint the same or a new set of conferees to deal with the subject further. But we have had a good deal of trouble over the bill, growing out of the numerous provisions in it that are extraneous, I may say, to the ordinary legislation which ought to be upon an appropriation bill. The conferees have dealt with the subject as fairly and as seriously and as assiduously as we could in an endeavor to arrive at correct conclusions and as nearly in harmony with the Senate to which we belong and to which we account as we were able to do.

If the Senate does not believe that this report is right, I am perfectly willing that it shall dispose of it in that way. If it believes it is right, in view of all the facts, after a third conference has been held—the first agreeing to a large number of items about which there was not any great dispute, the second agreeing to a large number about which there was very serious controversy between the conferees on the part of the two Houses, including the provisions as to attorneys and marshals, and the last conference agreeing upon the few provisions that remained in the bill—I shall be glad to have the report sustained.

It might be well enough for me to call attention, before I sit down, as I do not care to occupy the attention of the Senate again, to what we have agreed to. The House conferees agreed to the amendments of the Senate in relation to clerks to committees and also as to clerks to Senators; also as to the item providing for messengers and skilled common laborers; also as to the police and watchmen force of the Capitol, with an amendment providing that hereafter the Capitol police force shall consist of 30 policemen at $1,100 each and 7 at $960 each (8 watchmen were provided for in the original bill), and dispensing with 7 watchmen who were substantially under the control of the Architect of the Capitol; also providing that the police force as herein provided shall be under the direction of the Sergeants-at-Arms of the Senate and of the House and of the Architect of the Capitol.

There were, I may say, seven watchmen under the present law especially under the control of the Architect of the Capitol. His testimony was that they could be dispensed with if these other provisions could be enacted, and those were agreed to by the conferees of the two Houses. They are in the conference report which is to be acted upon by the Senate. The conferees also agreed to the provision with respect to the register of copyrights, about which I have been talking, and I shall not detain the Senate longer upon that question. The New Mexico provision I shall not take any time to discuss. The salary of the marshal for the District of Columbia, which was in dispute in the two former conferences, was finally fixed at $5,500, and it was agreed to by the conferees of the two Houses.

The item as to commissioners of the circuit courts is the only other one involved in this controversy, and I suppose the only matters which will involve any controversy hereafter, if the Senate should not agree to the report, will be the provision as to copyrights and the question as to the particular form to be adopted in reference to the commissioners of the circuit courts. I hope we shall have the report agreed to. There are now three or four other conference reports waiting for the disposition of this one besides an additional appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to state that in all I have said in regard to the register of copyrights I must not be understood as in any way criticising the committee, because there was an amendment inserted in the bill by the Senate itself——

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. In relation to this matter, which I think was worse even than the one under consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think it was worse, but it involved exactly the same question, whether Congress by its committees could appoint the man, and the Senate passed upon it favorably.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I intend to detain the Senate only a few moments. There are three principal questions involved in the report, two of which have been very fully and ably discussed. I intend simply to allude to the first question involved, which is the authority to create the office and substantially to appoint an officer known as register of copyrights in the form provided for by the bill. At the most it is a very doubtful power. It presents a very difficult constitutional question, and Senators seem to differ in regard to it. I think it is unwise in the report of a conference committee to go to the extent of creating a new officer where the authority is of doubtful constitutionality. That ground alone would justify the Senate in rejecting the report.

The next point is the unprecedented legislation, legislating out of office all the United States circuit court commissioners throughout the land without charges, without trial, without petition, without any public demonstration in regard to it. I called attention to this fact when the bill was under consideration. The subject has not been debated in the Senate. I wish to suggest to the conference committee, if the report shall be rejected, certain amendments which the people of my city, its judges and its officials, desire to have incorporated in the provision. We had no time to discuss it in the Senate. It is a serious question, affecting officials in New York City and throughout our State. I have before me letters from the United States commissioners, letters from judges of our United States courts, protesting against the change.

I do not think it is wise to change the life tenure, which has characterized those holding offices of this class in the past, to a term of four years. Every four years these judicial or semi-judicial officers are to have a scramble for reappointment. I do not think it is a reform. I think it is going in the wrong direction. These offices are much sought for, and applicants will be appealing every four years to our district judges. Men of both parties will apply. There will be a scramble for the offices. I do not think it is a wise provision. Whether I would be justified absolutely in rejecting an appropriation bill upon that ground alone I do not know. I think the subject ought to have further consideration than it has had.

They have provided that a clerk of a court may be appointed United States commissioner, provided the Attorney-General approves. That is an important provision so far as New York City is concerned. If he approves in the first instance, must you get the approval of the Attorney-General four years from that time and every four years thereafter? I have letters from judges, some of them in Pennsylvania, protesting against it. They think it unwise. If it is thought proper in the first instance that the same person shall hold the office of United States commissioner and clerk, should not one approval of the same man be sufficient? Should this officer be required every four years to apply to the Attorney-General for his approval?

In the second place, there are some places where a deputy clerk is United States commissioner, and very properly so. It is a great convenience to suitors at the court. This proposed act forbids it, even with the approval of the Attorney-General. I should like to have the conference committee, in whom I have great confidence, to consider again this question and to see if they can not provide some modification of the sweeping provisions which will be more satisfactory to the country. I am satisfied that the report will be rejected. The good sense of the Senate will prevail. There is another provision to which I will simply allude. I do not intend to discuss it.

On the 27th day of March last the Senate by a decisive vote, after two days' debate, resolved to strike out the provision changing the date of the meeting of the legislature in the Territory of New Mexico. The question was gone over in all its various phases, political and otherwise, and the Senate carefully considered the question and expressed its deliberate voice. I do not think the Senate desires to retract or to change it. A mere change of the date from May to February does not cure the point. There is no good reason, unless it be a political one, why the change should be made; and I think that upon further consideration of the subject an agreement can possibly be arrived at. It is very objectionable in its present condition. A political or semipolitical provision of this character ought not to be inserted in an appropriation bill. If the matter shall again be submitted to the consideration of the conferees I think a better provision can be arrived at which will be satisfactory.

Having said this much, I desire to say that the rejection of this report——

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply desire to state that so far as I am concerned there has never been a particle of politics involved in any controversy between the two Houses in connection with this bill. I supposed when the last report was made upon the question just referred to by the Senator from New York the subject was settled to the entire satisfaction of everybody concerned. The honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], one of the conferees who joined in the report, supposed the same thing.

Mr. HILL. Undoubtedly; and he simply labors under a misapprehension. That is all. I do not care about discussing it. The Senator labored under a misapprehension. It is not satisfactory to Democrats of New Mexico. I do not think it is satisfactory to the Democrats of the Senate. We ought not be quarreling over such a question at this stage of the session on an appropriation bill, and I am satisfied that the patience and courtesy which have thus far been displayed by the conference committee can adjust this matter satisfactorily if it can be recommitted to them. I desire to bear testimony to the patience with which they have considered these difficult questions. Further consideration, I am sure, will provide a better result than this and one much more satisfactory.

That is all I have to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. CULLOM. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when Mr. FRYE'S name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. HANSBROUGH'S name was called). I rise to announce a pair between the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. They are both absent from the city.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. The senior Senator from Alabama would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MARTIN (after having voted in the negative). I voted without observing that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] is absent. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] to the Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], and vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] on this vote. If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CARTER (after having voted in the affirmative). Being paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I understand another pair has been arranged with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that a pair has been announced for me with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], and I therefore withdraw my vote. Has the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] voted?

Mr. PUGH. No; I have not.

Mr. HALE. Then I transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and that will enable the Senator from Alabama and myself to vote.

Mr. PUGH. Very well. I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allen,	Davis,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Stewart,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Teller,

So the report was nonconcurred in.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference, and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I rise for the purpose of submitting a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report is privileged, and the Chair recognizes the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

I will state that the report has been read and printed in the RECORD. It was afterwards withdrawn, and an item stricken from it, and it is now returned to the Senate without any other change whatever. It is not necessary to read it. I move its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report may be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 6, 7, 11, 21, 22, 29, 30, 34, 35, 43, 62, and 90.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 17, 18, 19, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 32, 36, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 44, 50, 53, 54, 55, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, 65, 72, 73, 74, 75, 79, 80, 81, 82, 88, and 89; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 19, page 20, of the bill, the word "Kickapoos" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Kickapoos in Kansas"; and in lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"KICKAPOOS IN OKLAHOMA.

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to assist the Kickapoo Indians of Oklahoma Territory who have not accepted their allotments to make improvements upon said allotments as fast as accepted, and to purchase seed, grain, and subsistence for said Indians, $5,000, to be immediately available. The sum of money now in the Treasury of the United States belonging to said Indians shall be retained as a permanent fund, upon which the Treasurer shall pay to said Indians annually interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1895."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "And sections 669, 670, and 671, of chapter 27 of Mansfield's Digest of the laws of Arkansas covering deeds, mortgages, liens, and instruments of writing pertaining to real estate are hereby extended over and put in force in said Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory. That the allottees of land within the limits of said Quapaw Agency are authorized to lease the same for a term not exceeding three years for farming purposes or five years for mining or business purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "Santee," and add at the end of said amendment the following: "And North and South Dakota"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "And charge against any funds belonging to said Lower Brule Indians now in the Treasury of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 12, page 39 of the bill, the word "divided" and insert in lieu thereof the word "expended"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"And not exceeding $1,500 for necessary traveling and incidental expenses of such persons.

"For completing the work of the Puyallup Indian Commission appointed under the act of March 3, 1893, to select and appraise such portions of the allotted lands within the Puyallup Indian Reservation, Wash., as are not required for homes for the Indian allottees, and also that part of the agency tract exclusive of the burying ground not needed for school purposes, and for the purpose of defraying the expenses of said Commission, $4,000, to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the agency tract and allotted lands as provided in said act, to be immediately available; and said Commission shall conclude its work and terminate on or before the 1st day of December, 1896."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 3 of said amendment, the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two"; and strike out, in line 42 of said amendment, the words "sufficient proof" and insert in lieu thereof the word "conviction"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "And said sum shall be in full payment and satisfaction of all claims of the said Campbell or his representatives for said money and lands and interest therein, and the receipt of said Campbell for said sum shall so specify"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 4 of the last paragraph of the amendment, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and add at the end of said paragraph the following:

"Provided, however, That any person who in good faith prior to the passage of this act has discovered or opened or located a mine of coal or other mineral shall have a preference right of purchase for ninety days from and after the official filing in the local land office of the approved plat of survey provided for by this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 4 of the last paragraph of the amendment, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and add at the end of said paragraph the following:

"Provided, however, That any person who in good faith prior to the passage of this act had discovered and opened or located a mine of coal or other mineral shall have a preference right of purchase for ninety days from and after the official filing in the local land office of the approved plat of survey provided for by this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in line 4 of the last paragraph of the amendment, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and in line 12 of said paragraph, after the word "opened," insert the words "or located"; and strike out, in the last line of said paragraph, the words "section 2 of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "this section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 33, 37, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 56, 64, 66, 68, 69, 70, 71, 76, 77, 78, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, and 94 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. S. SHERMAN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
GEORGE C. PENDLETON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to know what became of amendment numbered 69.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This is a partial report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the amendment referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts is among the amendments upon which the conferees of the two Houses have been unable to agree.

The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask for a further conference with the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to present a privileged report, being the conference report on House bill 5731, to regulate the practice of medicine, surgery, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 25, 26, 27, 29, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, and 37, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same amended to read as follows: "On page 8, section 7, line 22, strike out 'examination' where it occurs the second time"; and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the thirtieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same amended to read as follows: "On page 11, section 12, line 9, strike out 'any' where it occurs the first time"; and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that section 10 shall read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That the board of medical supervisors of the District of Columbia may, by a vote of four members, refuse to grant or may revoke a license, and may cause the name of any person to be removed from the record of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and from the register of the health office for any of the following causes, to wit: The employment of fraud or deception in passing the examinations provided for in this act, chronic inebriety, the practice of criminal abortion, conviction of crime involving moral turpitude, or unprofessional or dishonorable conduct. In complaints under this section the accused shall be furnished with a copy of the complaint and given a hearing before said board in person or by attorney, and witnesses may be heard for and on behalf of the accused, and for and on behalf of the said board. Appeal from the decision of said board may be taken to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, and the decision of said court shall be final. Said board may at any time within two years from the refusal or revocation of a license or the cancellation of registration under this section, by a vote of four members, issue, without examination, a new license to the person so affected restoring to him or her all the rights and privileges of which he or she had been deprived by said board."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4 and 28.

STANDARD FOR DRY MEASURES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I present a conference report, which I ask may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6833) defining the standard shape and size for dry measures in use in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the first and third amendments of the Senate and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its second amendment.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask that the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the report referred to by the Senator from Iowa; which will be read.

The Secretary read the report; which was printed in the RECORD of the 19th instant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, there is an amendment made by the Senate, No. 144, which I should like to have read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment referred to by the Senator from Florida will be read.

The Secretary read Senate amendment No. 144, as follows:

Military Cemetery at Key West, Fla.: For the purchase and use of land included in the military cemetery adjacent to the reservation of Key West Barracks, Fla., as recommended in a letter from the Secretary of War, dated February 7, 1896 (House Document No. 221, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session), $2,058.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, I see by the report that the amount inserted in the bill, which was the amount contained in the report of the Secretary of War, has been stricken out, and $1,500 inserted in lieu thereof. I do not know any reason why this reduction has been made. It will prevent any settlement of this matter, which has been standing for a long time.

This piece of land in Key West referred to in the amendment was taken by the United States military authorities for cemetery purposes during the war, and more than 200 soldiers were buried there. The property belonged and still belongs to a Mrs. Maloney. Through her husband she endeavored for years to get a settlement by a sale of the land or a recovery of its possession. The United States held and used it for cemetery purposes and the Government failed to make any arrangement to purchase it or to pay for its use. Subsequently a part of it upon which no interments had been made was returned to her, and it was proposed that the Government should pay the amount specified in the amendment as it stood in the bill. Mr. Maloney was always unwilling to accept that amount, because it was claimed that the property was worth three or four times as much, and it was claimed also that Mrs. Maloney should receive a fair compensation for the use of the property which was at first taken and held by the military authorities. A little less than an acre is still retained by the Government, and it was for the purchase of this piece that the amendment provided.

I have made many efforts to get the matter settled under different Secretaries of War since I came to the Senate, and my colleague had made similar efforts before that time. The Secretaries, one after another, had proposed this same settlement, but Mr. Maloney was always unwilling to take it, and refused to take it, and said that it was no use to propose any settlement for the land and its use upon those terms.

During the last year, or perhaps a little more than a year ago, Mr. Maloney died, and his widow, feeling unable to cope any longer with the Government and to continue the contention for a larger amount, agreed that she would take the sum named in the bill. She is needy, and the amount would be a great help to her in her present situation. The Secretary of War, upon being notified that the proposed settlement would be accepted, prepared the letter upon which I offered the amendment read at the desk and sent it to the House of Representatives. The amendment was adopted by the Senate, but for some reason which I do not understand the amount has been reduced to $1,500 by the committee of conference of the two Houses. It will not lead to a settlement, because the amount proposed is less than the actual value of the land, according to the opinion of the owner; and it is not right that the Government should continue in possession of this little piece of land without paying for it.

It is not possible to remove the bodies of the men who have been buried there, for the city authorities, for sanitary reasons, have always refused to allow that to be done when the proposition has been made. Even if such removal were practicable, the estimated cost of removing the remains and restoring the boundary wall would, according to the statements accompanying the Secretary's letter, be more than the amount to be paid for the land according to the terms of the amendment.

On the last page of the report which I hold in my hand it is stated that—

The estimated cost of removing the remains and restoring the boundary wall, made by several parties in Key West, is as follows:

Removing and reinterring 214 bodies, at $10 each	$2,140.00
Removing old wall and rebuilding 130 feet new wall	195.00
Moving picket fence and building 30 feet new fencing	100.00
Total	2,435.00

So, if the United States should pursue that remedy and turn the property back to this lady, it will cost more than the amount named in the report of the Secretary of War, which is $2,058, besides leaving her without compensation for the use of the land.

It would perhaps be asking too much to move that this conference report be rejected on account of this single item; but I think the matter ought to be brought to the attention of the Senate, and perhaps the Senator having charge of the conference on this side may be able to suggest some remedy. It does seem to me that there can not have been proper consideration of the matter, and it looks like a very small piece of economy to deprive this lady of five or six hundred dollars of the amount recommended in the report submitted by the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, only a word in response. The Senator from Florida was kind enough to hand the papers from which he has taken extracts to me and to the Committee on Appropriations, with a view of having the item referred to inserted in the sundry civil bill. It had such merit in the mind of the committee that we agreed to its insertion, and the amount named in the bill was provided for. When we came in contact with the conferees on the part of the House of Representatives, they insisted that it had no place upon the sundry civil bill, it being a claim; and when I endeavored to impress upon the conferees the nature and character of the case they insisted that the amount suggested by the Senate was entirely too large; that the tract in question embraced a small area of land in rather a remote region, which was not worth one-tenth of what we had appropriated. Finally, however, with the view of getting rid of the whole question, they were willing to allow $1,500, and said there would be no difficulty in closing it up for that sum. Of course, if the owner of this property is not willing to take the $1,500, then it will be a matter of consideration at the next session of Congress or by the Committee on Claims. So I concur with the Senator from Florida that it is not wise to delay the progress of this bill on account of this amendment.

Mr. HILL. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if anything was done with the item of appropriation for changes in the New York post-office for the accommodation of the Federal courts?

Mr. ALLISON. Nothing was done with that. That is still in disagreement. The conferees of the House of Representatives believed that that matter could very well lie over until next winter. We endeavored to impress upon them the importance of the immediate expenditure which we had provided for in the bill; but we could not agree, and the matter is still in conference.

Mr. HILL. I trust the conferees on the part of the Senate will continue their good efforts in the direction of having an immediate appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I assure the Senator we shall do the best we possibly can in that regard.

I might say one word as respects the public-building appropriations generally. The House of Representatives would not agree to any of the appropriations and increases which we had proposed in the Senate as to public buildings, and especially they would not agree to the suggestion of any increase of limit in appropriations made for various public buildings.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee what, if anything, has been done with regard to the Senate amendment making an appropriation for the improvement of the Cascades of the Columbia?

Mr. ALLISON. That also is still in disagreement, the House conferees insisting that the provision was also found in substance in the bill known as the river and harbor bill, and the Senate conferees, of course, insisting that we should make the provision a part of the sundry civil bill, leaving the matter open for the present.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then, Mr. President, I hope that the Senate conferees will insist on maintaining that provision in the sundry civil bill. As has been said in the Senate more than once, that appropriation is absolutely essential to the early opening of the great work on the Cascades of the Columbia, and if anything should happen to the river and harbor bill, which I hope will not, we shall be left then in the unfortunate condition of having a work upon which there has been nearly $2,000,000 expended tied up for another year for lack of a few thousand dollars to enable the work to be opened to shipping. It can do no possible harm to have the provision, as the chairman of the committee will agree, in both bills, though it would not look very well, I admit, and would be bad legislation; but in view of the conditions and all the circumstances surrounding us, I hope the provision will be retained in the sundry civil bill, which we all know will become a law, and not take the chance of having it in a bill which may or may not eventually become a law.

Mr. PASCO. I think the conferees on the part of the Senate were entirely correct in insisting that this was not a mere claim, and that it did have a proper place upon this bill. It is among the items for national cemeteries, and is as much in place as any of those other items, in my judgment. It is necessary to extend the cemetery in order to protect the remains of the soldiers buried there. It is not right that they should be disturbed, and the Government certainly ought to enlarge the cemetery and make this purchase so that these remains may not be disturbed. I do not think there can be any doubt that the item properly belongs upon the sundry civil bill, particularly when it is accompanied by the reference to the letter of the Secretary of War, and it does seem to me that the conferees should have felt safe in accepting the report which came from the War Department with reference to the actual value of the land.

But, as I said before, I do not feel justified in asking that the entire report containing these numerous items should all be thrown back into conference on account of this unfavorable action on the part of the conferees. I shall hope if the Secretary of War finds, as I feel sure that he will, that he can not carry out this instruction of Congress to settle this matter with the amount placed at his disposal, that he will come back and ask for the additional amount at the next session of Congress, and then I shall endeavor to have it included in one of the great appropriation bills.

With these remarks I shall leave the subject, hoping that the views suggested by the chairman of the committee will cause the matter to receive proper attention when it next comes before the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to call the attention of the Senate conferees to an item which is still in conference under this report, providing for an appropriation of $12,000 for the improvement of the post-office at Los Angeles, Cal. The circumstances which induced me to offer that amendment here were the following: The building is quite small; it is a Government building. The business of the office has increased so much that it is impossible to transact it any longer in this building unless the cellar is improved and certain other improvements are made, which the Treasury Department estimate will cost about $12,000. If the appropriation is not made at once, the building, so far as the post-office is concerned, will have to be abandoned. It was with difficulty that I induced the Department to refrain from advertising for and receiving bids for a new site.

The revenue of the office is very large. Last year the Government netted from it $90,000, the gross revenue being $164,000; and the postmaster there informs me that the revenue for the first quarter of this year has increased $5,000, which would indicate something in the neighborhood of one hundred and eighty-odd thousand dollars gross revenue during the year. The matter can not wait, as I have said, the action of future Congresses, because of the crowded condition of the edifice now. I introduced a bill for an additional public building at that place, but recognizing the condition of the Treasury, I did not press it. I hope the conferees will bear in mind that there is on record a letter from the Department showing the necessity for this improvement, and the urgency of it will be manifest from what I have said.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee in relation to the revenue cutters for the Pacific coast. Is there a disposition to eliminate the revenue cutters from the appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from California that the appropriation for a revenue cutter on the Pacific coast is eliminated from the bill by the conference report. The House conferees would not consent to the construction of another revenue cutter on the Pacific coast this year, one being now under construction. They asked us to state what we regarded as the most important, the light vessel at San Francisco Harbor or a revenue cutter; and believing that we would have the sanction and approval of the Senator from California, we claimed that the light-ship is the most important, and the light-ship is retained in the report.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, we are very grateful for the retention of the light-ship to guide mariners into the great port of San Francisco, and I felt assured that the conferees on the part of the Senate would insist upon that amendment.

The revenue cutters, however, are not for California. They are for Oregon, Washington, and Alaska. They are a necessity to the Government for the protection of its revenues. Two cutters were recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Superintendent of that Service says it is most important that the additional one which the Senate put in should be provided for at the present session of Congress. I hope the Senate conferees will not recede from their demand for the additional revenue cutter. While California is grateful for the favors that it has received, the cutter which the Senate provided for is not for California, as I have said, but for the whole Pacific coast; and I earnestly hope that the chairman of the committee with his persuasive logic will convince our friends on the conference committee from the other House that the construction of this cutter is an absolute necessity for the protection of the revenues of our country.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I wish to add a few words in favor of an additional revenue cutter for the Pacific coast. I looked into the question very carefully and conferred with the officials of the Treasury Department. I know they are very earnestly in favor of it. I know the condition of the Revenue-Marine Service on the Pacific coast. We have a few old, antiquated vessels there that are really unfit for service. All of them put together to-day are not worth $150,000; probably they are not worth $100,000. The service there is very exacting. There is a great deal to be done in connection with the Bering Sea fisheries, as we all know, and we are absolutely without a single revenue cutter that is fit for service.

When one of the vessels was supposed to be lost in a storm, and it was found eventually to have been lost, there was an attempt made to rescue it, and the revenue cutter was ordered out by the Secretary of the Treasury. It made the attempt, but remained out only a few hours. The condition of the vessel was such that it had to put back into port and allow the vessel to be lost. There is absolutely not a single vessel there capable of going out to the relief of a vessel in distress. The Department is very emphatic in its views on the subject. I had the honor to introduce a bill providing for this additional revenue cutter, and it was favorably recommended, and in very strong terms, by the Department. It seems to me this item ought to be included in the bill.

I could talk at length on the subject, but I wish only to emphasize at this time what the Senator from California has stated. To deny this appropriation would be a very great injustice to the customs service and to all that relates to the service on the Pacific Coast. We have no patrolling vessel. There are half a dozen vessels patrolling from Hatteras to Maine on the Atlantic coast. Not a single vessel patrols the Pacific shore. We ought to have a vessel of such a character as will endure the weather in those seas.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I can understand that the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] and the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] feel disturbed that the committee of conference has reduced somewhat the appropriations for the Pacific Coast. They should, however, be somewhat reconciled from the fact that other appropriations have been cut down by the conference committee in its desire to promote economy. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] has called our attention to one of the cases where the committee has acted with great zeal and fidelity. That is the case of Mrs. Maloney's graveyard. It seems that the Government has taken a woman's land at Key West for a graveyard. An estimate was put upon the value of it and the amount was agreed upon—some few hundred dollars; I could not distinctly hear the statement of the Senator from Florida as to the amount—but the conference committee felt so pressed by considerations of economy that it cut in two the price of this poor woman's graveyard and reduced the amount some hundreds of dollars. If the Senator from Florida will kindly tell me how much has been saved by the reduction made by the committee of conference I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. PASCO. About $500.

Mr. CHANDLER. Under those circumstances, when the price of a graveyard is reduced in the case of a poor Southern widow, I should not suppose that the Senators from California and Washington would expect that they could possibly retain both a revenue cutter and a light-ship. The committee could not cut the price for the light-ship in two or cut the price for the revenue cutter in two. So it left out one and retained the other. But in the case of the cemetery at Key West it cut the amount in two and made a saving of some $500, which is not much, but it is so much, Mr. President, in these Democratic times, when the Treasury is empty and the public welfare languishes on account of the kind of government we have in the White House and at the Treasury Department.

It seems to me that there should be no hurry, and that it would be well for the Senators from the Pacific Coast and the Senator from Florida to make a motion to vote down this conference report and see whether we can not get full pay for the cemetery, and perhaps get additional provision made for the public good on the Pacific Coast. We have already voted down one conference report. There is time. We are likely to remain here some days before the river and harbor bill is signed by the President, and the time might as well be devoted to discussing somewhat fully these details. If the Senator from Florida, instead of retiring in the face of the conference committee, had insisted upon voting down the conference report, or if the Senator from Washington had spoken at length on the subject, as he might have done, and appealed to the Senate for an adverse vote, I am sure that the report might have been voted down and we might have got an appropriation for these necessary and important objects at the present session, instead of waiting a year or two longer in order to get justice done to the Pacific Coast and to Mrs. Maloney.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the conference committee.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. TELLER, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the issuance of interest-bearing bonds of the United States for any purpose whatever without further authority of Congress is hereby prohibited.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire to make some remarks upon the bill?

Mr. STEWART. I object to any remarks pending the motion to take up the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. After the bill is taken up I intend to submit some remarks. I have some very interesting remarks to submit with reference to the question.

Mr. HILL. That may be, Mr. President.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish now to have the Senate take up the bill and make it the unfinished business.

Mr. HILL. Not to debate the question at all, I was simply going to suggest to the Senate whether it was worth while to enter upon a discussion——

Mr. STEWART. I rise to a point of order. I object to debate upon the motion to take up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada rises to a point of order.

Mr. HILL. I trust the Senator does not object to unanimous consent that I may make a statement.

Mr. STEWART. I object to any kind of debate on the motion to take up the bill.

Mr. HILL (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], to proceed to the consideration of the bill which has been read, the Senator from New York moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. STEWART. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HILL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on the motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. I do not see him in his seat, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. FAULKNER'S name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. HANSBROUGH'S name was called). I announce the pair between the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 13, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—13.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1341, which has been read.

Mr. BUTLER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HILL. Let us have the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending the motion of the Senator from North Carolina, the Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. HILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. FAULKNER'S name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. The pair will be transferred to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and the present occupant of the chair votes "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I again announce, and for the day, my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to announce the transfer of my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] to my colleague [Mr. MANTLE], and I vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I wish to inquire whether the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then I transfer my pair with that Senator to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who is absent. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Baker,	Cullom,	Frye,	Wetmore.
Brown,	Davis,	Gallinger,
Chandler,	Faulkner,	McMillan,

Cockrell,	Kyle,	Proctor,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I rise to submit a report from the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill. I ask that it be printed and lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the Senator from South Dakota can not ask for the reception of the conference report while a motion is pending to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives in which it originated the bill (H. R. 1094) granting a pension to Francis E. Hoover, with his objections thereto, the House proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same; and it was Resolved, That the bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to the same.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 19, 22, 23, 36, 37, 38, 83, 108, 109, 142, 144, 233, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 313, and 314 to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes; agreed to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee, and Mr. DOCKERY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, agreed to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOOKER, Mr. HERMANN, and Mr. CATCHINGS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent at this time to present a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill and to ask that it be printed, to be considered to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to submit a conference report upon the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the same will be printed in the RECORD and also as a document.

Mr. HILL. Unanimous consent has been given to present the report. That is all right. I am entitled to have it read.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not required.

Mr. HILL. It does not make any difference. I want it read.

Mr. STEWART. I object.

Mr. HILL. The Senator can not object.

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

Mr. HILL. I am entitled to have it read. It has been presented, and I am entitled to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the Senate having given unanimous consent that the report should be presented, any Senator has a right to have the report read. The reading can only be dispensed with by the action of the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will state that the request for unanimous consent embraced also a request that the report shall be printed in the RECORD and considered to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so stated.

Mr. HILL. No such request was made when you last put it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let the notes be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from South Dakota made the request, and the Chair did not put in the part in reference to its being considered to-morrow.

Mr. HILL. They are separate propositions.

Mr. STEWART (to Mr. PETTIGREW). Then withdraw the report.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from South Dakota can not withdraw it now. He has presented it, and the Senate has given unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York insist upon the reading of the report?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed to read the report.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. I object to debate.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HILL. I wanted to make a simple statement, and I was ruled out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and that is, that the matter not being disposed of, objection can be interposed at any time before it is finally disposed of. I therefore object to the acceptance or consideration of the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Another parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President, for the guidance of the Senate. I desire to ask the Chair if unanimous consent is necessary to present a conference report? Is not a conference report a privileged matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that unanimous consent is necessary during the pendency of a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business. That motion is now pending, and it requires unanimous consent in order to present a conference report.

Mr. GALLINGER. I supposed that the motion had been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate was dividing at the time, and the report could only be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. I call attention to the fact that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] stated distinctly that he simply asked unanimous consent to present the report and would ask for its consideration to-morrow. It was on that understanding and that statement that unanimous consent was given. Otherwise I should have objected. I claim that that statement having been made, I have the right now to object to the acceptance of the report.

Mr. HILL. I must take the request as it was presented through the Chair. The Chair simply asked, "Is there objection to the present presentation of the report?" There was no objection, and the report was presented. Then I have a right, as the Chair has already ruled, to have the report read. The Senator can not now, after intervening matters have come up, object to its presentation or reading. I am strictly in order.

Mr. STEWART. At all times in considering the effect of unanimous-consent agreements we refer to the RECORD to inquire what the request was. It is always determined by the request. The request was distinct. The consent was given on the request. The request was not for anything more than the printing of the report, and consent was not given for anything further than that. I object to the consideration of the report. It is contrary to the request and contrary to the consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would have to rule, even under the statement of the Senator from South Dakota, as understood by the Senate, that the report be received and printed in the RECORD, that any Senator has a right, when the report is once received, to call for the reading of it.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask that the unanimous-consent agreement be read, if there is to be a violation of it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask to have my request read.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the rule relating to unanimous-consent agreements read. Before it is accepted any Senator can object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is no rule of the Senate in reference to unanimous-consent agreements. The Chair only ruled that the request of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] for the reading of the report must be complied with.

Mr. ALLEN. I call for the reading of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. Let the stenographer read.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply wanted to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the stenographer can not take what is being said and read his notes at the same time.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that; and I do not expect him to do it. I do not expect him to accomplish impossible things unless he has more ability than I suppose he has. Before the Chair directed the reading of the report I called for the reading of the language of the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Nebraska will yield the floor, the Chair will direct that the words be read. The stenographer will read to the Senate the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] and the statement of the Chair.

The Reporter read as follows:

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent at this time to present a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, and to ask that it be printed, to be considered to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to submit a conference report upon the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the same will be printed in the RECORD and also as a document.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I do not expect to be able to say anything or to do anything that will put an end to the filibustering that is going on at this time and the evident desire not to take up the bill of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], but I wish to call attention to the fact that with one exception, a single exception during the present Congress, since I have been here there has never been a violation of a unanimous-consent agreement. Certainly the Populists in this Chamber have never violated one, and I have never known such an agreement to be violated except in one instance. I hope the Senate will not feel itself at liberty to violate this unanimous-consent agreement and to abandon the principles and honor of manhood in failing to observe it.

Mr. HILL. What is the question before the Senate that gives——

Mr. ALLEN. I do not yield.

Mr. HILL. What is the question before the Senate that gives the right to one Senator beyond what other Senators have?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not yield to the Senator.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a point of order. The Senator from Nebraska has no right to speak.

Mr. ALLEN. I have a right to speak.

Mr. HILL. What gives the Senator the right more than anyone else, I should like to know?

Mr. ALLEN. I think I shall speak, too.

Mr. HILL. That may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will suspend until the Chair can pass upon the point of order raised by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Others have rights here as well as the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state very frankly that having ruled upon the question which was submitted, there is now nothing before the Senate except the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to proceed to the consideration of executive business. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] has the floor, as the Chair understood, by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. HILL. Did he request it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He did not.

Mr. ALLEN. I raised a point of order, and I am still standing on the point of order.

Mr. HILL. It is pretty light standing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair having understood that no objection was made, recognized the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator from New York object?

Mr. HILL. I raise the point, When did he request unanimous consent to speak?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska did not make a request, but neither the Chair nor any Senator having called him to order for proceeding, the Chair assumed he was speaking by the unanimous consent of the Senate, and he will so hold until the Senator from Nebraska surrenders the floor.

Mr. HILL. And a point of order will not lie?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not after unanimous consent, either indirectly or directly, has been given.

Mr. ALLEN. When I was interrupted by the Senator from New York, who, of course, is a great parliamentarian and is now manifesting his great knowledge of parliamentary tactics, I was proceeding simply to make the observation that unanimous-consent agreements not having been violated, having been observed on both sides, with a single notable exception, which I think we all remember, during this session of Congress, I hope the Democrats and Republicans will not feel themselves at liberty to violate the unanimous-consent agreement that has been obtained, because the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] happens to be a member of the Populist party and because this can be said to be in some degree a Populist measure.

Mr. HILL. I am glad to hear it announced as a Populist measure.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from North Carolina taking the floor?

Mr. HILL. Now, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the reading of the report submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. HILL. I so understand.

Mr. GEORGE. Let us have it read. We would have been through with it by this time.

Mr. HILL. I have no objection to the Senator from Nebraska talking, but I do not believe in both Senators having the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to make a correction.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield simply for a correction or a statement. I do not yield the floor entirely.

Mr. BUTLER. This filibustering is not due to the Populist party. It would take place if a Democrat or Republican had taken it up. The filibustering takes place because the bill is right, because some Senators here do not want it to pass——

Mr. ALLEN. I think that is true.

Mr. BUTLER. Because the country wants it. It is because it is a just measure. That is why the filibustering is indulged in.

Mr. HILL. Let them have all the rope between them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. I think what the Senator from North Carolina says is true. I understand quite well that my talking here assists the Senator from New York. I am his assistant in helping to kill time. I realize that fully; but I can not understand and I do not understand, and I never expect to live to be old enough to understand, how a distinguished Senator who occupies a seat in this Chamber can feel himself at liberty in a public manner and openly to violate the courtesies of a unanimous-consent agreement because it does not happen to originate with the party of which he is a member.

Mr. HILL. I desire to know whether the Senator from Nebraska intends to refer to me in stating that a Senator has violated a unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. ALLEN. What does the Senator want to know for?

Mr. HILL. Simply for curiosity.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I meant the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I desire to state right now that the statement is false. I have violated no agreement of the Senate; none whatever. I simply insisted upon my rights, and I have been sustained by the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not propose to say that it is false or anything of that kind, but the Senator from New York will never live long enough to convince me that his conduct was honest in making the objection.

Mr. HILL. That may be. I never care to live long enough to convince the Senator from Nebraska. I stand upon my parliamentary rights. I have violated no unanimous-consent agreement. I have always maintained them where I could, and I maintain this one now. The Senator from South Dakota made the request, presented the report, and I simply asked to have it read, just as has been done hundreds of times.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is occupying the floor by unanimous consent.

Mr. GRAY. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the conference report.

Mr. HILL. I demand that it be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 46, 51, and 56.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 71, 76, 86, 87, and 94; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For purchase of seed and grain and for subsistence for the Ponca Indians in Nebraska, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and for payment for such supplies heretofore purchased during the current fiscal year, $5,000, to be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 47, 48, and 49, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendments and strike out the amended paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to appoint a commission to consist of three persons, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, and not more than one of whom shall be resident of any one State, to negotiate with the following Indians, namely: With the Crow and Flathead Indians, in the State of Montana, for the cession of portions of their respective reservations; with the Northern Cheyenne and Crow Indians, for the removal of said Northern Cheyenne Indians from their present reservation on the Rosebud River at Lame Deer Agency to the southern portion of the Crow Reservation; with the Indians residing on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, and with the Indians residing upon the Uintah Reservation, in the State of Utah, for the surrender of any portion of their respective reservations, or for such modification of existing treaties as may be deemed desirable by said Indians and the Secretary of the Interior; and with the Yakima Indians, in the State of Washington, for the surrender of a portion of their reservation lands, and for such modification of existing treaties as may be deemed desirable by said Indians and the Secretary of the Interior, any agreement thus negotiated being subject to subsequent ratification by Congress; and for the expenses of such commission and negotiations hereunder the sum of $10,000 is appropriated: Provided, That the time for the completion of the canal, or any part thereof, authorized by an act entitled 'An act granting to the Columbia Irrigation Company a right of way through the Yakima Indian Reservation in Washington,' be, and is hereby, extended two years from July 24, 1896."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Insert after the word "persons," in lines 2 and 3 of said amendment, the following: "two of whom shall be practical surveyors"; and insert after said amendment the following: "To enable the Attorney-General to employ a special attorney for the Mission Indians of southern California, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, $1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,235,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "Dakota," in line 2 of said amendment, the words "in full of all demands and claims upon the Government"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "Company," in line 1 of said amendment, the words "in full of all demands and claims upon the Government"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 83, 84, and 85, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendments, and strike out the amended paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For support of Indian industrial school at Pierre, S. Dak., at not to exceed $167 per annum for each pupil, and for general repairs and improvements, $27,050; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; in all, $28,550: Provided, That hereafter no Indian child shall be taken from any school in any State or Territory to a school in any other State against its will or without the written consent of its parents."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 37, 64, 66, 69, and 70 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

R. F. PETTIGREW,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. S. SHERMAN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
GEORGE C. PENDLETON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will go over and be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rise to a privileged question. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message recently received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUTLER. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule that that is not a privileged question, and can not be laid before the Senate as a matter of right at this time.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I move that it be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can not now do that, as there is a question pending before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Presiding Officer——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, which motion is pending.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to paragraph 5 of Rule VII, and ask the Chair to read it. If I am wrong I will withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate is now dividing upon the motion made by the Senator to proceed to the consideration of executive business; and consequently during the pendency of that question nothing can intervene except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Chair hold that any question pending at the time can not be suspended for the purpose of having a message laid before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the Senate is dividing nothing can be received by the Senate except by unanimous consent; and the Chair will so hold.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Chair hold that all the recent transactions were by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so stated as each question was submitted to the Senate.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I suggest the lack of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senate is now dividing. The question is on the motion submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire, which will decide the question as to whether there is a quorum or not.

Mr. HILL. That may be, Mr. President, but since the conference report has been read, intervening business having taken place, I have the right at any time to suggest the absence of a quorum, and I appeal to the good sense of the Presiding Officer and to the rules to sustain me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair differs in opinion with the Senator from New York. The Senate is now dividing, and the vote upon that division will test the question as to whether there is a quorum present or not; and during that time no suggestion whatever is proper.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. STEWART called for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have already been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. SHOUP. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). My pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] has been transferred to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] for the day only, and I vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I announce that my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has been transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and I vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. FAULKNER's name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is temporarily absent.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I am advised that the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I have a general pair, would, if present, favor the present consideration of the bond bill; and I therefore exercise my discretionary right, and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I announce for the rest of the day that I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—12.

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I submit a conference report.

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

Mr. STEWART. That can not be done pending another motion.

Mr. BUTLER. There is a motion pending, Mr. President.

Mr. FRYE. The rule says "pending a vote," I believe.

Mr. HILL. There is no vote pending; and the Senator from Maine has the right to present his report.

Mr. FRYE. I ask to have the rule read in reference to conference reports. I think the rule says "pending a vote."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read Rule XXVII.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XXVII.

REPORTS OF CONFERENCE COMMITTEES.

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under that rule the Chair will be compelled to decide that the motion having been made by the Senator from North Carolina simply to proceed to the consideration of a particular bill, and the Senate not having yet divided upon that question by proceeding to vote, the reception, not the consideration, of a conference report would be in order.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, Mr. President, under that rule I object to the consideration of the report. I raise the point of consideration.

Mr. FRYE. I do not think the Senator will do that, for I do not think the report will take any time. I am very anxious to get the report before the Senate, and I wish to have it agreed to to-night, because the committee will have to meet to-morrow. The report has been read.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not like to be disobliging, but after all the trouble we have had here this evening I think I am justified in insisting on my motion.

Mr. STEWART. Let the bond bill be taken up, and then the Senator from Maine can make his report.

Mr. FRYE. I do not think the report will take a moment.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us first take up the bond bill.

Mr. STEWART. Let the motion be put to take up the bond bill.

Mr. BUTLER. It will only take a moment to have the motion put to take up the bond bill.

I want to state for the information of the Senate that all I desire is a vote. I am not going to make a speech on the bill, though I had prepared some matter regarding it, but I do not desire to speak, and if no other Senator desires to speak there will be no time consumed except the time consumed in voting. A vote is all I ask for. I hope everybody understands that.

Mr. HILL. The bill will lead to debate, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask Senators to be in order until the Chair calls attention to the latter part of the rule in relation to conference reports:

And when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised—

Which question is raised by the objection of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]— shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

So the question before the Senate under that rule is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report submitted by the Senator from Maine? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the conference report is before the Senate for consideration.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20, 36, 38, 48, 49, 67, 69, 73, 74, 75, 83, 104, 142, 157, 158, 160, 172, 207, 208, 223, 250, 251, 333.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 46, 47, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 70, 72, 78, 79, 81, 82, 84, 85, 88, 89, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 105, 106, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 127, 129, 131, 133, 134, 135, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 159, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 168, 169, 170, 171, 173 (but to be inserted at the end of the item for the Potomac River, instead of that for the Appomattox River, as erroneously printed), 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 200, 201, 202, 203, 205, 206, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 246, 247, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 261, 262, 263, 264, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 384, 385, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language stricken out insert the two following paragraphs:

"For the purpose of strengthening and improving the bulkheads and pier along the property belonging to the estate of J. P. Robinson, which abuts on the channel known as Gowanus Creek Channel, the said estate of J. P. Robinson, its heirs, their successors, or assigns, are hereby authorized to construct and maintain the bulkhead distant 30 feet southerly from the present bulkhead line, beginning 470 feet from the southerly side of Bryant street and the easterly side of Court street, and said bulkhead shall then continue westerly parallel with the present bulkhead to a point distant 45 feet from the present easterly line of the pier at present owned by the estate of J. P. Robinson, and extending thence southerly in a straight line distant 45 feet from said pier line to the present bulkhead line continued, a distance of about 393 feet.

"Improving Gowanus Creek Channel, New York, by deepening the same to 26 feet at mean low water, from the foot of Percival street to its junction with the Red Hook Channel, $25,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language stricken out insert the following paragraph:

"Improving harbor at Mamaroneck, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, in accordance with report of Chief of Engineers, 1887, $10,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "report," proposed to be inserted; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"And that when said C. P. Goodyear, his heirs and assigns, have procured a 200-foot channel of a minimum depth of 23 feet at mean high tide, $30,000 shall be paid therefor; and when he has secured a channel 200 feet wide, 24 feet deep at mean high tide, an additional $40,000 shall be paid therefor; and that all of said deepening of said bar shall be completed within three years from the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That no payment shall be made to said Goodyear or his legal representatives except upon a certificate of the Secretary of War, made after personal survey by an experienced officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, selected by him for that purpose, that such depths and widths have severally been obtained by him or them; and said officer shall make to Congress a report in detail of the amount of work done, its cost, and its value to the Government."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 86 and 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 86 and 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$80,000"; and strike out all the remainder of the paragraph, being the proviso, including amendment numbered 87; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "improvement," in the second line of the paragraph, strike out the word "fifty" and insert "seventy-five"; and after the word "million," in the seventh line of the paragraph, insert the words "and fifty thousand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 107, 108, 109, 110, and 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 107, 108, 109, 110, and 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the entire paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following paragraph:

"Improving harbor at Manistee, Mich.: Continuing improvement and dredging the interior channel, $15,000; and all moneys heretofore appropriated and now unexpended may be used for dredging such interior channel at the discretion of the Secretary of War. Any limitations on such former appropriations are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the language proposed to be stricken out, and after the word "Provided" in the first line of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the word "further"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 128: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 136: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 136, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the language proposed to be stricken out, and at the end of it insert the following: "If in the opinion of the Secretary of War the interests of commerce demand such expenditure"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 167: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 167, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the twelfth line of the language proposed to be inserted strike out the word "but," after the word "Point," and insert in lieu thereof the word "until"; and in the fourteenth line of said proposed language strike out the words "through the Secretary to the next Congress," and insert in lieu thereof the words "to the Secretary of War on the first Monday in December of the current year"; and at the end of the language proposed insert the following:

"And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to carry out the recommendations of said board, and to modify the present contract, if necessary, and adjust any loss with the contractor occasioned by the provisions of this act, and to pay the same out of the appropriation under which the said contract was made; also to expend the additional sum of $25,000, in his discretion, for such dredging as may be necessary for the maintenance of channels from the mouths of the Appoquinimink River and Blackbird Creek in the channel of the Delaware River through the dike now being constructed from Reedy Island to Liston Point for the improvement of the Delaware."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 185: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 185, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 199: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 199, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 259: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 259, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "dollars," at the end of the first proviso, insert the words "exclusive of the amount herein appropriated"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 260: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 260, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Before the word "obtaining," next preceding the words proposed to be inserted, insert the word "ultimately"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 265: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 265, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the language proposed to be inserted all after the word "Commission" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the purpose of improving the channel by preventing erosion of the banks, not exceeding $70,000 at Omaha and Council Bluffs, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Rocheport, not exceeding $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Glasgow, and for protecting the shore line above Glasgow from the foot of Bowling Green Bend to the head of Harrisons Island, not exceeding $80,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Miami, not exceeding $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at St. Charles, not exceeding $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at and near the mouth of the Little Blue, in Jackson County, Mo., not exceeding $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; on the banks of the river opposite Leavenworth and Atchison, not exceeding $15,000 at each of said localities, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Nebraska City, not exceeding $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the Commission may also expend such amounts as may be absolutely necessary at any time in the improvement of the channel by preventing erosion of the banks at other harbors and localities on the river."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 308: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 308, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be made and transmitted to the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress a compilation giving a complete list of all the preliminary examinations that have heretofore been made, date of report, with a statement as to each, whether favorable or unfavorable for survey; also a complete list of all surveys that have heretofore been made, with a statement as to each, whether favorable for adoption or unfavorable, and date of report, amount recommended for completion and amount recommended for each, to be expended during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1896, by both the Chief of Engineers and the engineer in charge; also a complete list of all projects now under construction or maintenance, together with the year when adopted, and if modified, when; the total amount expended on each project and estimate of amount required to complete the same, and amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers and by the engineer in charge to be expended during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1898, the amount appropriated for each project by this act, making reference to the report of the Chief of Engineers, where report of each project is given, together with a statement containing the amount of the unexpended balance to the credit of each project July 1, 1897, whether under construction, work suspended, or appropriation made and work not commenced; also the total amounts appropriated heretofore for the improvement and maintenance of the rivers, and the total amounts heretofore appropriated for the improvement and maintenance of harbors in each river and harbor act; also the total amount of appropriation, by States, for the improvement of rivers and harbors."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 324: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 324, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language stricken out insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause to be made accurate examinations and estimates of cost of construction of a ship canal, by the most practicable route, wholly within the United States, from the Great Lakes to the navigable waters of the Hudson River, of sufficient capacity to transport the tonnage of the lakes to the sea."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 360: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 360, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"Delaware River, with a view to obtaining a channel 600 feet wide and 30 feet deep from a point at or near the city of Philadelphia to the deep water of Delaware Bay."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 375: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 375, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the language proposed insert the following new paragraph:

"Removal of dam in upper Allegheny, near Corydon, and all the dams on the Conewango Creek, and the rapids at or near Waterboro, in the Conewango Creek, a tributary of the Allegheny River."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 376: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 376, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the language proposed to be inserted insert the following paragraph:

"Gowanus Creek, with a view of obtaining a depth of 30 feet at mean low water."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 383: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 383, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the line after the language proposed to be inserted strike out the word "from," before the word "modified," and insert in lieu thereof the word "for"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 386: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 386, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "refuge," in the next paragraph but one preceding, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Inner harbor at Point Judith Pond."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 130, 132, and 342: The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 130, 132, and 342.

WM. P. FRYE,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. B. HOOKER,
BINGER HERMANN,
T. C. CATCHINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FRYE. Now, I desire to say a single word. The report of the conference committee has been entirely read.

Mr. HILL. This report?

Mr. FRYE. This report, which was simply sent back to the committee on account of a disagreement, in order that the matter to which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] called attention might be adjusted to his satisfaction, which has been done, and in order to correct one or two errors which were discovered in the report, so that the Senate has the entire report.

Mr. MILLS. How about the survey of Sabine Lake?

Mr. FRYE. That survey was restored. Everything that has been called to the attention of the chairman of the committee by Senators has been agreed to, and has been restored to its place.

Mr. WHITE. I presume there is still a disagreement as to the items I referred to this morning.

Mr. FRYE. We have not disposed of California at all; the same items are there now. I hope the Senate will agree to the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the conference committee, which has been submitted by the Senator from Maine.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference, and Mr. FRYE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, what is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the motion submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to proceed to the consideration of the bill in relation to the regulation of bond issues.

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. STEWART. On the motion to take up the bill I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear the sugtion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. I suggested the lack of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Davis,	McMillan,	Squire,
Bacon,	Dubois,	Martin,	Stewart,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Mills,	Teller,
Berry,	Frye,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Thurston,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Turpie,
Brown,	George,	Pasco,	Vest,
Burrows,	Gray,	Peffer,	Vilas,
Butler,	Harris,	Perkins,	Walthall,
Cannon,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Carter,	Kyle,	Pritchard,	White.
Clark,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	Lodge,	Roach,
Cullom,	McBride,	Shoup,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for a division.

Mr. BUTLER, Mr. STEWART, and others. Question! Question!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a division.

Mr. STEWART. Let us have the yeas and nays first.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no; do not let us have the yeas and nays. It will be a waste of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a second to the demand for the yeas and nays?

Mr. STEWART. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. HILL. I ask for a division.

The Senate refused to adjourn; there being on a division—ayes 10, noes 36.

FRANCIS E. HOOVER—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Chair lay before the Senate the message received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUTLER. I raise the point of order that it is out of order. I am entitled to the floor on the pending question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina, with all due respect, that he is not entitled to the floor. He made a motion. Various other subjects have been considered. He is not holding the floor to speak. I make a privileged motion, which takes the place of his motion.

Mr. TELLER. It is not a privileged motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will look on page 7 of the rules he will see. The Senator should be more gentle when he contradicts me.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STEWART. I understand that when a motion is made to take up a bill, and when a privileged motion intervenes and fails, the original motion is in order and is pending.

Mr. GEORGE. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have section 5 of Rule VII read.

The Secretary read as follows:

5. The presiding officer may at any time lay, and it shall be in order at any time for a Senator to move to lay, before the Senate any bill or other matter sent to the Senate by the President or the House of Representatives, and any question pending at that time shall be suspended for this purpose. Any motion so made shall be determined without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under this rule the Chair feels under obligation to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUTLER. I object to its present consideration.

Mr. HILL. It has not been laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not up for consideration at this time. It is simply the laying of the message before the Senate. That is as far as the Chair has ruled is in order.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us hear what it is.

The Secretary read the message of the House of Representatives, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 21, 1896.

The President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives in which it originated the bill (H. R. 1094) granting a pension to Francis E. Hoover, with his objections thereto, the House proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

Mr. HILL. I ask to have the whole proceedings laid before the Senate. I ask to have the bill and message read through.

Mr. GEORGE. I object.

Mr. TELLER. That can not be done.

Mr. HILL. I have a right to have the President's message considered.

Mr. GEORGE. We can not do that.

Mr. BERRY. It requires a motion.

Mr. HILL. It can be done.

Mr. BUTLER. I object to its consideration.

Mr. HILL. I submit that we must proceed with the President's veto message unless the Senate otherwise orders.

Mr. CULLOM. That is right.

Mr. HILL. We have a right to proceed with the consideration of that message unless the Senate otherwise orders.

Mr. STEWART. We will otherwise order when we can vote on the motion to take up Senate bill 1341.

Mr. HILL. That may be. You may otherwise order, but you will do it in accordance with the rules.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator from New York that two or three other measures have come over from the House, one of which I am very anxious to reach, and that is the immigration bill. I desire to have that bill read and referred to the Committee on Immigration to-night.

Mr. CULLOM. The veto message is first to be disposed of.

Mr. HILL. The veto message is the first thing. We have a right to have it considered, unless the Senate by a vote postpones it.

Mr. CULLOM. Or refers it to a committee.

Mr. STEWART. Or takes up some other bill. That is always in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust that the bill will be referred to the Committee on Pensions. It is an important matter, and I trust it may go there by consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will be referred, with the accompanying message, to the Committee on Pensions. It is so referred.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the bill from the House of Representatives concerning immigration may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the bill may be read in full.

Mr. STEWART. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill in full.

Mr. STEWART. Read it in full! That is the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the reading of the bill does not involve its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is the first reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When a bill is presented to the Senate any Senator has a right to require it to be read in full. It is the first reading of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not very long.

The bill was read the first time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, in amendment of the immigration and contract-labor acts, be, and hereby is, amended by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission to the United States the following: All male persons between 16 and 60 years of age who can not both read and write the English language or some other language. But no parent of a person now living in, or hereafter admitted to, this country shall be excluded because of his inability to read and write.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, to facilitate the enforcement of the immigration and contract-labor laws, shall apply to the persons mentioned in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any alien who resides or retains his home in a foreign country to enter the United States for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor within the borders thereof while residing or retaining his home in a foreign country: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may permit aliens to come into and enter this country for the purpose of teaching new arts or industries, under such rules and regulations as he may provide.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ in any mechanical trade or manual labor in the United States any alien who resides or retains his home in a foreign country: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels of the United States, or railroad train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen, whose duties require them to pass over the frontier to reach the termini of their runs.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any alien to enter the United States, except subjects of the Dominion of Canada and other American countries, except at the places where the United States maintain an immigrant inspection board.

SEC. 6. That any violation of the provisions of this act shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for the term of not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. That all persons convicted under section 3 of this act shall be deported to the country from whence they came.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect three months after its passage.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts ask unanimous consent?

Mr. STEWART. I object to any unanimous consent.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the bill be read the second time and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. STEWART. I object to any motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is a motion now pending before the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1341.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill now before the Senate must be disposed of before——

Mr. STEWART. I object to discussion.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill is before the Senate and it must be disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Nevada to object to the second reading of the bill?

Mr. STEWART. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GRAY (at 6 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HILL. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is demanded upon the motion to adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn, there being on a division—ayes 8, noes 35.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum of the Senate not having voted on the division, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names.

Allen,	Cullom,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Bacon,	Daniel,	McBride,	Roach,
Bate,	Dubois,	Martin,	Shoup,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Mills,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Teller,
Brown,	George,	Nelson,	Vilas,
Butler,	Gray,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Carter,	Harris,	Peffer,	Warren,
Chilton,	Hawley,	Perkins,	White.
Clark,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,
Cockrell,	Kyle,	Pritchard,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. HILL. Is that motion debatable?

Mr. STEWART. It is not.

Mr. HILL. I asked the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the yeas and nays. We should like to have a vote on that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course the Senator from New York has a right to the yeas and nays, but the motion does not involve the question of a quorum. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. HILL. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada, that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. HILL. I ask for a division on that question.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 29, noes 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making an effort to ascertain——

Mr. HILL. I ask that the Senator from Kansas be permitted to make an effort. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask to have the rules of the Senate enforced pending the execution of the order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending the execution of the order, no quorum being present, nothing can be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. STEWART. What does the Senator propose?

Mr. PEFFER. I propose to ascertain whether we can not agree by unanimous consent upon some particular time when we shall take up Senate bill 1341 and dispose of all this trouble.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to debate while the Senate is endeavoring to get a quorum. The rule is imperative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire objects to debate.

Mr. CHANDLER (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.). I request to have my name called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the name of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER answered to his name.

Mr. BURROWS answered to his name.

Mr. GALLINGER (at 6 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw my motion, Mr. President.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not desire to put Senators to inconvenience so late in the evening. It will probably take some time for the Sergeant-at-Arms to secure the attendance of absent Senators. Therefore I give notice——

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to notice.

Mr. HILL. Let the Senator give his notice; that is right.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like the Senator to make a motion; but he can not make a speech.

Mr. WHITE. He can give a notice, I presume.

Mr. BUTLER. I will make a statement, then, if the Senator from New Hampshire objects to a notice being given. I will make a statement that I shall call up Senate bill 1341 early to-morrow morning; and therefore I will move that the Senate take a recess until——

Mr. HAWLEY. A motion for a recess is not in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. Such a motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from North Carolina that until a quorum appears it is impossible to entertain any motion except a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 22, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 21, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. The following prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN:

We invoke Thy blessing, Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, upon all the proceedings of this House to-day; that everything may be done decently and in order; that the interests of the people of this great nation may be faithfully and efficiently served by these their chosen representatives.

Especially do we ask Thy blessing upon the member of this Congressional household who has been called upon to give up his companion to the Angel of Death. Comfort him in the thought of a happy reunion in a land where there shall be no parting. This we ask in the name of Christ. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the following special publication made in the Cincinnati Tribune of last Tuesday.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURPRISED AT GENERAL GROSVENOR—HE VOTES AGAINST REPORTING A RECIPROCITY BILL AND SIDES WITH REED MEN—MUCH COMMENT CAUSED BY HIS UNEXPLAINED ACTION.

[Special to the Tribune.]

WASHINGTON, May 18.

The House is willing to abide by the decision of the Ways and Means Committee on the subject of reciprocity.

Speaker REED, Chairman DINGLEY, and the committee are in favor of shelving all bills of this character, and the protectionists of the House do not see it that way.

At the last meeting of the Ways and Means Committee the question of reporting any kind of a reciprocity bill this session was quickly disposed of.

By a vote of 6 to 4—all Republicans—the matter was laid over. HOPKINS, chairman of the subcommittee, refused to vote for any kind of a report unless upon his bill. When the final question was put, TAWNEY of Minnesota, STEELE of Indiana, EVANS of Kentucky, and RUSSELL of Connecticut voted to report some kind of a bill without delay.

They were opposed by Chairman DINGLEY, General GROSVENOR, PAYNE, DALZELL, DOLLIVER, and HOPKINS, with JOHNSON, who favored a report, absent.

SURPRISED AT GROSVENOR.

General GROSVENOR'S vote was depended upon for a support, and it would have been sufficient. Last week he informed Representative KERR, of the Mansfield district, that he would cheerfully support his bill.

But to the surprise of all, General GROSVENOR at the last moment lined up with the Reed faction.

[Laughter and applause.]

His action has occasioned a vast deal of comment, for it is yet unexplained. As the manager of the McKinley movement in Washington he was thought to be the last man who would vote to prevent legislation along McKinley lines.

[Laughter.]

True, there is grave doubt whether any kind of a reciprocity measure could be put through in the few remaining days of this session, and it is possible, as REED contends, that business might be unsettled somewhat.

But the friends of McKinley are disappointed in the action of the committee, because they desired to show the people that they were willing to enact legislation that would promote better trade relations with foreign countries.

ASKING A REPORT.

Representative KERR refused to accept the action of the committee as final. To-day he passed a petition through the House asking that some kind of a report, not necessarily on his bill, be made on reciprocity. It was readily signed. Perhaps to-morrow he will present it to the Ways and Means Committee.

Under the Reed system it has become necessary to petition committees for reports, but despite the prejudicial action of the Ways and Means Committee, the Ohio members remain undaunted, and hope to get the Kerr bill, or one similar, up for consideration before adjournment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not very often weary this House with comments upon matters of this character; and if there was no charge here other than that I had "lined up with the Reed men"—— [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. That is so serious that you must explain.

Mr. GROSVENOR (continuing). I would try to stand that; and now I do not know that I could be found in any better company [loud applause]; but left to my own choice I would select a different location for myself just at this time.

But this is a matter of some serious importance, Mr. Speaker, and I propose to refer to it. The gentleman who made this report has doubtless been grossly imposed upon by somebody; and it is not the first time that publications of this character, from various sources, have found their way into public prints, for the purpose, apparently, of disparaging the Ways and Means Committee and impressing upon the country that somehow or other there was a great contest going on here between various and different factions of the Republican party. Now, in the first place, as to how much of truth there is in this article: This special was written, apparently, on the 18th day of May, which was Monday, and a reference was made to a meeting of the Ways and Means Committee at which this subject was discussed.

In the first place, there has been no meeting of the Ways and Means Committee of the character spoken of here. There was no meeting of the Ways and Means Committee, and the statement, therefore, is without foundation in fact, or any justification in the records of the committee itself. There was a conference of the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee for a proper and special purpose, and I may as well state, and I am sure that the gentlemen on the committee will not criticise it, that it was for the purpose of hearing the report which was to be presented from the subcommittee on reciprocity, of which the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is chairman. That report was submitted and gone over with great care, and approved with absolute unanimity by every Republican member of the committee.

Mr. FARIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. There is so much confusion behind us that we can not hear.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The whole history of the subject and the development of reciprocity was discussed in the report; and, at the end of the reading and practical adoption of the report, there was some discussion about whether it was wise to report some measure other than the report itself and of the feasibility or probability of a resolution declaring the unalterable purpose of the Republican party to carry to ultimate triumph the great doctrine of reciprocity, which is a doctrine of the Republican party. [Applause.] There was no difference of opinion among the gentlemen present——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I raise the point that this is not a question of privilege. I do not think the gentleman has stated a question of privilege.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think if the gentleman had read the paragraph he would not have made that point. There is a charge here that a member of this House pledged his vote for a certain matter and was relied upon for the passage of it, and then changed his vote to the other side and defeated it. That is a charge of dishonor in the conduct of a member of Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I withdraw the point, if that is the point.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will address myself right along that line. There was a discussion—I have been thrown off the exact language I was using—as to whether it was wise to bring in more than a report or a resolution. I heard no word of Mr. KERR'S bill, and no word was said. If there was anything said it was in general terms in regard to all the bills relating to reciprocity. Then a proposition was made to report the third section of the McKinley law and present it here in the House, and a very distinguished member of that committee, to whose opinion I always give very great weight, suggested that under the circumstances, and in view of the present tariff law, the third section of the McKinley Act would not be applicable, could not be made to fit, as it were, and the reason suggested was a very simple one.

At the time of the enactment of the McKinley law sugar was put on the free list, as were all the articles that were included in the reciprocal terms of that act. Sugar is now on the dutiable list, and the suggestion was that there would have to be a reconstruction of the tariff law in order to make that section applicable. Then the question came up whether at this time, near the close of the session, we would undertake to pass a tariff law. There was some talk upon that line, and possibly some expression of opinion, and I do not hesitate to say that I expressed my opinion in opposition to the attempt to pass the third section of the McKinley Act at this time, and I take the responsibility for that without any regard to where I am "lining up"—whether I am lining up with one faction or with another faction, if there are any factions. It was my deliberate judgment that the announcement which we are going to make of the policy of the Republican party was the ultimate result that could grow out of the legislation of this Congress at this time. I do not know how other gentlemen expressed their opinions. I do not remember that there was a formal vote. There may have been a formal expression of opinion, but if there was it related to the third section of the McKinley law, and did not relate to the milling act embodied in Mr. KERR'S bill or any other bill.

Pending that, this same insidious course has been pursued, and at the convention of millers on yesterday in the city of Cleveland this same misinformation was sent to them, that one faction of the Republican Ways and Means Committee had opposed reciprocity in the interest of the millers. Therefore it is that I stand here to state more explicitly than I ordinarily would the inside history (as we sometimes say) of the conference that was had at that informal meeting of members of the Ways and Means Committee. Nothing final was concluded. The report had to be rewritten in some particulars, revised in some respects, and then it was to be submitted to the full committee in the usual way, and every question of reporting a bill—either the Hopkins bill, which is the most comprehensive and far-reaching of the reciprocity bills, and which would embody and carry with it the Kerr bill and all the other bills—every question of that kind was left open, to be decided hereafter when the ultimate action of the committee upon this report should be had; and so it stands now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can have permission, if the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM] will permit me, to save the time of the House, I desire unanimous consent to print with my remarks a statement sent out a few days ago by the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. DINGLEY, relating to this very question, making plain to the country the action of the Ways and Means Committee, making plain to the country the reasons why we have done what we have done and why we have not done some things that it was thought in some quarters we ought to have done. I ask consent to embody the statement of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be permitted to print the statement to which he refers in connection with his remarks.

Mr. KEM. I object, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM].

Mr. GROSVENOR. A man ought to know what is futile and what is not futile. I send the statement to the desk and ask to have it read in my time.

The statement was read, as follows:

Chairman DINGLEY of the Ways and Means Committee, in reply to an inquiry as to whether the committee has not been in receipt of many requests from Western millers for legislation looking to an immediate renewal of the reciprocity agreements with countries of this continent which were ended by the tariff act of 1894, said:

"We have had many such requests, just as we have had urgent requests from those interested in almost every industry in the United States for legislation to restore the protective duties repealed by the same act. Those requests show how seriously the industries of this country were injured by the tariff act of 1894, and how urgent the people are to undo the great mistake they made in 1892 in voting to place the Democratic party in complete power under their pledge to overthrow protection in order (as they claimed) to benefit the country.

"But, of course, everyone familiar with legislative work understands that there can be no repeal of the tariff act of 1894 until both the Senate and the President shall become Republican, so as to act in unison with the Republican House.

"Conscious of this fact, the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, as soon as they were appointed late in December last, unanimously concurred in the view that it would be useless for the Republicans to attempt to frame and pass through the House at this session a general tariff bill, including the reciprocity provisions, which are necessarily part of a tariff bill or any tariff legislation looking mainly to a restoration of protective conditions on anything, because the Democrats and the Populists, who have 1 majority in the Senate, would not vote for a general tariff bill or tariff legislation framed on thorough protective lines, and the Democratic President would not approve it. Moreover, any bill restoring full protection as to one industry, whether reciprocal or not, would be open to tariff amendments in behalf of other interests.

"In view of the immediate and pressing necessity of more revenue to meet current expenses and maturing liabilities, instead of occupying months in making an attempt to pass through the House a bill to generally revise the tariff as a mere indication of Republican purposes, the Republican majority of the Ways and Means Committee promptly framed a simple exigency tariff measure to continue only for two years and a half on a basis looking principally to obtaining at once forty million more revenue, in the hope that, notwithstanding the effect of the bill would be to materially aid the farmers by placing some duties on wool and all other industries to some extent by increasing temporarily the duties on competing imports 15 per cent, yet that it would be patriotically accepted by the Senate and the President in order to avoid the necessity of issuing bonds in time of peace to pay current expenses.

"We were disappointed in this hope, as every Democrat and Populist Senator, comprising 1 majority of the Senate, refused even to consider the measure. Five so-called silver Republican Senators joined the Democrats and Populists in refusing to consider the bill, giving notice that they would support no bill looking in any way to protection unless it should be accompanied with free-silver legislation.

"In this situation it was obviously useless to talk of any tariff and reciprocity legislation at this session. Hundreds of interests each asked that the Committee on Ways and Means would report and pass through the House some tariff bill to relieve its distress, but of course such an action was impracticable. Indeed, if one such bill had been reported every other industry would have had friends to offer amendments on the ground that no one industry was entitled to preference.

"Of course it is impossible to legislate for reciprocity arrangements except as a part of tariff legislation, because the articles to be used in such arrangements and the duties to be imposed should be indicated by Congress, even if we had a Republican President, and much more so when Mr. Cleveland is President. With the Senate and President hostile to protective legislation any action by the House in that direction would be useless and probably troublesome in the future.

"There have been some suggestions that a bill might be passed clothing the President with power to meet what is regarded as discriminating legislation by foreign countries against American flour. The authority the President now has under the act of August 30, 1890, goes as far as any one would care to place discretion in the hands of President Cleveland. That act authorizes the President to prohibit the importation of such articles as he thinks proper when coming from a country which in his judgment unjustly discriminates against any American product.

"The Committee on Ways and Means has investigated the workings of reciprocity agreements made under the tariff act of 1890, and will present a report showing the benefits of such reciprocity, and declaring (unanimously, as far as the Republicans are concerned) for a return to reciprocity and protection as soon as the people shall elect a Republican Senate and President to cooperate with a Republican House. This seems to be all that is practicable until the Republicans secure the President, as well as the Senate."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, so far as my own position in this matter is concerned, I have no fear. I have been recognized, ever since I was old enough to vote, as a Republican and in favor of the protective-tariff system. I have not felt that it was my duty to constantly rise in my place and shout that I was a protectionist, because everybody knew I was a protectionist. And now a single additional proposition and I am through. I have not been informed, so as to make any impression upon my mind, that there have been factions in the Ways and Means Committee, or in the general Republican membership of the House of Representatives, upon any of these questions. In the very earliest days of this session it was decided without dissent in the Ways and Means Committee that the Dingley bill should be passed and sent to the Senate as a tentative measure in the interest of upholding the Treasury and protecting the credit of the Government.

Mr. DINGLEY. So far as the Republican members were concerned.

Mr. GROSVENOR. So far as the Republican members were concerned; and, so far as the Republican members were concerned, there were no two opinions in the Ways and Means Committee upon that question. Whatever was right about it, or whatever was wrong about it, I take my share of the responsibility irrespective of the action of any other man or any other set of men, and I stand by it now.

Mr. DINGLEY. Neither was there any difference of opinion among the Republicans of the House. Every Republican member voted solidly in favor of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was just going to say that when it came into the House it was passed without dissent. Nobody waived his views upon the subject of the protective tariff in voting for that bill; nobody undertook to modify the platforms or the declarations of the Republican party; but in a spirit of patriotism we passed the act and inaugurated an effort to secure relief to the bankrupt Treasury of the country. Since that time, if there have been any factions I have not heard of them. I have differed upon questions of policy with some of the members of the committee and of the House, but there have been no lines drawn; the points of difference, if any existed, are immaterial, and I would not, if it had not been put in plain print, have even referred to it.

I have never understood that the Speaker of this House has attempted in any manner to influence the Ways and Means Committee upon any one of these questions, nor have I understood that he has attempted to invade the independence of any other man; and I would scorn to admit that I belonged to the American Congress if it was composed of a body of men without manhood enough to assert their personal independence on this floor, but would be compelled to follow the dictates of anybody or any set of men on the floor or elsewhere. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in factions in politics. There should be no factions in politics. The Republican party of the country is charged with the duty of rising above factions, of rising above partisanship, in an effort to improve the condition of affairs and to save the country from bankruptcy and a ruined Treasury, from a debased currency and overthrown credit, and to restore confidence and prosperity to the country in every feature. [Applause.]

I therefore condemn this article as having misrepresented myself in particular, as having misrepresented the Ways and Means Committee wholly and absolutely, and as having sent out to the country the idea that the Speaker of this House had formed factions within this body and was undertaking to dictate the legislation of the House of Representatives. When you believe that, you believe in the degradation, the absolute degradation, of every member of the Ways and Means Committee. When you publish such a statement as that, you publish to the world the assertion that the gentlemen composing that committee have not the manhood demanded of an American Congressman or of an American statesman. And I denounce the publication from that standpoint.

Now a word as to the young man who made the publication. He has doubtless been misled by somebody, or has misinterpreted the statement he got. And doubtless with zeal overstepping the bounds of discretion he made the publication that he ought not to have made. And I have said what I have said, first, for my own protection; second, in defense of the gentlemen with whom I am associated; third, in defense of the honor and the integrity of the House of Representatives, and fourth, in order that the country may not believe that there are such things as factions here, which for personal ends or for the purpose of rewarding friends or otherwise undertake to control legislation on the floor of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

VETOED BILL—FRANCIS E. HOOVER.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for present consideration the veto message of the President on the bill (H. R. 1094) granting a pension to Francis E. Hoover. I desire that the bill shall be read first and then the veto message of the President accompanying it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls, at the rate of $50 per month, the name of Francis E. Hoover, late a private of Company I of the Sixty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Infantry Volunteers, in lieu of the pension now being drawn by him.

The veto message was read at length.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Now I desire to have read the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions on this message.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman have the original report also read?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I have no objection to its being read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope it will be read, inasmuch as it has been referred to in the veto message.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I ask first the reading of the report on the message.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will permit me, I would suggest that he have the original report read first and then the report on the message, so that we can have the case stated in consecutive order.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I have not in my possession the original report, but I have no objection to its reading. I ask the reading of the final report by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States vetoing House bill No. 1094, entitled "An act granting a pension to Francis E. Hoover," submit the following as a result of its investigation:

The President justifies his veto of this measure upon the ground that the present unfortunate condition of this soldier is not due to his army service, and that such legislation is an unfair discrimination against many thousand worthy soldiers similarly situated.

Your committee, after a most patient and thorough consideration of the reasons urged by the President for withholding his signature to this bill, are clearly of the opinion that the justification urged is wholly untenable.

Legislation of this character is by no means new. It is found in the records of every Congress from the organization of the Government to the present time, and since the close of the war similar acts are quite frequent.

There is no constitutional inhibition on the power of Congress to grant pensions by special bills, nor is it essential that the disability for which the pension is granted should be of service origin. We could cite many precedents where special pensions have been granted and approved by the Executive without reference to the origin of the disability.

The pensions granted to our distinguished generals and their widows by special acts of Congress are not always based upon disabilities directly traceable to the military service of the soldier. In many of these cases the disability or death of the soldier can not be shown to have resulted from his army service, yet none of these measures have encountered the Executive veto.

Under these circumstances we can not conclude that the passage of this bill is an unjust discrimination against thousands of deserving soldiers, but to refuse to grant relief in this case, in our opinion, would be an unwarranted discrimination against the private.

If we are to follow the rule laid down in this case by the President, Congress must turn a deaf ear to the appeal of every soldier, however pitiable and distressing his condition may be, regardless of the merit of his service or the privations he endured, unless he can show that his helpless and distressed condition is due to his army service. We can not yield our assent to this proposition. It is manifestly unjust to thousands of the truest and bravest soldiers in our Army.

The writer of this report has in mind one of these cases. The soldier was a strong, healthy, and robust young man, full 6 feet tall, and with an iron constitution in 1861. The firing upon Fort Sumter filled his young heart with patriotism, and he entered the service with five of his companions and continued therein until the surrender of Lee at Appomattox. During all that time he was in the front rank and participated in every battle in which his command was engaged. He never shirked a duty nor sought refuge in time of danger. He was always first to respond to a call for volunteers to perform some deed of daring or heroism. He was never in a hospital except to visit some sick or wounded comrade during all of his service. He walked every step from Atlanta to the sea, and from the sea back through the Carolinas to Washington. He was first in line at the bugle's call, ready to march when the command was given. In sunshine and storm he kept his place and followed where duty led; whether wading swamps or climbing mountains it was all the same to him. He slept in the mud and rain, and, in fact, endured all the hardships and privations of a soldier's life without a murmur.

When the war was over he returned to his home apparently free from disease and disabilities. Fifteen years later the hardships and exposures to which he had been subjected commenced to manifest themselves, and were evidenced by his bent form and feeble step. When exposed to damp or cold weather, excruciating pains coursed down his back and spine. He was at a loss to account for these unless they were due to an injury received while assisting to recapture a cannon at Lookout Mountain, where he was thrown violently upon the ground and the wheel of the caisson passed over the small of his back. He remembered that his injury caused him much pain in his back and spine for many days after receiving it, and that these pains would occasionally return when exposed to the wet and cold, but never supposed that the injury was serious or that it was calculated to follow him through life.

As time passed on these pains became more frequent and persistent, rendering it difficult at times to perform manual labor on his farm. Finally, in 1887, he was visited with a slight stroke of paralysis, rendering further manual labor impossible and confining him to his bed for weeks at a time.

In his distressed condition he applied for a pension and sought to show that his spinal affection was due to the injury received at Lookout Mountain; but where was he to obtain the proofs? One of his five companions was killed at Atlanta, another died in Andersonville, the third was reported missing at Resaca and never returned. The remaining two returned home with him. One of these soon died of a wound received while on the march to the sea, while the most diligent search failed to reveal the whereabouts of the other, and it is possible he also is dead. After endeavoring for years to furnish the required testimony he was at last forced to make his application under the act of 1890, and was soon granted a pension at $12 per month.

His diseases progressed until now he is as helpless as a babe, and requires a constant attendant day and night; his means are all exhausted, and this small pension and the charity of neighbors is all that stands between him and starvation. In his wretched condition he confesses his inability to show that his disability is due to his long and arduous service in the Army, while he knows that it can be traced to no other source, and he also appeals to that Government he offered his life to save to protect him and his family from the poorhouse, and your committee, on behalf of that Government, answers "It will," while the President, if he adheres to the rule enunciated, must answer "No."

We can not but express the hope that the President, on a more thorough consideration of this matter, will reach the conclusion irresistibly forced upon your committee, that it is not always essential to trace the disability to army service as a prerequisite to granting a pension. We also find ourselves unable to agree with the President that the granting of a pension of $50 a month to Mr. Hoover is an unjust discrimination against many thousand deserving soldiers similarly situated. Cases of this character must be rare, indeed, and we doubt very much if one can be found equaling it in all of its distressing details.

With our knowledge of and intimate relations with the old soldiers of this country and their sense of justice, we feel warranted in saying that when made familiar with the conditions and circumstances surrounding this unfortunate comrade that not one of them can be found that will feel that the granting of this pension is any discrimination against him. When this bill was presented to us in the first instance, the testimony offered was directed in the main to the distressed condition of the soldier and his honorable service, and we did not deem it essential that the proof should show his disability due to his army service to justify us in granting relief, nor do we think so now; but inasmuch as the evidence then offered did not establish to a certainty the connection between the soldier's service and his disability, we concluded that we were fully warranted by many precedents in recommending the passage of the bill at $50 per month under the circumstances of his case. Had this connection been shown to our satisfaction our recommendation would have been $72 a month.

Since filing our first report much additional testimony has been submitted, and a reexamination of the case convinces us that the soldier's disability is fairly traceable to his army service, and that he is therefore justly entitled to $72 per month.

Francis E. Hoover, the claimant, enlisted in Company I, Sixty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, in February, 1864, when he was but 16 years of age. Without being acclimated or in any way inured to the hardships of a soldier's life, he was at once put into active service with General Sherman, and participated in the battles and skirmishes of that vigorous campaign resulting in the capture of Atlanta. After General Sherman had started on his march to the sea the claimant's regiment was ordered to support General Thomas. Mr. Hoover was with his regiment on that tiresome and perilous march back to Nashville. He participated in the battles of Spring Hill and Franklin, and then in the two days' struggle with Hood at Nashville. He joined in that active pursuit of the remnant of Hood's army, and as a result of his extreme hardships and exertion varicose veins appeared in both of his legs. This condition gave rise to distressing ulcerations. After these ulcers were healed they would remain in that condition but a short time, when they would again break out in festering sores. This has continued at intervals ever since his army service. How much of the poison from these festering sores passed into the circulation and was absorbed into the system it is quite difficult to tell; but that much of this did take place is evident from the fact that the ulcers when once healed would not remain so, but would break out again, with equal, if not greater, violence.

It also appears from the statements of the physicians who have examined him that the legs are badly swollen and discolored. They also tell us that structural changes have taken place in the articulation of the joints. This would hardly have been looked for if the blood current had been pure. Had there been no other complications it is quite evident that this disease alone would have ultimately rendered the soldier helpless, and perhaps ere this. But in 1886 he was attacked with rheumatism, from which he never recovered. There were periods of partial relief from the effects of this disease, but there were recurrences of the attack, and each time with greater severity. About four years ago this disease assumed a permanent and most distressing form. Every joint in the body became ankylosed. He can not now move hand or foot. He has no use of any of the joints of the body. The spinal column has become perfectly rigid, and there is no power of rotation of the head—it is permanently fixed in one position. He can not turn himself in his bed, and would perish with hunger with victuals all around him. A more distressing condition can not be imagined. How much of this rheumatic condition is due to the ulceration of his legs we are not fully prepared to say; but should it be assumed that his rheumatism is an independent disease, having no connection with the ulcerations, still we are thoroughly convinced that a system so weakened and debilitated by ulcerations, and whose blood current had been contaminated by poisons absorbed from these festering sores, was in a poor condition to resist the attacks of disease, especially one of such prostrating persistence as rheumatism. Dr. Hoopingarner, a reputable and eminent physician of Elkhart, Ind., who, after examining the soldier and making himself acquainted with the history of his case, makes the following statement under oath:

"There can be no doubt, at least to my mind, that the causative factor to this diseased condition, heumatoid arthritis, is to be traced and placed to the exposure incident to military life; the damp ground upon which he slept, the poor food, the mental strain and excitement produced a poor condition of body, which in after years was unable to resist the ravages of disease, and in this broken-down condition of body this essentially chronic disease found an easy victim."

This statement is corroborated by four other physicians residing in Elkhart. The proof abundantly shows that the soldier has always been an upright man and addicted to no vicious habits. Neither has he exposed himself to any influences calculated to produce these diseases, and we are at a loss to account for them unless they resulted from the fatigues and exposures incident to a soldier's life.

With the evidence now before us we think, as we have before stated, that the present disabilities of this soldier are fairly attributable to his army service. We find him in a most pitiable condition, utterly helpless, requiring the attendance of a strong man. He is entirely destitute of all worldly means, and has no income aside from the small pittance of $12 per month. This will not support him, much less pay his necessary attendant. All hope of recovery is gone. He has suffered and must continue to suffer untold tortures until death relieves him. He gave the best days of his vigorous youth to his country, and out of his helplessness he asks us for bread and support. If Congress does not give relief he must go to the poorhouse and there end his days. Your committee can never assent to this, so long as there is a dollar in the Treasury. We feel that this unfortunate soldier has claims upon his country to which Congress ought not to turn a deaf ear. We therefore earnestly recommend that the bill do pass, the President's veto to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] kindly yields that the original report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions may be read, so that the whole case may be before the House.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I have no objection to that.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand this to be the report on which the President rested his veto.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEELE. The President had before him the other papers in the case, in addition to the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The soldier served one year, nine months, and nine days in Company I, Sixty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged from the service. Nothing appears of record derogatory to his character as a soldier. He was pensioned at the rate of $8 per month for rheumatism from August 25, 1890. This pension was increased to $12 in 1893. The testimony does not show the disease of the soldier to be of service origin. During the past two years this soldier has been bedridden, absolutely unable to assist himself, requiring the constant assistance of an attendant. He can not be moved without suffering the most excruciating pain from head to foot, with no hope of recovery.

On account of the terrible suffering of this soldier and the necessity for constant assistance, taken in connection with his poverty, your committee believe the case is one calling for the special intervention of Congress. If the soldier's disease was of service origin he would undoubtedly be entitled to $72 per month under the law, and his case is so extraordinary your committee believe that he should receive said sum. It therefore reports the bill back with the recommendation that it do pass, with the following amendment: Strike out the word "seventy-two," in line 5, and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was first presented to the Committee on Invalid Pensions it was proposed to pay a pension of $72 per month to Mr. Hoover. The testimony offered at that time in support of the measure was confined in the main to the helpless and pitiable condition of the soldier and his honorable service. With reference to the origin of the disease the testimony was quite meager; and the committee, following many precedents and concluding that the testimony failed to show conclusively that the disability of the soldier was directly due to his army service, recommended the passage of the bill with an amendment fixing the pension at $50 a month. In that form the bill was recommended by our committee and subsequently passed. The President bases his veto upon the ground that the disability of the soldier was not due to his army service, and that its passage would be an unjust discrimination against hundreds and thousands of deserving soldiers similarly situated. Now, I apprehend that there is not to be found in the United States a case parallel to this—not one; and therefore I am not persuaded that the granting of this pension would be an unjust discrimination against any other soldier.

Then, again, the records of every Congress from the organization of this Government to this day contain precedents for legislation of this character. There is no constitutional or other limitation, so far as I know, upon the power of Congress to grant pensions. Nor is it essential in such cases that the disability be directly traced to the army service of the soldier. In cases of this kind the whole matter is left to the good judgment and sound sense of Congress itself. The power thus confided to Congress has been exercised, as I have just remarked, all along the line from the organization of this Government to the present day, and was never called in question until this message of the President was sent to the House—never.

Let me invite your attention, Mr. Speaker, to a few cases, not with the view of criticising Congress or anyone else for the passage of the measures to which I am about to refer, but as sustaining my contention. Who will contend for a moment that the death of Ulysses S. Grant was directly traceable to his army service? Was any claim of that kind made? A similar question might be asked with reference to General Logan and numbers of other distinguished generals of the late war. In nine cases out of ten when pension bills on behalf of our distinguished generals or their widows were passed no claim was made that the soldier had died of diseases contracted in the service or that his disability was traceable to service origin. The matter was left to the sound judgment of Congress; and those pensions were granted because of the patriotic services of those distinguished officers, not because they had contracted disabilities in the service of the United States.

This message presents an important question to this Congress; and if it should be sustained it places upon the power of Congress a limitation that has never existed prior to this time. The limitation sought to be applied here is a direct thrust at the private soldier, and imposes upon him burdens not imposed upon the officer. If the private soldier must trace his disability to his army service, why not the general or his widow? Need I say, Mr. Speaker, that a precedent of this kind is manifestly unjust to some of the bravest and best soldiers this country ever saw? It not unfrequently happens that such a soldier is unable to prove that his disability is directly traceable to his army service. It most frequently happens that the man who has a good hospital record is able to trace his disability to the service rather than the man who was every day upon the field in the performance of his duty.

Is it to be said that Congress shall be limited in its power to grant pensions to deserving soldiers because, through the peculiar circumstances of the case perhaps, the soldier may be unable to prove that his disability originated in the service? If that is to be the rule, I repeat, it is a limitation that has never existed heretofore. So far as this case is concerned, it matters but little; but as a precedent it is of the highest importance to the soldiers of the United States.

When this message of the President pointing out his objections to this bill reached our committee, we concluded that we would reexamine the case for the purpose of ascertaining, if possible, whether this soldier's disability was traceable directly to his army service. We secured a large amount of testimony that had not previously been filed before us——

A MEMBER. Some of it had been filed with the Senate.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes; a large amount of testimony that was filed in the Senate had not been placed before us. There was also testimony in the Pension Office that had been accessible to us all the while, but we had not deemed it necessary to go into its examination. But on receipt of this message and on reexamining the case we went over all this testimony. We took that on file in the Pension Office and that on file with the Senate Committee on Pensions, and also the additional testimony which had reached our committee by that time. As a result of this reexamination we are able to say beyond any sort of controversy that this soldier's deplorable condition is directly traceable to his army service.

But I want to be distinctly understood that we are not conceding for one moment that it is necessary as a prerequisite to granting a pension to this man that this fact should be shown. It is a matter within the sound discretion of Congress and does not depend upon proof showing the disability due to the soldier's army service. And although we have reexamined this case for the purpose of satisfying ourselves and the country that this man's disability is directly due to his army service, we are here protesting that that is not essential to the power of Congress to grant a pension.

Why, Mr. Speaker, we passed a general act in 1890, perhaps one of the most liberal pension bills to be found upon the statute books of any country in the civilized world. That bill does not equalize the services of all of the soldiers, but it simply permits each man to draw $12 a month under certain conditions. One man under that bill may be able to receive $12 per month whose disabilities are insignificant in proportion to the disabilities of another soldier. Is it to be said that because we passed this bill we thereby placed a limitation on the power of Congress to take up a deserving case of extreme hardship and treat it specially? That would seem to be true if the precedent established by this message is to be enforced in the future. We contend that the Congress of the United States in its power may take up any individval case of any soldier, whether a general or a private, or of the widow of a general or a private, look into the hardships of the case, into the military service of the soldier, and grant such relief as we, in our judgment, think proper. It is not the province of the President of the United States to place a limitation upon that power. It is not an injustice to hundreds and thousands of other soldiers. Why, take this pitiable case, if you please. Here is a man on his back, with his hand in a sling the principal part of the time. He is absolutely unable to move hand or foot or finger, and would starve to death with victuals all around his bed. He served but a year and nine months, and yet there are men who served three, four, and five years. Is it to be said under these circumstances that Congress can not step in and administer relief in this extraordinary case simply because it will not or can not place every man upon the rolls at the same identical rate? I do not believe that proposition at all. It is always in the power of Congress itself, and I do not believe that the Congress of the United States will sit idly by and tamely submit to the limitation upon its power that must follow if this message becomes a precedent in the future. I believe that Congress should exert its power, and that its members should exert that power conferred upon them, and determine by their vote to-day in passing upon this message whether or not an extra constitutional limitation shall be placed upon the power of Congress.

I appeal to the members of this House to stand up and insist upon the principle that Congress has the power to determine the amount that shall be paid to any poor, unfortunate soldier, and they may do that regardless of whether they make the bill general or special. [Applause.] One man may serve in the army three years and suffer no serious disability. Another man may serve two days and two nights and receive a disability that must follow him all through life. Consequently, are you able to even this matter up in a general bill? It is utterly and absolutely impossible. We should meet all of these general cases by a general bill, but the extraordinary cases must be met by special legislation; and I am unable to understand upon what principle the President of the United States can approve of a pension to a widow of a general, where it is not contended that the soldier's death is due or attributable to his army service, and at the same time deny us the right to give this poor Indiana private $50 a month. The truth is that this man should have $72 a month under the general law. There is no doubt about it, under the testimony that is submitted to our committee.

Under the testimony submitted when we made our first report he would not have received that sum under the general law, but the committee, exercising that power heretofore always exercised, recommended the passage of the bill at $50 a month, $22 less than the rate which the soldier would be entitled to receive in case he could have established that fact.

But the strong point I wish to urge here upon this House is that there is no limitation on the power of Congress in granting pensions, and that this message, if it becomes a precedent, will fix a limitation not known to the Constitution or to the law, and will deprive Congress of the power to administer relief and justice in hundreds, yea, thousands, of deserving cases that can not be reached in any other way. I therefore hope that this House will vote solidly to pass this bill for this poor soldier, the veto of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, the only information accessible to the President when he received this bill was the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and such evidence as was on file in the Pension Bureau. I have caused an abstract to be made of the evidence there, and I send that to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Francis E. Hoover, Company I, Sixty-fourth Ohio Infantry. Certificate No. 668308.]

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

This claimant filed a declaration under the act of June 27, 1890, on the 25th of August, 1890, alleging chronic rheumatism and disease of kidneys. The War Department reports that he enlisted in the above-named organization February 24, 1864, and was discharged December 3, 1865.

He was examined by the board of surgeons of Salem, Oreg., May 13, 1891, which reported a rating of five-eighteenths ($5) for "rheumatic disability." It will be observed that the rate recommended by the board was less than the minimum rate allowed under the act of June 27, 1890, yet the claim was allowed and certificate issued October 7, 1891, at the rate of $8 per month from August 25, 1890, date of filing application.

He filed a claim, under the same act, for increase September 24, 1892, in which he alleged chronic rheumatism and varicose ulcers due to varicose veins.

In an affidavit filed November 13, 1893, he states: "I became aware that I had varicose veins in 1891, and that these ulcers were caused from them, but the ulcers date back to December, 1864. When the first one appeared I was not then aware that it was caused from varicose veins, as physicians now inform me."

He was examined under this application February 27, 1893, by the board of surgeons at Goshen, Ind., which reported a rate of eight-eighteenths for rheumatism and seventeen-eighteenths for varicose veins and results, yet the board states in that report that the claimant "is three-fourths disabled from manual labor." Notwithstanding this the claim for increase was allowed and certificate issued January 23, 1894, at the liberal rate of $12 per month (maximum under the act of June 27, 1890, for total disability) from February 22, 1893, the date of the examination, for rheumatism and varicose veins and resulting ulcers.

The claimant never filed an application under the general law, and has never stated whether the disabilities for which he is pensioned are due to and caused by his military service.

Mr. ERDMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, in the report filed by the committee it is expressly stated that the disease is not of service origin. The testimony on file in the Pension Bureau corroborates that, and the applicant never believed that he had any just cause and never made any application for a pension under the general law. It is simply idle and silly to attempt to do what is attempted in the second report filed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, viz, to set up the plea that the disease is owing to service origin, or that his present condition is attributable to it in any way.

There are more than the usual absurdities of a plea of confession and avoidance in the second report of the committee.

I yield such time as he may want to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I opposed this case in Committee of the Whole when it was up for consideration, and did so upon the report presented by the committee; assuming, of course, that the committee when it takes nothing but ex parte testimony would present to the body that has to pass upon their labors at least as good a case as they could make out. Now, the committee at that time stated emphatically in their report:

The testimony does not show the disease of the soldier to be of service origin.

Upon that testimony this House acted. Now, then, if this House is to assume the position that was assumed by the adoption of this report in the granting of this pension, permit me to say to you in all candor that it is a species of special legislation that will not receive the commendation, in my mind, of the sober second thought of the American people. There are in this country hundreds and thousands of men who were in the service who are to-day totally incapacitated from performing any species of labor. If one man who is now disabled is entitled to a pension of $50 or $72 a month, then they all are. Let me show you what a special system you are here seeking to promote. It has been stated upon the floor of this House that there have been introduced so far something over 3,000 pension bills, during this session of six months; thirty or forty of them have become law, and at the time this Congress shall close possibly a hundred will have become law. At that time I assume there will have been introduced at least 10,000 cases for special pensions; and I base that estimate on the rate they are coming into the Halls of Congress to-day; because the action of this body has invited every man in the country who was in the service to come to Congress and apply for a special pension. You pension some because there is an imaginary connection between their disability and their service; you pension others because of special meritorious services, and there is not a case presented here that some special argument is not urged in its behalf.

I do not appear here as the special advocate of the President. There are very few questions upon which we agree; and I regret, with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KIRKPATRICK], that the President has seen fit in all cases so far presented to veto only the pensions of private soldiers. I believe that every case that has passed Congress giving an increase of pension to the widow of an officer, or an increased pension to an officer himself, should have received the veto of the President; but we are urged in the case of officers, and it is urged upon all sides, that we must recognize the extraordinarily meritorious services they have rendered the country, because they occupied positions as general officers.

I differ with the House in that position, because a general officer was paid a salary commensurate with the extraordinary services he rendered his country—from $5,000 to $7,500 a year. They gave their talent, they gave their time, they gave all they had; and so did you and I, sir, who served in the ranks and received but $16 a month. [Applause.] We gave all we had to give to this country; and there should be no distinction.

Perhaps if the facts presented by the committee in this subsequent report were true this case might receive my approval; but the gentleman in drawing this report has shown that he has an imaginative mind that would surpass that of Don Quixote. On the top of page 2 the gentleman says:

The writer of this report has in mind one of these cases. The soldier was a strong, healthy, and robust young man, full 6 feet tall, and with an iron constitution in 1861. The firing upon Fort Sumter filled his young heart with patriotism, and he entered the service with five of his companions.

[Applause.]

Subsequently he talks about "marching through the mud from Atlanta to the sea, and from there up through the Carolinas." I thought when I read this report the gentleman was talking about Francis E. Hoover, but when I got down to Francis E. Hoover, at the bottom of page 3, I found that he enlisted in February, 1864, and never could have marched through this mud from Atlanta to the sea, because the gentleman says that he went back to Nashville; and false in part might perhaps be assumed to be false in whole. But I will say here, Mr. Speaker, that if the report now presented had been made when the case was first presented to this House I should, perhaps, have given it my approval; but the President acted upon the report of the committee, and could not have gotten information beyond the evidence in the Pension Office.

There is not a line or a scrap that goes to show that this soldier's present disability is the result of his service. To illustrate that point, this man never applied for a pension under any of the prior acts. He never applied for a pension until after the act of 1890, which is prima facie evidence that his present condition is not the result of his service. The President took the evidence before him. He said, as I would say and as others would say even on the eve of a great political campaign, that it is not right, that it is not proper, that it is not becoming the representatives of the great American people to pick out a particular case, present ex parte testimony, and give the soldier a pension of $50 a month. If the position which the gentleman assumes in his subsequent report is correct; if he has abundance of testimony to show that the present disability of this man is the result of his service, then I say it is unbecoming for him to try to pass this bill over the President's veto. What he ought to do is to bring before this Congress a bill pensioning this soldier at $72 a month, the amount to which, in his present condition, he would be entitled if the gentleman's position is correct.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I know how members of Congress feel on pension cases. I know that in 1888 we made all that could be made out of the poor soldier. I know that we vilified, and I might say falsified, and made all we could out of the pension record of Grover Cleveland, but in 1892 evidently the sober second thought of the American people did not condemn that record, at least not to a sufficient extent to defeat him in his campaign for reelection. I believe, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that the sober second thought of every man here will conclude that the position of the President in this case is right, whatever it may be or may have been in some other cases. He reviewed the testimony before him and came to the conclusion, as I believe, as any fair-minded man must do, that this was a case of special pernicious legislation; and let me add, as I have already said, our pension legislation here has done more to debauch the sentiment of the American people than the action taken upon any other questions that have come before Congress.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, the question in regard to this veto message presents very fairly the issue that is made by the President with the Congress. The question is, Whether we shall apply one rule of evidence to a private soldier and to his widow, and another to an officer of high rank and to the widow of such an officer; whether in the one case we shall require proof of disability from army service, and in the other case shall exempt the applicant from that requirement. That is the question, and it is upon that which I desire the attention of the House for a few moments.

Let me say in the outset that I do not agree entirely with the report of the committee that has been filed in the case of this veto. I think the President was entitled to have the case as it was made up in Congress and to pass upon it as it was presented to him. I think that any subsequent evidence which went before the committee ought not to have any weight with the House on this occasion, and I therefore address myself to the condition as it existed when the bill was reported by the committee and as it was when passed by this House. It has been said that an officer is entitled to a pension of larger amount than the private soldier, and is entitled to have that pension upon less proof, on account of his distinguished service. That is the issue which is made here. The President so far has vetoed no bill granting or increasing pensions to officers of high rank or to their widows, although the evidence failed to show death or disease as results of army service. Pension vetoes seem only to be the portion of the soldiers and officers of the line.

This soldier, Francis E. Hoover, enlisted at the age of 16 years. Something has been said to the effect that he did not enter the service early in the war, but evidently he got into the Army as early as he could be admitted. He was in the memorable campaign in middle Tennessee in 1864, which resulted—the only instance in the history of the struggle from 1861 to 1865—in the destruction of a Confederate army in a pitched battle. There have been a great many criticisms upon the generalship of that campaign. On the eve of the battle of Franklin there was crimination and recrimination between the Confederate commander and his lieutenants, Pat Cleburne, the Stonewall of the Western Confederate army, went out of that stormy council into the fiery charge and to his death; but I ask you who has ever criticised the soldierly conduct of either the Union or the Confederate private soldiers on that bloody field?

There has been criticism of the whole campaign that led up to the siege and battle of Nashville. The Confederate commander has been criticised. The Union commander—that sturdy Virginia patriot and incomparable soldier, George H. Thomas—was on the point of being relieved. He was criticised and misunderstood by the country; misunderstood by the silent commander of the Army; misunderstood by the President—understood only by the privates of the Army of the Cumberland, who always trusted in him. There has been much military criticism upon that entire campaign. It has been claimed that the stand should have been made at Pulaski, or at Columbia, or at Franklin, rather than at Nashville. But who has ever criticised the soldierly conduct of the privates of that army; of the cavalrymen who charged and carried breastworks and forts, or even of that black line—men with black faces, but white souls—who charged up Overton's Hill and left their dead and wounded thickly strewn along the slope?

There has been criticism as to the following up of the Confederate army after that battle. One officer of considerable rank made a mistake and sent the pontoons on another road; but who has ever criticised the energy or persistence of the private soldiers who bore a part in that relentless pursuit? In that campaign and in those battles was Francis E. Hoover. He fought by day and he marched by night. At Pulaski, at Columbia, at Spring Hill, at Franklin, at Nashville, he was in the fight, he was in the pursuit. Through mud and rain and sleet and storm he marched and did his duty. There is not a record of dishonorable conduct against him. What is his condition to-day? Helpless—more helpless than an infant. If water were within arm's length of him he might perish from thirst, because he could not carry the goblet to his lips. If food were placed in his hands he might die of starvation, because the arms that once supported his country's flag and carried the musket in its defense are no longer under the control of his will and could not carry the food to his mouth.

I can think of nothing more helpless than the condition of this soldier as disclosed by the evidence which came before the committee, unless it was the condition of his own country early in 1861, when there were foes without the capital and foes within. The country was affected then with a more deadly disease than paralysis. Our Navy—where was it? Our Treasury—where was the money that ought to have been there? What was the condition of our Army then? Loyalty among the privates; treason among the officers of high rank. And then the country in its weakness, its utter helplessness, reached out and leaned upon such men as Francis E. Hoover. It leaned upon their strength, and they gathered to its support. They saved its life. But now that country is strong and vigorous and powerful; and Francis E. Hoover turns his heart and his eyes toward it—he can not turn his helpless body—and asks for relief in his utter want and destitution. He asks the President of the United States—shall I say it?—he asks the Commander-in-Chief of the Army in which he once valiantly and honorably served, for relief; and he is told that while the officer who made mistakes shall be exempted from proving disabilities of service origin, a private of honorable record, who made no mistakes, shall be required to prove the pathological connection between the disease of his army service and his present condition, and that he shall make out his case beyond the possibility of a doubt and to a moral certainty.

Mr. Speaker, something has been said about other similar cases, and it has been urged that to grant relief to this soldier would be an unjust discrimination against others. Sir, so far as the duty of this House in the present hour is concerned there is only one case, and that is the case of Francis E. Hoover. We ought to pension him for the same reason that we have pensioned generals and the widows of generals—on the ground of previous honorable service and present absolute helplessness, destitution, and want.

It may not be very long, Mr. Speaker, before the Republic will have occasion to summon again its young men into the ranks of its armies. It is a good thing at this time to show that the nation is not ungrateful to its private soldiers. If there were but $50 in the Treasury the best investment that could be made of that money would be to draw it out and pay the first month's pension to Francis E. Hoover under this act, which I hope will soon become a law, "the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding." [Loud applause.]

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I hope now that gentlemen on the other side will use some time.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York obtained the floor.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Well, Mr. Speaker, as there seems to be nobody desiring to talk further, I will move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] has been recognized.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The gentleman will excuse me; I did not observe it.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have learned for the first time that I am a negative quantity in this body, for the gentleman from Kansas has just told us, upon my rising, that he had noticed that no one else wished to be heard on this bill.

Mr. HARDY. He did not know that you wanted to be heard.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that the question before the House is whether this veto message of the President of the United States in reference to this particular measure is proper or not. There is no question as to our sympathy with the men who fought and won in the late civil war. There would seem to me to be no occasion for eloquent or patriotic addresses such as that to which we have just listened from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WOOD]. There would seem to me to be no occasion for the reading of a report such as that which was framed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KIRKPATRICK]. That report in favor of this bill contains two or three pages referring to some hypothetical case, some case radically different from the case now under consideration.

This bill, providing for the granting of pension or additional pension to Francis E. Hoover, was passed on one of those Fridays in April last when the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] obtained control of this body, when all debate was silenced, when the gag rule was applied, and pension bill after pension bill was forced through this House without any consideration. If gentlemen will look at the RECORD of April 3, 1896, they will find that no debate was allowed on this bill and that it was passed under the operation of the previous question.

Now, let that be the general rule which obtains in reference to pension bills. You of the majority here are all-powerful; and if the distinguished Committee on Rules—for the ability of whose members I have the highest respect and esteem—if that distinguished committee sees fit at any time to grant the prayer of the gentleman from South Dakota you can have one day or two days or three days devoted entirely to the consideration of these pension bills. But the next time that you bring in a rule do not give us ten minutes for debate; do not give us five minutes for debate; do not give us one minute for the consideration of any pension bill, but let the previous question be considered as ordered at once, and let each and every pension bill be passed without regard to its merit.

Let me for a moment or two call your attention to the existing legislation, or the present system of legislation, which obtains with reference to pensions. We have the general pension law, which is all right, under which some eighty-one or eighty-two millions of dollars a year are paid out of the national Treasury; we have the dependent pension act of 1890, under which some sixty-one millions are paid annually; and in addition to these general laws we have passed during the present session a law for the benefit of the bounty jumpers, the deserters, and for the benefit of the ex-confederates—a general law which requires some six or seven millions more per annum for its payment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let the House understand exactly your pension legislation. While you may gain in the main a few votes from the soldiers, the ex-soldiers, or the veterans, you will find if you persist in the enactment of this extravagant legislation united against you all the toilers and wage earners of this nation. The people at large are perfectly willing that you should pay full and adequate pensions. They have never objected to that. They are perfectly willing that a sum such as that advocated by General Garfield in the years past should be paid to the veterans of the war; and you will remember that General Garfield said, if I mistake not away back in 1872 or 1874, that he thought we had then reached the high-water mark of pension appropriations; and unless in the future there were wanton and extravagant pension legislation there would be no greater sum appropriated than the sum appropriated at that time.

But, in addition to the general pension law to which I have already referred, we have the act of June 27, 1890, known as the dependent pension act, and the iniquitous act of the present session, which is known as the Pickler bill. We have thousands of private pension bills to which the attention of the House is drawn from day to day. The minority is powerless to check the passage of any one of these private pension bills, however iniquitous it may be in scope, in intent, or in operation; and it is only at long intervals that our attention is called to some particularly objectionable measure by the fact that the Chief Magistrate of this nation has exercised his veto power in reference to it.

Now, gentlemen, I say that I believe the veto of this particular bill, granting a pension to Francis E. Hoover, is an admirable act. I believe it to be a most praiseworthy act on the part of the President of the United States, and I, gentlemen, have failed ever to read any messsge of Grover Cleveland on a pension bill which has not been able and honest and praiseworthy, and in the best interests of the people of this country—the veterans or the non-veterans—and for the due and proper administration of the pension laws.

There is no question, gentlemen, before you to-day as to the power of the President to veto a bill, or as to the power of Congress to pass a special pension bill. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] misapprehends in toto the situation. It is conceded that Congress has the power to pass these pension bills, however pernicious they may be. It is conceded, on the other hand, that the President of the United States has, under the Federal Constitution, the power to veto a bill not only in cases where he thinks the Congress of the United States has proceeded ultra vires, or has transcended its powers, but in other cases where he considers the legislation, for any cause whatever, to be unwise or improper; and in the case under consideration the question is, Is the legislation wise? Is this a proper bill for you, all-powerful gentlemen of the majority, to impose on the people of the United States? No matter to what extent you may go in your approval of existing law in reference to pensions, I ask you to pause and hesitate before you vote to override the veto of the President of the United States in reference to this particular measure.

In June, 1890, when the dependent pension act was passed, what was said virtually to the people of this country at that time? "Give us this dependent pension act with a limit fixed at a certain amount," and you know that the greatest limit of pension that can be granted under that act is $12 per month. If a man is suffering to such an extent as to be incapacitated from earning a livelihood either by mental or physical disease, under the act of June 27, 1890, he can receive a pension of $12 per month and no more. Now, if you pass this bill over the veto you will virtually enlarge the scope—the entire scope—of the dependent pension act of June 27, 1890.

If you give this soldier $50 or $72 a month—and you might just as well vote him $72 as $50 a month—on the theory that he is incapacitated to such a degree as would entitle him to $50 a month had the disease been of service origin, you will open the door so that every man in the like situation, so that every man suffering from disease admitted not to be of service origin, can come in and demand a pension of $50 or $72 a month.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Certainly.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will not every solitary special act pensioning a soldier set a precedent, to be followed by everybody, just as much as this, and hence will not your argument apply to every special act just as well as to this?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, that is a question somewhat broad, and I shall endeavor to answer the gentleman on some future occasion; but I do not think it does apply to other special bills to the same extent that it applies to this particular measure.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes.

Mr. PICKLER. How can you defend the President's veto on principle when his position is directly contrary to the act of 1890, by which we pension soldiers not for disability incurred in the service, but for disability wherever incurred? All that we have done in this case and all that we claim is that instead of this man getting $12 a month he should have more. Now, how can you sustain the veto when we are acting on that very line and upholding every principle of the law of 1890?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I consider that this is in contravention of the spirit and of the language of the law of 1890.

Mr. PICKLER. The law of 1890 is for disabilities, no difference where incurred. Now, even if it should be conceded that this man did not get these disabilities in the Army, still he has the disability and he is helpless. Now, how does it violate the principle of the law of 1890?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The law of 1890 fixes a certain limit. The idea is that the pension system under the act of 1890 has been extended further, by the Congress of the United States, than in any other country in the world at any period of history. The principle established in the act of 1890, the promise held out to the people of this country on June 27, 1890, was, "If you will give these men who fought in the war a certain sum when the disability was not incurred in the line of duty, we shall be content with that. If you will give us $8 or $12 as the maximum, we pledge ourselves to ask no more of the Congress of the United States." And Senator DAVIS, who had that bill in charge in the Senate, stated that the maximum expense or cost to be imposed upon the taxpayers of the United States would be only $35,000,000 per annum. Was that promise kept? It is true that in the debate it was enlarged to forty-one or forty-two million dollars. Has that promise been kept? Do you not all know that to-day it costs the people of this country some sixty-one or sixty-two million dollars per annum to pay the pensions under the act of June 27, 1890?

Mr. PICKLER. Now, I know the gentleman is a humanitarian. I put it to him now, what would he do in a case of this kind, with this old soldier in this helpless condition, when the question is before us as to whether we shall give him more than $12 a month or send him to the poorhouse? The gentleman is certainly not in favor of sending this old soldier to the poorhouse, is he?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am always very glad to listen to the gentleman from South Dakota, and I shall always endeavor to treat him with the courtesy and amenity which sometimes is absent from his treatment of me.

Mr. PICKLER. Not intentionally.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I am never in favor of sending any soldier to the poorhouse; but I say that, in these exceptional circumstances, let the man's own State provide for him. Do not call upon the Federal Congress, not to make law, but to break law, in favor of one individual.

Mr. PICKLER. He came to this condition by defending and upholding the Federal Government. Why should it not sustain him, when he helped to save it?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman from South Dakota for five or six questions, provided they are all strung together, but it is impossible for me to address this House and to have these constant interruptions.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Dakota has said that this disability was occasioned because this man fought in the war. Now, if that be so, the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions is incorrect; because in their first report they say that the disability was not of service origin. You are all well aware that if the wound had been received or the disease incurred in the service, in the line of duty, then, if all these facts stated as to the disease and the condition of the man be true, all that he would be required to do in order to receive $72 a month would be to file his application with the Commissioner of Pensions.

It must be taken as a conceded or admitted fact that the disease under which this man is now alleged to be suffering is due entirely to something outside and apart from his service in the civil war, and it is for that reason that I say that the veto message of the President of the United States should be upheld by all fair-minded men on either side of this House. I am very sorry that any man should be in the condition in which it is alleged that Francis E. Hoover is in to-day, but because a man is suffering from illness is it any part of the duty of the Congress of the United States to vote away, not your money, gentlemen, or my money, but the money which is wrung from the people at large by taxation? And unless you use your power properly and justly, unless you are wise in your disposition of these pension bills, the time will shortly come when the people of the United States will rise in their power and express their disapproval of careless or negligent or wanton pension legislation.

What does the President of the United States say to us in reference to this particular measure? He says:

> The value of pension legislation depends as much upon fairness and justice in its administration as it does upon its liberality and generosity.

Now, I am in favor of being liberal and generous only in the cases where we should be liberal and generous, and I do not believe in unjust discriminations. I do not believe in passing such a bill as this which has been vetoed by the President of the United States and in establishing dangerous precedents for all time to come. You will have not this one applicant coming in here on ex parte affidavits and hastily conceived evidence and asking for a pension of $50 a month, but you will have hundreds and thousands of men who served ninety days coming in and asking for, say, $50 to $72 a month, on the theory that they would be entitled to such an amount if they had incurred the disability in the service in the line of duty. There must be, gentlemen, some logical distinction. There must be some distinction, in common fairness, between the man who was wounded on the field of battle or incurred disease in the active service of his country in the line of duty and the man who served but ninety days and never left his native town, and came out of the war unharmed and uninjured. Consider for one moment the dangerous practical operation of the act of 1890. Reflect on the fact that in one Ohio regiment 495 pensions are now being drawn under the dependent act of 1890, while that regiment never left the town in which it was recruited, and was in the service but a few months; and there are many other cases like the cases of the members of that Ohio regiment.

So it would seem to me, gentlemen, that whatever your views may be of general pension legislation and of special pension legislation, in this particular case the veto of the President of the United States should be sustained. He gives us his reasons in terse and happily selected language. He says:

It seems to me [it] would result in an unfair discrimination as against many thousand worthy soldiers similarly situated, and would invite applications which, while difficult to refuse in the face of such a precedent, must certainly lead to the breaking down of all the limitations and restrictions provided by our laws regulating pensions.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORSE. I would like to ask my friend from New York a question. He argues against this case, as I understand him, on the ground that it is favoritism and special legislation?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORSE. Now, would the gentleman vote for a general law to cover cases like this, of total disability—would he vote for a general law to cover all such cases throughout the country giving a substantial increase under the act of 1890?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the question propounded by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts. If a man were totally disabled by a wound which had been received in the service in line of duty, I should be willing to vote to increase the sum of $72 now allowed to $100, or a sum larger than $100. If a man has lost an arm, or a leg, or an eye in the service, or has been in any way wounded or maimed, I should gladly vote for an amendment to the general law increasing the amount which should be allowed to the soldier; and I know no one who will go further than I in according the meed of praise and the amount of justice or bounty, whichever you may please to term it, to the men who were wounded or incurred disease or disability in the service in the line of duty. I do not think you can do too much for those men. But here we have another line of cases. Here we have a class of men in reference to whom it is admitted that their disabilities were not incurred in the service in line of duty, but that, as in this case, they arose at some subsequent period in the man's life, probably ten, or fifteen, or twenty years after the close of the civil war.

Now, in reference to these men, the soldiers who served for ninety days and who have filed, or are entitled to file, applications under the act of June 27, 1890, they have received, in the sixty-one million or sixty-two million dollars which we now pay them, all that we ought to pay them in view of our duty to the people of this country at large, the taxpayers, the wage earners, the toilers of this land. But if you wish to enlarge the scope and operation of the dependent pension act of 1890, bring in an amendment to that act, bring in a general bill and let us debate it here. Perchance you will pass it. You have the power, and I dare say that you would all vote for it, and pass it; but in that case you would not be subject to the same criticism to which you will be subjected if you pass this bill over the President's veto, because this is special legislation, because this is discriminating in favor of one individual by passing a measure which can apply to no other man in the same class.

Mr. Speaker, should our views of general legislation be hampered or controlled by the fact that we have passed one bill which might be cited against us as a dangerous precedent? I have the greatest sympathy for this soldier, but I say that, in view of all the facts of the case—and I say it in all temperance and in a spirit of moderation—in view of all the facts of the case it seems to me that we ought not to override the veto of the President of the United States.

Mr. MORSE. Then, Mr. Speaker, if I understand the distinguished gentleman from New York, his position is——

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. WILLIS], and after that I will ask for a vote.

Mr. MORSE. The gentleman from New York yielded to me for a question. If I understand the position of the gentleman, he is willing to vote to increase the pensions of soldiers who were wounded in the service in the line of duty, but he is not willing to increase the pension of any soldier who incurred a disability, even though it be as great as the disability in this case, if it was not incurred in the Army in the line of duty. That I understand to be the gentleman's position.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is necessary for me to issue a manifesto to-day as to what I propose to do in reference to pension legislation in the future. I state with perfect frankness that I am opposed to the passage of any such bill as this, and that I am against overriding the veto of the President of the United States by passing this bill granting a pension to Francis E. Hoover.

Mr. PICKLER. If this House sustains the President's veto, then it lays down the principle that the House of Representatives can not increase any soldier's pension above the amount allowed by the general law. Now, we can not afford to take that position.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, it pains me to differ with the gentleman from South Dakota, who always couches his statements in such moderate and modest language. The mere statement of a proposition by the gentleman from South Dakota carries conviction. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. Not with the gentleman from New York. I am an utter failure in that quarter. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not concede that the position taken by the gentleman from South Dakota is sound. If we sustain the veto of the President with reference to this particular case, we do not lay down any rule as to what we shall do in future when a general proposition on this subject is brought before us. We do not commit ourselves at all as to that. We simply say that this special discrimination is improper. We say that we ought not to pass this particular bill and that this bill having been vetoed for proper reasons, we ought not to override the veto of the President of the United States.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the gentleman in charge of this bill will move the previous question. The Labor Committee has had this day assigned for the consideration of its business and this is delaying that business.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I am under a promise to the gentleman from Delaware to yield him ten minutes before I move the previous question.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I shall probably occupy eight minutes of that time, and the other two minutes I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD] to present to this House the opinion of ex-Governor Chauncey F. Black with regard to the veto power. I must say that I join hands with the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] with regard to the immortality which the distinguished gentleman who occupies the Executive Mansion seems to be earning for himself as he sits in the quiet and splendid seclusion which he so much enjoys and vetoes these little pension bills in which are involved the peace and the comfort and the lives of men who risked all that they had and all that they knew in defense of their country in the hour of its peril. Here is the case of a boy who, before his beard had time to grow, enlisted in the army and followed Sherman from Nashville to Atlanta and fought in every battle throughout that memorable campaign for the upholding of that flag and the preservation of the principles of this Government to which the gentleman from New York so felicitously refers in many instances.

Now, at the very meridian of his life—poor and sick and helpless—he comes here and asks us to overstep the rigid limitations of the pension laws and allow him enough to make him comfortable through the few remaining months that he may have on these sublunary shores. And lo and behold! the great man who occupies the chief office at the head of the nation has found out—digging down through a great mountain of business, perhaps—has found out that in connection with this particular bill no special evidence has presented itself that the disability with which this man is dying can be definitely and circumstantially traced as having originated in the military service.

I say, sir, with what little knowledge I have of the Constitution and the history of its adoption, that the veto power was never intended to be applied to a case like that; that it is an abuse and degradation of the veto power to apply it to a case of this sort. [Applause.] It is something like a reassertion of that idea that came from the President of the United States when he said he had "Congress on his hands," to come here and in the face of the overwhelming majority by which this bill was passed send us this veto. I congratulate him on having so noble a defender and so successful an advocate as the gentleman from New York. It occurs to me that their minds are cast somewhat in the same mold, and I do not want the gentleman from New York to consider himself in a great degree complimented by that remark either. [Laughter.] But in considering the various subterfuges that have been resorted to under the name of "arguments" and the excuses that have been made for opposing these pension bills, I was especially struck with the remarks of the gentleman from New York in his speech against the pension bill which was before the House a week or two ago. After mauling this House for a good solemn hour with his platitudes on that subject, he treated us to a little extract from the immortal words of Fitz-Greene Halleck. He quoted for us Marco Bozzaris, and this was the excuse he made for not helping these men in the last hours of their earthly strife. He said they had their compensation, and he recited the lines—

> But to the hero, when his sword
> Has won the battle for the free,
> Thy voice sounds like a prophet's word;
> And in its hollow tones are heard
> The thanks of millions yet to be.

That was the gentleman's excuse for not supporting pension legislation. He intended to comfort these poor fellows with "the thanks of millions yet to be." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MORSE. They could not get any bread and butter in that way.

Mr. WILLIS. I wish he had commenced with that beautiful stanza preceding the one which he quoted:

Come to the bridal chamber, Death!
Come to the mother, when she feels,
For the first time, her firstborn's breath;
Come when the blessed seals
That close the pestilence are broke,
And crowded cities wail its stroke;
Come in consumption's ghastly form,
The earthquake shock, the ocean storm;
Come when the heart beats high and warm,
With banquet song, and dance, and wine;
And thou art terrible—the tear,
The groan, the knell, the pall, the bier,
And all we know, or dream, or fear
Of agony are thine.

Yes, sir; here is a woman in the loneliness of her widowhood, facing death in its most solemn and aggravated form, her hungry children around her. What would the gentleman do, as indicated in the very apt and beautiful quotation that he used on that occasion? He would clothe the orphan with "the thanks of millions yet to be"! He would comfort the broken-hearted widow with "the thanks of millions yet to be"! He would shed a light in that deserted household with "the thanks of millions yet to be"! He would stand by the bedside of this poor fellow who is ready to go to the poorhouse, sick and hungry, and he would tell him that the soldier has something else to console him, for in the "hollow tones" of death are heard "the thanks of millions yet to be"! [Loud laughter and applause.]

Now, sir, I congratulate Grover Cleveland and the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] on the unity of spirit which they manifest in a case like this. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I now call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, "Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass this bill?" on which, as required by the Constitution, the yeas and nays will be taken.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 196, nays 47, not voting 112; as follows:

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. MEYER.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. [Applause.]

LABOR COMMISSION.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the special order assigning this day for the consideration of a bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6119) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collect information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, the House will now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill H. R. 6119.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania begins I would suggest if it is not possible that we might be able to make some arrangement by which there would be an extension of time allowed for debate. Under the rule the debate must terminate on the bill at 4 o'clock. An unexpected debate on a veto message has consumed all of the time allowed for the consideration of this bill excepting one hour and seven minutes.

This is one of the most important matters; it is a very expensive commission, one of the most expensive that has been authorized for years past, the salaries for which alone amount to over a hundred thousand dollars, and we ought to be able to make some arrangement to have adequate time for the discussion of the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that that could not be done in Committee of the Whole. We are now acting under an order of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. I beg pardon. I had not observed that the House had resolved itself into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to state for the information of the gentleman, and for the House, that every effort has been tried to induce a member of the House to waive objection to unanimous consent in this matter, but he declines to do so. There is no hope, therefore, in the direction of unanimous consent. It is the intention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to consume a few minutes only in explaining the bill, then ask the committee to rise and go back into the House for the purpose of securing an order to limit the debate to a very short time so that we may have the consideration of amendments and a vote upon them with as little delay as possible, and I hope that arrangement will be accepted by the members of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. Anything looking to an adequate consideration of the matter I will heartily concur in. I have no desire to consume any time, but it is a question of so much importance that there ought to be some method by which we could secure an adequate extension of the time allowed for debate.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House is designed to better our industrial system. No demand of the people in any age has met with such general response as the demand for a better industrial and social organization of society.

No sentiment has attracted such widespread attention or has had such rapid growth. Our Government is republican; and to be effectual and durable it must have proper regard for all departments of human activity. Legislation must have just respect for the wage earner and for the wage payer, for the producer and consumer. This Government can not endure if more than one-half of its people are discontented, distressed, and suffering, for it is a Government of all and by all.

Mr. Chairman, this bill calls attention to the fundamental principle of our Government—the equality of man—and seeks a more equitable distribution of the burdens and benefits of our free Government. While it is not the function of the State to guarantee individual happiness, it is its function to guarantee each individual the right to pursue happiness, and so enact laws that one class may not be compelled of necessity to work solely for another class, regardless of their personal comfort and improvement. Rights do not belong to one class and duties to another. Physical, intellectual, and moral ability can not be made equal, but each capacity may be met; each cup, be it large or small, may be filled. Circumstances can not be made equal, but law can be adapted to circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, the danger to this Government is not external, but internal. In the progress of human society the battles of the world are shifting from conflict with nations to a conflict within nations for better government and more equitable laws. We must recognize the fact that more are now peacefully organized and enlisted in the cause of industrial equity than in all the armies of the world. The people of civilized nations will not always continue to fight for national honor and supremacy while their individual rights are not protected within the nation. National glory must henceforth be based more and more upon the prosperity and happiness of the individual citizen. After more than six thousand years of experience the people are beginning to learn that government belongs to them; that they are not owned by the government, but that they own the government, and that it must respect their rights by meeting their just demands.

If laws are derived from the governed, they should meet the just demands of all the governed. This nation took the most advanced stand in civilization, and is the best prepared to meet the industrial issues of to-day by building on the foundation it laid more than one hundred years ago by conforming law to its declared principles of right, freedom, and equality, and thus organize our social and industrial system upon a more just and equitable basis than has yet obtained in the world.

Mr. Chairman, in entering upon the discussion of the subject-matter of this bill I wish to make three observations in regard to man, which are stated in the first chapters of Genesis.

First, the unity of the race and equality of man was shown in creation; God created man and gave him dominion as man. He was to "subdue the earth," and "have dominion over the fish of the sea, over the fowls of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." But he was not given dominion over his fellow-man.

Second, before God created man it was said: "And there was not a man to till the ground."

In the third place, man was told by the Creator: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground." To all, therefore, who believe in the Bible account of creation, which I believe is also in strict accord with science, fact, and history, these three things are indisputable:

First. That when God created man, he gave him dominion as man, not over his fellow-man, but over beast and bird and fish; over all animate nature below him.

Second. That he was to till the soil as his chief occupation.

Third. That his life was to be sustained by labor.

All this agrees with reason; shows equality in creation; that sustenance comes from the ground; that labor is the normal condition of man; and it is a fact that no man enters into rest unless it is upon his own labor or the labor of others. The government, therefore, that does not strive to meet these three great cardinal principles of reason and revelation in the highest possible degree will perish from the earth.

Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the appointment of a non-partisan commission, to be composed of five members representatives of labor, five representatives of agriculture, five of manufacturing, and five of business and professions. The importance of labor to our being and well-being can not be overstated. Labor is one of the foundation principles upon which organized society rests. All kinds of labor is necessary, from digging in the ditch to measuring space and counting the stars, yet the lower forms of labor are more intimately connected with our existence and needs. The most despised is often the most useful. The man who digs the foundation is more important to the structure than he who frescoes its walls. Without the grading of the roadbed there would be no stockholders, no locomotive, or railroad president. If all manual labor were to stop, if all wage earners were to cease work, there would be no value in property and a large part of the race would perish.

That our relations are most intimately bound up with the wage earner is shown by the many strikes and lockouts in recent years which have entailed great suffering and loss of property, as well as the sacrifice of life.

I submit a summary from Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, on the subject of strikes and lockouts from January 1, 1881, to June 30, 1894, being a period of thirteen and a half years. For this period it will be seen that there were 14,390 strikes; that there were 69,167 establishments involved; that there were 3,794,406 employees thrown out of employment.

It will be also seen that the loss to strikers was	$163,807,866
For the same period in lockouts the loss to employees was	26,685,516
Assistance to strikers by labor organizations	10,914,406
Assistance in lockouts	2,524,298
Total loss to employees	203,932,076
Loss to employers for the same period by reason of strikes	82,590,386
Loss to employers for the same period by reason of lockouts	12,235,451
Total loss to employers	94,825,837
Total loss to both employees and employers	298,757,913

These figures represent the actual loss to the parties engaged, and do not represent the enormous loss which incidentally came to the community by reason of such disturbances; but the injury to society, the demoralization, suffering, and death, can not be estimated. All admit that something must be done, and a commission composed of those directly interested in this great labor problem, in my judgment, is the proper means through which to seek the cause of this violent disturbance and propose a remedy, as our legislative bodies are not meeting the issue. Again, Mr. Chairman, the agricultural industry is the most important of all industries. All civilized life depends upon the products of the soil. All food and clothing come from the soil; yet this most important industry is greatly depressed. The constant settling in the value of farm products and farm lands in recent years in a large portion of the United States has made great discontent and unrest among farmers. Many of them can not hope to have their children succeed them in husbandry, and they are exhausting their limited means to fit them for pursuits in the crowded town or city.

In 1870 the value of farm lands in the United States was	$9,262,803,861
In the same year the total value of all property in the United States was	30,068,000,000

The value of farm lands was, therefore, about 33 per cent of the value of all property.

In 1880 the value of farm lands in the United States was	$10,197,096,776
In the same year the total value of all property in the United States was	43,600,000,000

The value of farm lands was, therefore, only about 24 per cent of the value of property in 1880.

In 1890 the value of farm lands in the United States was	$13,279,252,649
In the same year the total value of all property in the United States was	65,000,000,000

The value of farm lands was, therefore, only about 19 per cent of the value of property in this later period. Thus in twenty years the farm lands settled from 33 to 19 per cent as compared with the total value of all property, and this notwithstanding the opening up of millions of acres rich in soil.

These are startling figures when we consider that the value of farm lands is not increasing in due proportion to all other property; that agriculture is the foundation of all other industries, and that 40 per cent of the toiling people are engaged in tilling the soil.

No country can prosper when the agricultural interest is suffering. This commission is needed by the farmers not only because of these facts, but on account of their growing discontent as shown by their various organizations and protests against unequal burdens and discriminating laws. Even if the agriculturists had nothing of which to complain or to adjust, they are needed in such a conference as this to aid in seeking a way out of the manifold labor troubles which so vitally affect their interests as well as those of the whole population.

In regard to the importance of the manufacturing industry, I will state that in 1890 the number of persons 10 years of age and upward engaged in all occupations was	22,735,661
Of this number there were engaged in manufacturing	4,712,622
Of this number there were engaged in agriculture	8,303,000
The total wage receivers of all classes were	14,920,525
The number of manufacturing establishments in 1890 was	355,415
Capital employed was	$6,139,397,785
Total number of employees was	4,476,884
Total wages paid was	$2,283,516,529
Cost of materials used was	$5,162,044,076
Total value of manufactured products was	$9,372,437,283

It will be seen from this statement that of the 22,735,661 of all occupations 4,712,622 were engaged in manufacturing and mechanical industries. More people are engaged in this industry than in any other, with the exception of farming. The greatest per cent of actual loss by reason of strikes and lockouts comes to those engaged in manufacturing and their employees. Great good should ultimate to those engaged in this industry by wise consideration of the violent disturbances which so vitally affect all concerned.

This commission is designed also to benefit all other business pursuits and the professions. The disturbed condition of affairs has entailed great loss upon the business community. The loss of $298,757,913, as shown in table quoted, in thirteen and one-half years to the laborers and the employers of labor is but a fractional part of the loss sustained by transporters, merchants, and others engaged in business pursuits. Business men have and will continue to suffer great depreciations in value and increasing losses unless a better adjustment is made. Business men need and business interests require a just and more satisfactory settlement of differences with those with whom they deal and upon whose labor and products successful business must depend. The better labor is protected in all its rights the greater will be the security for earnings. No intelligent business man can oppose any just and fair effort to harmonize conflicting interests in a legal and peaceable way, for all such must know and see from the history of the recent past that the great industrial problem may shortly be met by violence if not worked out in peace by law.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is designed to give an impartial hearing to those who complain of discriminating laws and unequal burdens. It is expected that it will be composed of the ablest and best of each class named. It will bring into conference representative men of labor, agriculture, manufacturing, and business, thus bringing together the aggrieved and those against whom the grievance is made, whose duty it will be to consider the disturbing causes and recommend laws looking toward a more just distribution of the burdens and benefits of our free Government. It is designed to be impartial, nonpartisan, seeking exact facts and conditions, and to conform legislation to the foundation principles of our Government—to place all men on an equal footing before the law.

I believe such a commission the most practical way to meet the issue. Our national and State legislative bodies are not so constituted as to give proper time to the consideration of the industrial questions presented in this bill. They have not met and are not meeting them, as discord, strikes, and violence are constantly increasing. These bodies are not made up equally of representative men, such as are proposed by this bill; they are besieged by men lobbying for special privileges, while none are lobbying for the good of all. If, therefore, such representative men as are proposed—men who suffer most from the great conflict of interest—can not agree in recommending more equitable laws looking to a peaceful solution of the question involved, it can not be solved by a free government in a peaceful way.

Mr. Chairman, I believe Congress is the proper body to authorize the appointment of such a commission, as it is composed of members coming from all parts of every State. However jealous we may be of the rights of the States, no one can object to such a commission making recommendations to Congress and furnishing information to the States which may be of the greatest value.

Again, the commission could utilize a large amount of statistical information gathered at great cost by various agricultural and labor organizations, and especially could use to great advantage the information collected by the various labor committees appointed in recent years, both State and national, in our own country, and by other nations most advanced in civilization. The facts so ably compiled by the Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor for the United States, would be of incalculable value. This, together with the findings of similar commissions appointed by 32 of our different States, could be utilized. It would also have the benefit of the completed work of the English royal commission of labor, and also the progressing work of the higher council of labor established in France, and the higher council of labor appointed in Belgium. Not only would it have the benefit of all such recently accumulated facts, but it would be in position to study the best laws of civilization and the best thoughts of the age, and thus be able to recommend more equitable laws than now exist, looking to the solution of the most vital and pressing political and economic questions of the age.

Labor statistical bureaus are of recent origin, and were first established in the United States—the first one in Massachusetts in 1869. They have since been established in 32 of our States, The first Commissioner of Labor, the Hon. Carroll D. Wright, was appointed under the General Government in 1885. The English royal labor commission was appointed by royal warrant dated April 2, 1891, and was composed of 27 members. The fifth and final report of this commission was made to both Houses of Parliament in June, 1894. The German commission of labor statistics was appointed in 1891, and it consists of 14 members, 168 civil servants, and 84 assistants. The higher council of labor was established in France in 1891. It consists of 50 members, chosen from among manufacturers, workingmen, and persons well informed upon economics and social questions. The Belgians' higher council of labor was appointed in 1892. It consists of 48 members, chosen in equal numbers from workingmen, employers, and specialists in economic science. Both these latter are authorized to examine into and recommend legislation. These foreign commissions are cited as precedents and to show that civilized nations are progressing along the line of our declared principles of equality which are recalled by this bill.

Mr. Chairman, after referring to these foreign commissions I wish to state that some of the most important results in our own history have been accomplished through the instrumentality of commissions, notably among which was the production of the Constitution of the United States. On the 28th day of March, 1785, the joint commissioners of the States of Virginia and Maryland met at Mount Vernon, under the auspices of Washington. These commissioners prepared the terms of a compact between the two States for the jurisdiction over the waters of Chesapeake Bay and the rivers that were common to both States, and, conforming to the wishes of Washington, they requested Pennsylvania to grant the free use of the branches of the Ohio River within its limits for establishing the connection between that river and the Potomac. The preliminary object of the commission being fulfilled, they took up matters of general policy and recommended to the two States uniform duties on imports, a uniformity of commercial regulations, and a uniformity of currency. George Mason was charged with a report of their doings to the legislature of his State—Virginia.

In pursuance with this, the legislature of Virginia invited all the States to appoint commissioners to meet at Annapolis on the first Monday in September, 1786. This convention became the ground of hope of the nation. No State north of New York was represented or south of Delaware, save Virginia. It was a meeting of central States, and it resulted in calling a convention of all the States to meet at Philadelphia on the second Monday of May, 1787. The result of this convention of commissioners was the forming of the Constitution of the United States which saved and perpetuated the Union.

There was great disturbance and distress then, and Congress and the States were powerless to meet the situation. It should not, therefore, be forgotten that it was a commission, an advisory body and not a legislative one, that wrought this great change and perpetuated this Government.

Now, under the Constitution, as then, under the Articles of Confederation, neither Congress nor the State governments are meeting the disturbed condition of our new industrial environments, and the only road open to us now, as then, is through a commission, an advisory body.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Labor did not consider the commission too large to represent a continent such as ours, with its vast and varied industries. The difference in climate, the difference between plain and mountain, the difference between North and South, East and West, give rise to great industries in one section that are not well understood in another; all of which should have representative men serve on the commission. Even the number provided for will not represent all, but it is believed that it will have reasonable knowledge of all the great pursuits of our country, and will be in full sympathy with all, so as to hear and recommend for the greatest good of the greatest number. [Applause.]

Again, the Committee on Labor do not think the appropriation required by this bill too large to secure and compensate such representative men as it requires. While the Government is appropriating millions of dollars for internal improvements, for material development, for defense on land and sea, it should not hesitate to grant such a comparatively small sum to investigate the industrial questions and recommend some remedial legislation for its industrial classes to prevent violent disturbances which cause so many million dollars of loss to the people.

Mr. Chairman, the question is one of equality. The equality of man was shown in creation, affirmed in redemption, and first declared as the foundation of human government in this new world one hundred and twenty years ago. This is the greatest political question of the nation and of the world. The barbarous ages are passed, feudalism is gone, serfdom has been destroyed, and slavery has perished from the earth, but the question of equality has come to the front, and is pressing for solution with irresistible power.

The history of the world teaches that God holds nations responsible to the standard they set up. Our standard was the highest erected since the dawn of time, yet it must now be apparent that this nation has been as false to its declared principle of equality as it was to its declared principle of freedom. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, when this nation was founded and equality declared there were only 3,000,000 of inhabitants who owned this continent, capable of sustaining in comfort one-half of the inhabitants of the civilized globe; yet in a hundred years we have exploited it and distributed its land and wealth most unequally. We have wantonly destroyed many of its forests, its animals, fish, and birds, instead of utilizing them for the benefit of man, and are now trying to replace them. We have unequally divided the public domain; have been prodigal of land, giving it by the millions of acres for development. This waste fitly ended in a great scramble for the last public lands in Oklahoma, where the strong bore down the weak and the man with the swiftest horse took possession not in right, justice, or mercy, but by physical force and endurance.

Mr. Chairman, with a continent vast in extent, incomparably rich in soil and mineral, teeming with vegetable and animal life; with its mechanically multiplied labor forces, capable of sustaining hundreds of millions of inhabitants; and yet with only 65,000,000 there have been and are yet large numbers out of work, seeking employment and finding none; many needy, hungry, and poor; all this with granaries and storehouses full of all the commodities of life; yet millions of laborers can not earn and have no money to buy. We have thus recently presented the anomalous condition that in the time of the greatest abundance we have had the greatest want. This can only be accounted for upon the ground of unequal opportunities, unequal privileges, and unequal distribution.

We have been as brave and patriotic as any people; we have fought three foreign wars and the greatest civil war in recorded time; we have been as generous to forgive as we were brave in battle; yet in business we have been prodigal of our inheritance and unjust in its distribution.

Mr. Chairman, the massing of capital and labor which has been caused by the discovery and use of steam and electric power and invention of modern machinery has brought us to face a new industrial problem of the greatest magnitude. History furnishes us with no precedent or example for its solution. This age is one of concentration, corporation, and centralization. It is an age of organization; and if organized capital deals with labor it must expect to deal with organized labor. Organization on the one hand implies organization on the other, so that there may be two equal parties to the agreement, otherwise the first party would dictate and the other submit. Ours is the contract system. While this is the best order of society that has yet obtained in the world yet men will not continue to contract as freemen while believing that they must submit as slaves.

There must be two parties to the contract.

Industrial corporations largely control the production and exchange of this continent. Massed capital and massed labor are largely controlling production, manufactures, and transportation, the very sources of supply and demand upon which all depend. These are now so frequently in conflict that all the relations of life are being disturbed. Society has rights which must be respected by both these contending forces, and its good order and peace demand a settlement which should be equitable, just, and durable. [Applause.]

Again, this centralization of capital and labor has produced a world-wide war of competition in which labor suffers, fortunes are wrecked, and homes are destroyed. Honorable competition is considered the life of trade, but the weapons which are more and more being used are cruel; they are reduction of wages and adulteration and counterfeiting. Low bids are made to secure large contracts, with no other hope to meet them than by the reduction in wages, and labor has lost in all these battles. Another weapon in this competitive battle is adulteration. This occurs in medicine, food, and raiment. There are adulterations and counterfeiting in all we eat, drink, and wear, thus endangering health, comfort, and life. While we have adequate laws to punish the counterfeiting of money, the more dangerous and damaging counterfeiting of the commodities of life goes unpunished. If passing pewter for silver or brass for gold is punished, the other should be more severely punished. The first means only loss in value, the latter means loss in value and endangers health and life. Dishonest men engaged in the war for gain grow rich in selling counterfeit commodities, while many honest competitors fail and their fortunes are wrecked.

Mr. Chairman, the war of competition, as now waged, instead of being the life of trade, too frequently means the death of one of the contending parties or a combination in which the people lose. Property won by fair competition or honest toil will be respected; but won by special privileges, unjust competition, or fraud in adulteration can not be respected, and the time is fast approaching when such methods of acquisition will not be tolerated. The holder of such property can not atone in acts of charity, returning in part to the few that which he has wrongfully taken from the many. [Applause.] Philanthropy is one of the noblest traits of man; but it should be expended in teaching, in lifting up the race, in caring for the disabled, the suffering, and the helpless. All that others require is an equal chance in the race of life, with none to hinder and none to handicap. They require justice, not charity. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it is most apparent that our laws have in no sense kept pace with the new discoveries, inventions, and developments of the age. The world has made more advancement in physical development and scientific discovery in the last one hundred years than it did in the preceding six thousand. While the founders of this Republic declared new principles, yet the laws they adopted were largely taken from a monarchy, and belonged to a darker age, when labor was oppressed, had no voice in the Government, and had not even the right of organization. We thus put our "new wine into old bottles," and they are bursting.

We say, "Government exists for the people," yet we adopted the laws of those who say that "the people exist for the government." New conditions confront us on every hand, in the concentration of capital and organized labor, in new improvements, in the instruments of husbandry, in the mode of manufacturing, transportation, travel, and communication. All these have been revolutionized within a generation. We have been offering premiums for inventions, discovery, and development, for labor-saving machines and devices of all kinds, until we have changed the whole order of industrial pursuits, of production and distribution. While we have had thousands inventing and discovering, we have offered no premiums for talent or energy; have had no men studying these new conditions and adjusting laws to our new environments; hence there is friction, discontent, and violence, destroying peace, property, and life.

Max Müller has stated that the word mankind is not found in human language before Christ. There was nothing in language to express the kinship of the race. It was Mede, Persian, Grecian, Roman, bond and free. But since the human race has learned its kinship and the word mankind has expressed this relation—this brotherhood—the laws of society must more and more recognize the obligations and rights growing out of this relation. Our Government is one government, our body politic being one body; when, therefore, any "one member suffers, all members suffer with it." When a number of the members of the human body suffer, and are not speedily healed, the body dies; so eventually will the body politic die if many members suffer. By not caring for others, we injure ourselves, as, for example, poverty and the want of sanitary conditions breed physical disease. This is true in a community, in a nation, and in the world. Even the world is bound together by ties of humanity which may not be disregarded without injury. Pestilence follows famine. This was recently demonstrated by the outbreak of cholera in Russia, which caused many deaths in other nations, and for a time affected the commerce of the world. If a small portion of the loss sustained by other nations had been spent in promptly relieving want, and caring for the afflicted in Russia, millions of money would have been saved, and the angel of death would not have spread its wings over the world. It must not be forgotten that in our body politic when one member suffers all the members suffer.

In the last analysis of human government it will be found that it must be based upon principles which meet the highest wants and guarantees the best good of all in view of our common origin, common interests, and common destiny. No self-government can exist without a community of interests. Equality can not be denied nor favors granted. Every man according to his ability must contribute part, otherwise he becomes a privileged person. No man can obtain true success who lives and acts solely for self. A purely selfish existence is worse than no existence. The highest happiness is to be and do for others, and no government of the people and for the people can fulfill its mission unless it has constantly in view the highest good of all. We in this self-government have plighted faith to each other. Every loyal citizen must be protected in all his rights, because he is a citizen and a part of this Government. No discrimination in favor of any individual, company, or class can be tolerated in such a Government, yet the cry of discrimination comes to us from every State and district over the whole continent, and it demands prompt consideration and just action. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the Fifty-third Congress spent the larger part of two sessions discussing the silver question and the tariff issue, and a considerable portion of this session has been spent discussing the same subjects. These two questions, important as they are, constitute only a part of the great industrial issues; yet upon this fractional part Congress has consumed all this time, leaving the greater needs of the people unanswered. It will be found that when this labor question—the industrial issue—equality, which is the final problem of the world—is understood, that tariff and the coinage of silver are only a small part of it. In fact, we have been doing like the Pharisees of old, "Tithing mint, anise, and cummin," and have omitted the weightier matter of the law, "judgment, mercy, and faith." "These we ought to have done, and not left the others undone." As important as tithes, tariff, or silver may be, they are not all-important. The laborer and agriculturist are not organizing and protesting on account of the coinage of silver or the tariff issue, but on a question of right; and right, like truth, is eternal and will prevail. The levying of tariff will not settle it.

Protection against the product of the underpaid labor of Europe can never settle the question of equality and just distribution among our people. This has been demonstrated in both tariff and free-trade countries. In European countries, which are not disturbed by tariff agitation or the free coinage of silver, we find the industrial question to the front and threatening the very existence of nations. In all our discussions how often have we heard the rights of the laborer, the farmer, the manufacturer, and business man spoken of except in connection with tariff and free trade or the free coinage of silver? Yet their rights are superior to both, and the disturbed condition of the country can not be settled by the adjustment of these questions. I believe in protection, and have advocated it in this House upon both moral and economic grounds. I believe in bimetallism; in the widest possible use of silver with safety to our business interests, and that all dollars should be equal in value, but do not believe in either one or both of these measures as a cure for all the ills of society. I do not, therefore, believe in "cure-alls," but do believe in "all cures." [Applause.]

Again, too much of our law is made up of compromise measures. All compromise laws, from the Missouri Compromise to the present time, if not in all time and in all nations, have been disappointing if not disastrous. If there be any great compromise law in nature scientists have not yet discovered it. If there be any great compromise law in the Bible theologians have not yet expounded it. We can not compromise truth or principle, facts or figures. If there be no great compromise principle in nature, reason, mathematics, or revelation, compromises should not enter so largely into our law.

I believe that in the last analysis of this industrial problem, in view of our common origin, interests, and destiny, the golden rule will be its solution, and that a large per cent of existing laws will be stricken from the records by inserting, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." This is in strict accord with our declared principles of freedom and equality, and we must return and build again upon this everlasting foundation of justice, mercy, and right.

Mr. Chairman, the rights of woman must be more fully recognized in the future than they have been in the past. She is constantly entering new industrial fields and meeting their requirements with fidelity and ability. Her advancement in intellectual and moral pursuits is without a parallel in history. She is beginning to dominate along all the lines that lead to the betterment of the race. She has built and endowed more institutions of benevolence and charity for the relief of want and suffering in the past fifty years than were established by both sexes in all preceding time. Yet, notwithstanding all this, many of her sex still toil in sweat-shops, fighting an uneven battle for child and home with avarice and greed. This blot upon civilization must be removed, and woman's rights and influence be recognized in any future movement for the betterment of our industrial system. [Applause.]

The requirements of this enlightened age for a better industrial and social system must be met. Too many of the toiling millions are not properly housed, fed, clothed, and educated.

They must have homes, not hovels; must have proper food, clothing, education; must, in our unlimited fields of industry, have a chance to sow and reap and rest after toil; must share in the comforts of life, if they endure its burdens.

Mr. Chairman, it is painful to live in a land of such bounty and see so much suffering. It is distressing to feast while so many are hungry; to be clothed in comfort while many are clad in scanty garments or rags; to be sheltered in pleasant homes while so many live in hovels; to meet distress on every hand and be unable to relieve it. Individual effort can accomplish but little; only by united effort, upon principles of humanity and by doing unto others as we would have them do unto us, can our Government be established upon a foundation which no storm can move?

Mr. Chairman, all this can be done and more; not out of our abundance, but out of our superabundance. This is sufficient to meet every physical want and relieve all distress that comes from man's inhumanity to man.

Mr. Chairman, while this bill seeks to meet the just demands of all classes, it must, however, be borne in mind that this is not a class government, not a government of laborers, farmers, manufacturers, transporters, or business men, but is a government of the people.

No one class established this government in eight years of war; no one class saved it in four years of rebellion, and no one class can ever govern it unless it be by despotic rule.

Mr. Chairman, as this nation was the first on earth to declare the true principles of government, my greatest desire is that it shall be true to these principles and go on winning new fame and glory, living through the ages, and that wherever its flag floats on sea or land it may be the symbol not only of freedom but of equality. [Loud applause.]

I wish to call attention to the general wish of the people, especially of the labor and farm interest of our country, in favor of this measure, as shown by petitions, resolutions, and letters addressed to the Labor Committee of the last Congress, and also to the Labor Committee of this Congress, some of which I append:

NEW YORK, January 7, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: It is with more than ordinary pleasure I note that House bill 7756 has been referred to the Committee on Labor, of which you are the honored chairman, and that the prospects are good for a favorable report from the committee to the House.

In my report as president of the American Federation of Labor, to the fourteenth annual convention, recently held at Denver, Colo., I took occasion to say the following in reference to the bill:

"A bill was introduced by the Hon. THOMAS W. PHILLIPS in the House for the purpose of creating a commission, to be appointed by the President, for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of industry, and to what extent the people have been deprived of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence. The bill prescribes that representatives from organized labor, business men, and farmers shall be appointed.

"The executive council indorsed the bill and organized labor generally approved it, forwarding resolutions to their respective Congressmen and Senators certifying to that effect. It is desirable that the bill before its final passage should receive the consideration of this convention to say whether any amendments may be required.

"Copies of the bill will be laid before the appropriate committee to which this subject may be referred."

The subject-matter was referred to the committee on president's report, which subsequently requested that a special committee be appointed for the purpose of expressing the sentiments of the convention thereon. The special committee reported in favor of the bill and recommended its indorsement by the convention. It also made the following recommendations:

"We would also recommend that, in case the said bill becomes a law, all matters indorsed by this body requiring Congressional action shall be submitted to the representatives of labor provided for in the bill, and that efforts be put forth by the executive council to secure the appointment of union men as such representatives.

"We would further recommend that all bodies affiliated with the American Federation of Labor petition their respective Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote for the passage of the above-named measure."

The report of the committee, I take pleasure in saying, was adopted by the convention by an overwhelming majority.

In all likelihood I may be in Washington during the coming week, and if I am I shall deem it both a pleasure as well as a duty to call upon you in connection with this bill and other measures in which the organized wage workers of our country are interested.

Truly, yours, SAML. GOMPERS.

Hon. LAWRENCE E. MCGANN,
Chairman Committee on Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., December 14, 1894.

SIR: Understanding that your committee have now under consideration H. R. 7756, introduced by Congressman PHILLIPS of Pennsylvania, being "A bill authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problem presented by labor, agriculture, and capital," I beg leave to offer my personal and official indorsement of the propositions therein contained. It is not possible within the prescribed limits of a letter to give all my reasons therefor, but suffice to say for the present that it seems to me this would be a practicable way, not only of securing the best information as a basis for the making of laws conserving the interests of all classes, but would, to a considerable extent, do away with the necessity for various organizations of labor, capital, and agriculture sending committees to Washington to influence legislation and lobbying in the interest thereof. The prosperity of the urban working classes is so closely interwoven with that of the agriculturist and the manufacturer that I doubt very much if any of us know where the interests of each begin or end. Such a commssion as proposed by the bill would have the combined advantage of being representative of all classes, and securing information hardly accessible under other conditions.

The weight of recommendations from such a commission to the lawmaking power of States and nation would certainly be much greater than similar recommendations coming from any other source, inasmuch as it would be nonpartisan and representative of all classes.

Believing I voice the hearty concurrence of the large constituency I have the honor to be affiliated with and represent in the above indorsement, I am,

Very truly, yours,

JNO. W. HAYES,
General Secretary-Treasurer.

Hon. LAWRENCE MCGANN,
Chairman Committee on Labor, Washington, D. C.

HARRISBURG, PA., December 22, 1894.

DEAR SIR: My attention having been called to House bill No. 7756, Fifty-third Congress, second session, entitled "A bill authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital," and having examined the said bill with much care, I had it laid before the Farmers' Alliance council of this country, where it met, after discussion, with unanimous approval.

This week it was laid before the council of the Pennsylvania State Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, its provisions discussed, and the measure was practically unanimously approved.

The bill has been laid before a majority of the members of the executive committee of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, and has their approval.

Personally, I hope it will become a law at a very early day, as the agricultural element of the United States, I am sure, will be greatly benefited by the labors of a commission appointed in the manner proposed by the bill referred to.

Very respectfully,

H. C. DEMMING,
Secretary Executive Committee
National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union.

Hon. LAWRENCE E. MCGANN, M. C.,
Chairman of the Congressional Committee on Labor.

DES MOINES, IOWA, December 18, 1894.

DEAR SIR: H. R. 7756 having been called to my attention, I take great pleasure in informing you that it meets my most hearty approval.

It seems to me that the bill promises more for the harmony of conflicting interests at this time than any other measure now pending in Congress.

Thanking you for the introduction of so just and timely a measure, and trusting for its immediate passage, I am,

Respectfully, yours,

J. R. SOVEREIGN,
Grand Master Workman.

Hon. T. W. PHILLIPS, M. C.,

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 7, 1896.

A bill, known as the "industrial commission bill" (H. R. 21), has been introduced in the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress. The position of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union on the proposition is as follows:

We favor the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital. Inasmuch as it is to be preliminary to proposed wholesome national legislation, and as the work of such a commission will gather many facts and figures into official form, all at the expense of the General Government, we indorse such legislative action.

In indorsing such a commission, however, we are firmly of the opinion that the appointment of the commission should be surrounded by such safeguards as to insure the appointment of members favorable to the industrial classes. The expenses of such a commission should be kept within the limits of strict economy.

OFFICE OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY, ORDER OF KNIGHTS OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1896.

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned general officers of the Knights of Labor, acting on behalf of the entire organization, cordially commend to your favorable and prompt consideration the bill H. R. 21, introduced by Hon. T. W. PHILLIPS, of Pennsylvania, which is entirely acceptable to our members.

Most respectfully,

J. R. SOVEREIGN, G. M. W.,
M. J. BISHOP, G. W. F.,
JNO. W. HAYES, G. S. T.,
C. A. FRENCH,
T. B. MCGUIRE,
J. M. KENNEY,
H. B. MARTIN,
Members of General Executive Board.

The COMMITTEE ON LABOR,
House of Representatives, Fifty-fourth Congress.

From the report of the committee on the president's report, made to the fifteenth annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, held at New York, N. Y., December 9 to 17, inclusive, 1895, the following extract is taken:

"Renewed efforts should be made to secure the passage of the Phillips bill, which was defeated at the last session of Congress, and a committee should be appointed by this convention to urge the passage of this bill."

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 18, 1896.

DEAR SIR: We have carefully considered the bill H. R. 21, commonly known as the bill creating a commission to inquire as to what legislation is necessary to the best interests of the people, and as it goes to the House from your committee we gladly lend it our indorsement.

It appears to us as a strictly nonpartisan and impartial measure, and we commend it because it singles out no class, creed, or party to conduct said investigation and proposes no legislation in favor of any class, creed, or party. Were it otherwise we would not feel that we could lend it our indorsement or approval.

Very truly, yours,

E. E. CLARK,
Order of Railway Conductors.
F. P. SARGENT,
Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen.
P. H. MORRISSEY,
Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.
P. M. ARTHUR,
Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.
W. V. POWELL,
Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

Hon. THOMAS W. PHILLIPS,
Chairman Committee on Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

[Mr. PHILLIPS having yielded the floor temporarily, the following proceedings took place:]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Rules to present a privileged report, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the order of the House adopted on May 20 be so modified as to allow the consideration of House bill No. 6119 to continue until Friday, May 22, at 4 o'clock. General leave to print remarks on said bill is hereby given for ten days.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1822) for the relief of W. A. Austin & Co.;

A bill (S. 1338) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Durham, in the State of North Carolina;

A bill (S. 105) for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, S. Dak.;

A bill (S. 1434) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Branham, late an assistant surgeon in the United States Marine-Hospital Service;

A bill (S. 2101) to extend the provisions of an act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces;

A bill (S. 1500) for the relief of William M. Masi, ex-postmaster, and Benjamin Hellman, Lawrence R. Bresnahen, John W. Griffin, George W. Hoyt, and Charles W. Riner, as sureties upon his official bond as postmaster at Cheyenne;

A bill (S. 163) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Tacoma, in the State of Washington;

A bill (S. 1831) for the relief of William J. Bryan;

A bill (S. 594) for the relief of Augustus Boyd;

A bill (S. 1122) for the relief of Sally Hardmond; and

A bill (S. 901) amending section 4716 of the Revised Statutes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 888) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Capital Railway Company," approved March 2, 1895; and

A bill (S. 2221) for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 225) to provide for the transfer of the Fort Omaha Military Reservation to the State of Nebraska, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SEWELL, and Mr. WALTHALL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5675) authorizing the construction of a wagon and motor bridge over the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. VEST, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. NELSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 485) for the relief of Kate Eberle, an Indian woman;

A bill (H. R. 3337) amending the act of June 8, 1890, entitled "An act to authorize the President to appoint an officer of the Navy or the Marine Corps to perform the duties of Solicitor and Judge-Advocate-General, etc., and to fix the rank and pay of such officer," and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7816) for the relief of John S. Burwell, administrator of the estate of A. L. Burwell, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 8167) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 174) granting permission to the circuit and county courts in Rockingham County, Va., to occupy the Federal court room in Harrisonburg, Va.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8109) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference, and had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRYE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. VEST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 8109—the fortifications appropriation bill—and agree to a conference on the disagreeing vote thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present at this time a conference report on the river and harbor bill, which will take very little time to dispose of. I will not ask the reading of the report. The situation is this: There are two amendments about which there was some mistake, and in order to correct them the Senate disagreed to the report of the conference committee. I desire for the present, therefore, to disagree to the entire report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman, I understand, reports an entire disagreement on the part of the conferees of the two Houses.

Mr. HOOKER. Not an entire disagreement.

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). The question I wish to ask is this: That places the bill, as I understand it, in the position that it was in prior to the appointment of the conferees on the part of the House. If that be true, I desire to raise the point of order upon the amendments of the Senate, under Rule XX——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it does place it in that position.

The Chair ought to state in regard to the question brought up in connection with this matter a few days ago, that so far as the Chair has been able to find there is no objection, in point of parliamentary law, to asking unanimous consent that the action that was taken should be taken under the circumstances. The Chair thought also that the question of reconsideration could not be raised because at the time it was presented the order was partially executed.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, that order having entirely failed, as I understand the situation, it requires some further action of the House to continue the conferees of the House in their position. In other words, the river and harbor bill, after the report made by the gentleman [Mr. HOOKER], is precisely in the situation which it was when it lay upon the Speaker's table as a message from the Senate, and in that view of the matter I now raise the point of order that under Rule XX all of the amendments of the Senate must be considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that a conference report is presented on which there is an agreement reported as to all the items but six?

The SPEAKER. So the Chair understands.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood the gentleman to say that there was an entire disagreement between the two Houses?

Mr. HOOKER. Oh, no; that is not so.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is what the gentleman stated.

Mr. HOOKER. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand it.

Mr. HEPBURN. And it was upon that statement that I based what I have said.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, there has been an entire agreement on the part of the committee of conference on all the amendments proposed by the Senate to the House bill except six.

Mr. HEPBURN. I did not so understand the gentleman.

Mr. HOOKER. Now, I stated that there were two items in the bill about which an error had been made, and the Senate, for the purpose of correcting that error, asked a disagreement as to the entire report; and they having made that disposition of it, I thought proper to take the same course here, and to move a conference for the purpose of correcting those two items.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is as I understood the gentleman. He reported an entire disagreement between the two committees, and if that is the case I want to make and insist upon my point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I understand the gentleman reports an agreement.

Mr. HEPBURN. He has not yet officially reported an agreement. He has reported a total disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to Rule XX——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk began reading the conference report.

Mr. HOOKER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, that has all been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to know whether we are acting on the verbal report made by the chairman of the committee or upon some document?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presented a conference report. Is the Chair correct? The Chair asks the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HOOKER. Yes; a conference report.

Mr. HEPBURN. There was no statement of that kind.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair had ordered the Clerk to read the conference report. It is impossible for the House to know what is before it until it is read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HEPBURN. But I want to call the attention of the Chair to this matter and ask that the notes of the reporter be read, if necessary. The gentleman made his report as a verbal one, and he made the statement that there was an entire disagreement between the two committees. That made a different parliamentary situation of his bill from the one that he is now seeking to make.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we ought to have the regular order.

Mr. HEPBURN. If he in fact made a verbal report, if he reported an entire disagreement between these two committees, then this bill occupies the parliamentary status which it had prior to the appointment of the conferees.

Mr. HOOKER. I think we had better have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report. The gentleman sends up a report which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. CANNON (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CANNON. As this takes time from the special order, and as I understand from the gentleman's statement that he is going to ask the House to disagree to the conference report, I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that the further reading of the report may be dispensed with, and the gentleman then can make his motion.

Mr. HOOKER, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the reading of the conference report will be dispensed with.

Mr. KEM. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM] objects.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the conference report.

[For text of conference report, see Senate proceedings of May 20.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the recent message from the Senate, showing that this conference report has been disagreed to by the Senate. Then I want to call the attention of the Chair to the report made by the gentleman—the verbal report. I want further to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that any report from a conference committee dissolves the committee of conference, and that there is no conference committee after the report has been made. Now, in view of these propositions, I submit to the Chair that the parliamentary status of this bill is precisely the same as it was when it came here from the Senate as a message from the Senate, and that the amendments made by the Senate are in precisely the same condition as they were before action of any kind was taken by the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will pardon me at this point——

Mr. HEPBURN. Let me make my point a little further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then let me further suggest that these amendments of the Senate, being appropriations of money, must, under Rule XX of this House, be first considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I make that point now, that this bill, being in the situation that it was when it was returned with the Senate amendments, when it first came from the Senate, that those amendments, under our rule, must first be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman do with the action of the House in nonconcurring in the Senate amendments?

Mr. DINGLEY. That is what I desired to call attention to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that that action, so far as it can be removed——

The SPEAKER. So far as it can be removed; but can it be?

Mr. HEPBURN. It seems to me by subsequent action it can.

The SPEAKER. How about the action the House has taken when it refused to concur in the Senate amendments? That is the action of the House of Representatives, and it can not be overruled by the Speaker.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa on that point.

Mr. HEPBURN. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair has already reached a conclusion, it is not worth while for "the gentleman from Iowa" to try to move it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Perhaps not, after the statement the Chair has made.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree to the conference report and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the gentleman's motion be to insist on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference.

The gentleman from New York moves that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the same gentlemen as conferees.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed acts of the following titles:

On May 20, 1896:

An act (H. R. 708) to increase the pension of Albert Ellis; and

An act (H. R. 3189) to increase the pension of John S. Cochenour.

NOTE.—The following bill was presented to the President on May 8, 1896, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, has become a law without approval:

An act (H. R. 5354) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer G. Howell, late a private Company F, One hundred and sixtieth New York Volunteers.

LABOR COMMISSION.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has had under consideration the bill H. R. 6119, and has come to no resolution thereon. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the special order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to limit the debate?

Mr. HENDERSON. Not at this stage.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole House was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

Mr. PHILLIPS resumed and concluded his remarks as printed above.

The CHAIRMAN. If no other gentleman desires to address the committee, the Clerk will read the bill by sections.

The Clerk proceeded to read the preamble.

Mr. LOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask the status of this bill at the present time and the condition of the debate? I understood that there were two or three gentlemen on the other side who intended to speak on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is now reading the bill by paragraphs for amendments. The Chair waited for gentlemen to speak in general debate, and no one seemed to claim the floor.

Mr. LOW. We can have the same privilege to-morrow, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly that must not have been understood by gentlemen. There are a number of gentlemen who propose to indulge in the general discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to take the floor?

Mr. LOW. Not to-day. I propose to take it to-morrow. I yielded to gentlemen on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. If no gentleman desires to take the floor all general debate so far as the bill is concerned will be closed, and the bill will be read by paragraphs for amendments. [After a pause.] The Clerk will read.

Mr. LOW. Mr. Chairman, I will take the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. LOW. This Congress since convening has considered revenue bills, bond bills, appropriation bills; it has discussed international questions and other important business, all of which were national in character and of vital importance to our country. Now we have been presented with a question of great importance—one that touches the relation between capital and labor.

It is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, in advocating the passage of the bill, to portray distressing scenes nor oppressions which the toilers have had to endure while battling in the field of labor for the necessities of life; neither do I propose to call your attention to the imposition capitalists have had to suffer and put up with by and through the despotic rules of labor unions.

Capital and labor have been in conflict time and time again for many decades, disturbing the peace and prosperity of our business centers. It does seem to me with all the intelligence that the people of these United States possess, remedial legislation ought to be secured with a view of harmonizing these two great interests which have made the world what it is to-day. It is a fact, and it can not be controverted, that the human race, whether it is in this or any other country, is composed of classes ranked according to their training, education, and peculiar fitness for the sphere in which they live, and no law, no legislation, or sentiment can change these conditions while the world exists. There must be leaders, there must be hewers of wood and carriers of water, and there will always be the rich and the poor, but happiness and contentment ought to be within the reach of every person living, without regard to class. In this great Government of ours legislation is a potent factor in guarding the people's interest; therefore it seems wise and proper that we should take into consideration one of the greatest questions that confronts the people of the United States, and that question is the labor question. It is one that has been growing in importance, spreading in influence, until its agitation is felt in every section of the country; it slumbers at times, only to awaken with renewed vigor. Any time spent by this House in considering this bill will be devoted to a measure in which every American citizen is interested.

The many disturbances in the labor field, such as discontent and strikes, which often culminate in violence, bloodshed, and loss of life, evince that there is a demand for something more than a superficial investigation of these twin interests—labor and capital.

The agitation between employer and employee has been going on throughout the world for years, entailing loss of time and money to both. The very fact that there has been so much trouble between the two shows a power and strength on the part of both that can not be overlooked or ignored.

Unsettled public questions will ever be present and continue to vex us until changes of a proper character take place. This requires reasoning from an unselfish standpoint.

There has been a growing disposition on the part of the employer and employee to adjust their differences amicably. The subject is a deep one for legislation, requiring much thought and study and consideration at the outset. It is not expected that members can do more than consider the bill; after that turn the matter over to a committee as suggested in the measure, and leave it to them to analyze. They will have the power to examine men in every grade and condition in life. They will follow business of all kinds from the laborer's work up to the employer and capitalist. When the masses see that the Government is interesting itself in the importance of contentment among all classes, then there will be no need of a labor candidate in the field of politics, for he who is chosen by the people will represent all classes.

If you have a chance sit down and talk with the workingman. With few exceptions you will find him interesting; experience in life has given him many ideas. Severe trials may have warped his opinions on some questions, for his is a nature more to be touched by things seen than things told. He knows that his capital is labor and that it can not draw interest unless employed; an idle day means no income for that day; for unlike other capital it can not be hoarded, hence idleness at any time can not be made up, and the toiler is the loser. When you talk over the situation with him you find that his demands are not extravagant. He does not want to usurp the position of the capitalist; he has no desire to live in the same luxurious manner as that of his employer, but he does want to be able at all times to pay the rent of his humble home and provide for himself and family the necessities and ordinary comforts of life and have a dollar left in his pocket when Monday morning comes around.

With an intelligent, active, and determined board of commissioners, I firmly believe that excellent results will reward their labors, productive of great benefit to the masses, and go a long way toward formulating some remedy for existing evils in the labor field, at the same time giving full protection to capital.

We want contentment among all classes, and in order to obtain that people must broaden their views. This bill suggests an open field to enter upon, where candid men can have an opportunity, free from politics, to discuss questions and theories which sooner or later we must meet. In considering this bill we must not lose sight of the fact that the remedial legislation suggested is for our own people—citizens of the country, the masses who support and maintain our form of government. Among the masses is the wealthy capitalist, one who employs labor in carrying out his plans. Who is he? An American citizen, an upholder of our laws. We have also among the masses the laborer, toiling to complete the plans of the former. Who is he? An American citizen, ever ready, too, to uphold the laws of our land. Both American citizens, both in the busy arena of life, both have their missions to fulfill, and both want their country to prosper. The nation depends upon them both, not only in time of peace but in time of war. Thus far the disadvantage has been with the toiler, whose opportunities for employment have not always been within his reach. Wages are often so small that when he is forced into idleness he has nothing saved with which to bridge over a dull time. He looks around his humble home and sees want and poverty; then he compares it with that of his employer near him, who enjoys not only the comforts of life but the luxuries; then he thinks and thinks, and while he knows that he lacks the training and the executive ability to plan, to carry out industries as a leader, yet he feels that the gap between himself and employer is too great. Busy times come around again and we find him employed. He sees busy times ahead, and with the remembrance of his deprivations of the past his inclination is to get higher wages, sometimes more than his employer can pay.

On the other hand, the employer is striving to make all he can out of his employees; hence there exists a conflicting element within an industry, and prosperity can not thrive under those circumstances. Harmony and success can be reached only through the avenue of reciprocity which ought to exist between capital and labor. Withdraw capital from an industry for any length of time and it will suffer. Without labor supplies of all kinds would stop, and absolute want would follow, affecting rich and poor alike; hence capital and labor are coordinate interests. Neither can live any length of time without the other.

Capital is a purchasing power. There its function ceases, for it has neither brain nor thought, but both are requisite in preserving and keeping it safe. Labor has both brain and thought, and through their agencies capital is produced. The prosperity of any nation depends upon rich men, the skilled workman, and the toiler.

What workingmen want is not charity; they do not ask for gratuities, but merely an opportunity to fairly fight the battle of life. They do not want aggregation of wealth on one side without some consideration on the other, for that is the side that aids in the production of wealth.

History has proven that in countries where the common people are doing well the nation is prosperous, and that nation is most great and powerful. [Applause.]

With all due respect to capital, and giving it the fullest measure of consideration, let me say that it is to the toiler that we are indebted for many of the comforts and luxuries of life; hence his wants merit our earnest consideration.

Capital can seek unlimited fields for investment, but labor has its special sphere, divided among the masses. The bricklayer can not take up any other calling, neither can the carpenter, painter, or blacksmith.

The CHAIRMAN. If no other gentleman desires to address the committee the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1. Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission, to be called the industrial commission, composed as follows: Five men representative of labor, five men representative of agriculture, and five men representative of business; but a majority of this commission shall not belong to any one of the political parties which took part in the last Presidential election.

Mr. PHILLIPS. On behalf of the committee I desire to offer an amendment to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 5, 6, and 7 of section 1, the words "five men representative of labor, five men representative of agriculture, and five men representative of business"; and insert instead thereof, "three men representative of labor, three men representative of agriculture, three men representative of manufacturing, and three men representative of business and the professions."

Mr. TRACEY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "three" wherever it occurs and inserting "two."

Mr. PHILLIPS. I object to that amendment. The amendment which I have offered has been submitted by the authority of the committte, who have given the bill very careful consideration. In view of the vast and varied industries of our country a commission of smaller number than that which the committee propose would not meet the requirements of the case. I trust that the amendment which I have offered will be adopted.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is another amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Two amendments to this section are already pending. A substitute would be in order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I desire, then, to offer the following as a substitute: After the words "President of the United States," in line 3, insert the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and let the following part of the section provide as at present for 5 men representative of labor, 5 men representative of agriculture, 5 men representative of manufactures, and 5 men representative of business, so that the section will provide for a body of 20 men in all.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, this commission as originally proposed was to consist of 7 representatives of labor, 7 representatives of agriculture, and 7 representatives of business, making 21 in all. As now proposed to be amended by the committee, it will be composed of 5 men representative of labor, 5 representative of agriculture, 5 representative of manufacturing, and 5 representative of business and the professions. Thus we shall have 4 divisions of 5 members each instead of 3 divisions of 7 members each. As amended, the commission will consist of 20, instead of 21 members, and there will be a new division, that of manufactures. It was thought that in view of the vastness and importance of our manufacturing industries they should be distinctly and separately represented.

This amendment was adopted after correspondence with gentlemen representing that branch of industry. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] also suggested this amendment. I hope, therefore, that the amendments will remain as they are recommended by the committee; that is to say, five in each group, three of whom are to be appointed by the President, and two to be selected by each division after it is appointed. The reason for requiring these subsequent appointments was for the purpose of supplementing any talent that might be lacking.

The bill provided originally for seven representatives of labor, five of them to be appointed by the President and two by each division of the commission after their appointment. We have reduced the number to three who are be appointed by the President and two in each group to be selected by the commission, in order, as I have said, to supplement any talent that might be lacking.

Mr. BINGHAM. Are they to be confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. PHILLIPS. No, sir; the bill does not require confirmation by the Senate.

I hope the gentleman will yield, therefore, and not press the amendment. We have made a careful investigation of the subject, and we are satisfied that the great interest of agriculture could not be properly represented on this commission with three men.

Mr. BRUMM. Will you permit a question? Has the committee made an estimate of the probable cost of the whole business?

Mr. TRACEY. It will cost $252,000 for salaries for the two years alone.

Mr. PHILLIPS. We have not made any exact estimate.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, have you any estimate—an approximate estimate?

Mr. PHILLIPS. It will be about $300,000 for the whole commission for its full term of two years.

Mr. BRUMM. That I understand only includes salaries?

Mr. PHILLIPS. No; that includes the whole expense.

Mr. BRUMM. Does that include the cost of acquiring information outside, sending for persons, papers, and so on?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Yes; $50,000 is set apart for that purpose.

Mr. BRUMM. Why not allow the President to appoint two, and these two another, thus making in all 12 rather than 20 men?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will explain that again. You take, for instance, the agricultural industries of the country—the Pacific Coast, the great West, the Northwest, the South, and the East, and the Middle States. How can three representatives of the agricultural interest represent such a diversity of interest and such a vast continent as this? Take, if you please, all of the varied industries—the mining, the manufacturing, the iron, the coal, the shipping, and the railroad interests. We want these industries fairly represented, and we do not think the commission is too large to represent a continent so vast as this, with interests so vast and varied. And while we are spending millions of dollars for defenses on land and sea, we should not hesitate to spend such a small sum to investigate and recommend remedial legislation for the benefit of our industrial interests. It should be remembered, also, that the expense and loss involved in one great strike would pay the cost of such a commission a dozen times over. [Applause.]

I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6119, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate still further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 19, 22, 23, 36, 37, 38, 83, 108, 109, 142, 144, 233, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 313, 314, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULLOM, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various tribes of Indians for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3011) for the relief of Nicolai Bros.;

A bill (S. 3008) authorizing the employment of day labor in the construction of certain municipal buildings and works in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 3001) granting a pension to Alfred Bigelow, of Norfolk, in the State of Nebraska;

A bill (S. 2945) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Alabama River by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company;

A bill (S. 2944) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Cahaba River, in Bibb County, Ala., by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company;

A bill (S. 2943) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Warrior River by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company;

A bill (S. 2499) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company";

A bill (S. 2473) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Montana," approved July 20, 1892;

A bill (S. 2394) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salem, Oreg.;

A bill (S. 2306) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes, relating to copyrights; and

A bill (S. 2284) for the relief of actual settlers on unsurveyed public lands.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I see that the Senate has disagreed to the conference report; and I move that the House further insist on its disagreement and agree to the request for further conference on the part of the Senate on the bill H. R. 6248, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee, and Mr. DOCKERY.

RACHEL PATTON.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a veto message from the President of the United States, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 1185, entitled "An act granting a pension to Rachel Patton."

John H. Patton, the husband of the beneficiary, was a captain in an Illinois regiment, and was killed in action June 25, 1863.

In December, 1863, the beneficiary was pensioned as his widow at the rate of $20 a month.

She received this pension for thirteen years and until 1876, when she married one William G. Culbertson. Thereupon, because of such marriage, her name was dropped from the pension rolls pursuant to law.

In 1889, thirteen years after her remarriage and the termination of her pension, she procured a decree of divorce against her second husband on the ground of desertion.

She has a small income, but it does not appear that alimony was allowed her in the divorce proceedings.

It is proposed by this bill to pension her at the same rate which was allowed her while she remained the widow of the deceased soldier.

It can not be denied that the remarriage of this beneficiary terminated her pensionable relation to the Government as completely as if it never existed. The statute which so provides simply declares what is approved by a fair and sensible consideration of pension principles. As a legal proposition the pensionable status of a soldier's widow, lost by her remarriage, can not be recovered by the dissolution of the second marriage. Waiving, however, the application of strictly legal principles to the subject, there does not appear to be any sentiment which should restore to the pension rolls as the widow of a deceased soldier a divorced wife who has relinquished the title of soldier's widow to again become a wife, and who, to secure the expected advantages and comforts of a second marriage, has been quite willing to forego the provision which was made for her by the Government solely on the grounds of her soldier widowhood.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 21, 1896.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the bill, with the message, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Your committee, having had under consideration House resolution No. 365, providing for the printing of 10,000 copies of the immigration bill which passed the House May 20, 1896, for the use of the House of Representatives, recommend that the same do pass.

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the immigration bill passed this day be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask a vote upon the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, having had under consideration House resolution No. 346, authorizing the employment of two additional laborers by the Postmaster for a period not exceeding thirty days, at a salary of $3 per day, respectfully report in favor of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster of the House is hereby authorized to employ two laborers, at $3 per day, for such time, not exceeding thirty days, as shall be necessary to distribute and deliver to the members of this House the garden and flower seeds which are arriving in large quantities, said laborers to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—MITCHELL VS. WALSH.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared the views of the minority in the contested-election case of Mitchell vs. Walsh. The report is now presented within the time agreed upon between the members of the minority and the majority of the committee. I ask leave now, by unanimous consent, to file the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] asks unanimous consent to file the views of the minority in the contested-election case of Mitchell vs. Walsh.

Mr. KEM. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM].

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 1434) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Branham, late an assistant surgeon in the United States Marine-Hospital Service—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1338) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Durham, in the State of North Carolina—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1122) for the relief of Sally Hardmond—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 901) amending section 4716 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 594) for the relief of Augustus Boyd—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 163) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Tacoma, in the State of Washington—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 105) for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, S. Dak.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1831) for the relief of William J. Bryan—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1822) for the relief of W. A. Austin & Co.—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1500) for the relief of William M. Masi, ex-postmaster, and Benjamin Hellman, Lawrence R. Bresnahen, John W. Griffin, George W. Hoyt, and Charles W. Riner, as sureties upon his official bond as postmaster at Cheyenne—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2101) to provide for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ELEANOR CARROLL POE.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions on the bill S. 804, and move that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, May 18, 1896.

Resolved, That the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe, and asks a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin, and Mr. BAKER be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota moves to nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate, to insist on the disagreement of the House, and to agree to the committee of conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. THOMAS, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. LAYTON.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FAIRCHILD, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BLACK of Georgia, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. TURNER of Georgia, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. DRAPER, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. MILES, for the rest of the week, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia, for ten days, on account of important business.

Mr. DINGLEY. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

FORT OMAHA MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 225) to provide for the transfer of the Fort Omaha Military Reservation to the State of Nebraska.

The bill and amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that is done, I should like to understand the amendments of the Senate. Are there any changes of importance?

Mr. MERCER. Oh, no; the amendments only consist of changes in four or five words.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there anything in the bill that makes the United States liable?

Mr. MERCER. Oh, no; the general tenor of the bill is as it passed the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. This bill transfers the reservation to the State of Nebraska, does it not?

Mr. MERCER. It did that when it passed the House.

Mr. CROWTHER. By a lease simply.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much land is involved?

Mr. CROWTHER. Eighty acres.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the value?

Mr. MERCER. The report says forty thousand or fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has the United States reserved the right to resume possession and control at any time?

Mr. MERCER. Oh, yes; at any time the Secretary of War desires.

The motion of Mr. MERCER was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BISHOP, Mr. TRACEY, and Mr. MCCLELLAN.

And then, on motion of Mr. DINGLEY (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MILNES, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8726) to provide for the payment of certain claims against the District of Columbia by drawback certificates, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1923); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8885) amending and extending the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act approving with amendments the funding act of Arizona," approved June 25, 1890, and the act amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, approved August 3, 1894, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1931); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FISCHER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred House bill No. 8893, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 9118) to ratify an agreement with the Indians of the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, Wyo., and making an appropriation to carry the same into effect, establishing the Wyoming Hot Springs Reservation and making an appropriation for the survey thereof, accompanied by a report (No. 1932); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HILBORN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2271) to authorize a retired list for enlisted men and appointed petty officers of the United States Navy, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1934); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the Senate (Senate Con. Res. No. 38) relating to patents to lands sold by the Union Pacific Railroad Company to bona fide purchasers, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1949); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 22, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The VICE-PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 18th instant, a list of all judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants since the 6th day of April, 1896, in Indian depredation cases, including the names of claimants, the amount claimed, and the amount of judgment recovered in each case; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 19th instant, a schedule of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act approved June 20, 1874, since the allowance of those embraced in House Document No. 322 of the present session, up to and including the 21st instant, amounting to $63,214.89; which was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that that communication and accompanying papers be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that a special order be made that it be printed forthwith and returned from the Printer. It ought to be done in the course of two hours.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 9th instant, a statement showing the number of aliens employed in the Navy Department; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to submit a conference report.

Mr. CHANDLER. My colleague will allow the immigration bill to be referred?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

JOSEPH R. WEST.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 673) granting a pension to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major-general, United States Army Volunteers, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted insert "seventy-five"; and the House agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
W. N. ROACH,
GEORGE L. SHOUP,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. A. PICKLER,
HENRY F. THOMAS,
C. J. ERDMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator from North Carolina will permit us to go through with the morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from North Carolina after the morning business is concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well; I do not want to interfere with routine business.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against the sale of spirituous liquors in the Capitol building at Washington, D. C.; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a memorial of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against the manufacture or sale of liquor in any building under Government control; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of the Mount Pleasant Citizens' Association, of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 3123, relative to highways in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GEAR presented the petition of W. F. Merrick and 69 other citizens of Iowa, praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Nashville, Tenn., praying for the enactment of legislation giving relief to the suffering Armenians in Turkey; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3395) granting a pension to Carrie H. Greene, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4724) to increase the pension of Mrs. Mary L. Aleshire, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2373) granting a pension to Elvin J. Brown, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3182) granting a pension to Susan E. Cunningham, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3229) for the relief of Hannah Newell Barrett, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2143) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily M. Van Derveer, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Ferdinand Van Derveer, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4354) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3161) amending and extending the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act approving, with amendments, the funding act of Arizona," approved June 25, 1890, and the act amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, approved August 3, 1894, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3071) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River from the borough of Braddock to the township of Mifflin, Pa., reported it with amendments.

Mr. KYLE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 21st instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, the amendment providing that hereafter all printers and bookbinders and all skilled mechanics, such as carpenters, machinists, etc., employed in the Government Printing Office shall be paid at the rate of 50 cents per hour for time actually employed, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5258) granting an honorable discharge to John B. Besler, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 138) for the relief of James P. Veach, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 68) for the relief of James P. Veach, reported adversely thereon, and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 137) granting a life-saving medal to Henry Adsit Woodruff, of New York City, N. Y., reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3205) directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to prepare a uniform freight classification; which was read twice by its title.

MESSAGES AND PAPERS OF THE PRESIDENTS.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 15,000 additional copies of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, Richardson's compilation, of which there shall be 5,000 copies for the Senate and 10,000 copies for the House of Representatives, to be distributed and disposed of, including the fraction in each case, as provided in the House joint resolution numbered 170, approved on the 30th day of April, 1896.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3200) to enable the personal representative of E. M. Shield to bring suit against the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3201) to remove the charge of desertion from William Repp; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 3202) for the regulation of cemeteries and the disposal of dead bodies in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 3203) granting an increase of pension to Aurelius Roberts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 3204) granting an increase of pension to Sylvester Walters; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING FILLED CHEESE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is commonly called the filled-cheese bill. I hope it will be acted upon promptly, without further delay.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been concluded, the Chair will state.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the unanimous consent of the Senate after the morning business is over that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] addressed the Chair to submit a motion to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1341, and the Chair stated to that Senator that he would be recognized for that purpose at the conclusion of the morning business. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent, as the Chair understands, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read by title.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the bill commonly known as the filled-cheese bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8008) defining cheese, and also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of filled cheese.

Mr. BUTLER. That bill will lead to discussion, and I feel compelled to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the request of the Senator from Ohio.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

BIOGRAPHY OF CONGRESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the resolution which I submitted day before yesterday be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to; and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That Benjamin Durfee be, and he is hereby, directed (in addition to his other duties and without extra compensation) to prepare an alphabetical biography of Congress from the foundation of the Government to the present time.

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Morning business has closed.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1341.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana rise to present morning business?

Mr. TURPIE. I appeal to the Senator from North Carolina to permit me to call up a bill to relieve Charles W. Rinehardt from the charge of desertion. It is a House bill, that has been pending during the whole session, and I should like to have it considered. It will not be a subject of discussion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not hear a word the Senator says.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana will repeat his request.

Mr. TURPIE. I appeal to the Senator from North Carolina to allow me to call up the bill (H. R. 2054) to correct the military record of Charles W. Rinehardt and to grant him an honorable discharge. It is a House bill, and all that is lacking is action on the part of this body. It will not lead to any discussion.

Mr. BUTLER. I will state to the Senator from Indiana that as soon as Senate bill 1341 is taken up I will give way for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BUTLER. I object now. I shall not object when Senate bill 1341 is taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issue of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. HILL. This being an important question, I desire a full Senate. I suggest the want of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Davis,	McBride,	Sewell,
Allison,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Stewart,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Teller,
Bate,	Gear,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Thurston,
Berry,	Gray,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Hale,	Nelson,	Vest,
Brown,	Hansbrough,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Burrows,	Harris,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Butler,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Warren,
Chilton,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Wetmore,
Cockrell,	Kyle,	Pritchard,	Wilson.
Daniel,	Lindsay,	Pugh,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1341.

Mr. HILL. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], but I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], but I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], but I am informed that he is in favor of this measure. I therefore exercise my discretion and vote "yea."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], but as I am advised that he is in favor of the present consideration and passage of the measure now sought to be brought before the Senate, and with that understanding, upon all matters affecting its consideration I shall exercise my discretion and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SEWELL. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—34.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. TURPIE. I ask the Senator from New York to yield to me for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to call up House bill 2054.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for information.

Mr. PEFFER. Would it not be better to lay the pending bill temporarily aside for the purpose of considering the bill? I ask that that may be done.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Kansas pardon me a moment?

Mr. PEFFER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Chair whether that would prejudice in any way the bill the Senate has just voted to take up?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the bill indicated by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BUTLER. Such consent will retain the pending bill in its proper place as soon as that bill is disposed of?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

CHARLES W. RINEHARDT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2054) to correct the military record of Charles W. Rinehardt and to grant him an honorable discharge, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 3, to strike out the word "War" and insert the words "the Navy"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Charles W. Rinehardt, late third-class musician in the United States Marine Corps band, by removing the charge of desertion against him therefrom and granting him an honorable discharge as of date August 15, 1882.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

COMMUTATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senate to consider, without prejudice to the bill which has just been taken up, House bill No. 1436, which the Committee on Public Lands have reported, and it is desirable to have it passed soon in order to effect its object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be laid aside temporarily for the purpose of considering the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. Will it lead to debate?

Mr. VILAS. It will take but a few moments, and it can be passed without the least interference with the pending bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Will it lead to any discussion?

Mr. VILAS. I think not.

Mr. BUTLER. If it leads to any discussion the Senator will not press it?

Mr. VILAS. Oh, no; I shall not press it; I will give way.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1436) to quiet title to lands in persons who purchased the same in good faith without notice and for a valuable consideration, and to enable the Government to issue patents on such lands, and that commutations of homestead entries shall take effect from date of settlement and not from date of entry, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in section 1, line 12, after the word "proofs," to insert "and that no other reason why the title should not vest in the entryman exists except that the commutation was made less than fourteen months from the date of the homestead settlement, and that there was at least six months' actual residence in good faith by the homestead entryman on the land prior to such commutation"; in line 18, after the word "heirs," to insert "and"; in line 19, after the word "representatives," to strike out "assigns, grantees, mortgagees" and insert "as of the date of such final certificate of entry"; and in line 21, after the word "thereon," to insert "and the title so patented shall inure to the benefit of any grantee or transferee in good faith of such entryman subsequent to the date of such final certificate"; so as to make the section read:

That whenever it shall appear to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that an error has heretofore been made by the officers of any local land office in receiving premature commutation proofs under the homestead laws, and that there was no fraud practiced by the entryman in making such proofs, and final payment has been made and a final certificate of entry has been issued to the entryman, and that there are no adverse claimants to the land described in the certificates of entry whose rights originated prior to making such final proofs, and that no other reason why the title should not vest in the entryman exists except that the commutation was made less than fourteen months from the date of the homestead settlement, and that there was at least six months' actual residence in good faith by the homestead entryman on the land prior to such commutation, such certificates of entry shall be in all things confirmed to the entryman, his heirs, and legal representatives, as of the date of such final certificate of entry and a patent issue thereon; and the title so patented shall inure to the benefit of any grantee or transferee in good faith of such entryman subsequent to the date of such final certificate: Provided, That this act shall not apply to commutation and homestead entries on which final certificates have been issued, and which have heretofore been canceled when the lands made vacant by such cancellation have been reentered under the homestead act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill relating to commutation of homestead entries, and to confirm such entries where commutation proofs were received by local land officers prematurely."

WILBUR F. COGSWELL.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me a moment that I may call up House bill 2042, a pension bill. The beneficiary is a resident of my town, and it is a very meritorious case.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the Senator couple with that a request that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside, so that it will not be prejudiced.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be laid aside temporarily for the purpose of considering a bill, which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 2042) to increase the pension of Wilbur F. Cogswell; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Wilbur F. Cogswell, late an assistant engineer in the United States Navy, at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. MILLS. I give notice that I shall object to any further unanimous consent after this bill is disposed of.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask leave to call up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. BUTLER. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside in order that the conference report may be considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was unable to hear the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to inquire of the Chair whether the consideration of the conference report will affect in any way or displace the bill before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will not displace the pending bill, the Chair thinks.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, as printed in the Senate proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The report has been read. I ask that it be concurred in.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 673) granting a pension to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major-general, United States Army Volunteers.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THOMAS, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. LAYTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 225) to provide for the transfer of the Fort Omaha Military Reservation to the State of Nebraska; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BISHOP, Mr. TRACEY, and Mr. MCCLELLAN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 130, 132, and 342 to the said bill; agreed to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOOKER, Mr. HERMANN, and Mr. CATCHINGS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

Mr. MILLS. I demand the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I appreciate the anxiety of my friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to hear my remarks upon the pending measure. Perhaps there are some other Senators who do not feel that interest in what I may say on this subject.

Mr. President, the crime, the alleged "crime of 1873," is nothing compared with the crime that will be perpetrated if this bill shall pass the present Congress and become a law. Stripped of all its unnecessary verbiage, condensed as it is, it is a bold proposition for the repeal of the resumption act of 1875, a repeal of the only provision of law that exists for the successful maintenance or redemption of the paper currency of the country. It does not in so many words or express terms repeal the law of 1875, but by declaring that for no purpose whatever, no matter what necessity may exist therefor, shall there be moneys provided by the issuing of bonds for the redemption of the greenback currency of the country, it is in effect a repeal of the resumption act of 1875.

Mr. President, it is a startling proposition. Such repeal will not solve the silver question. It will not solve the financial question. That will still confront the Senate and confront the country. It will simply embarrass the Government. It simply puts in peril the finances of the country. It is a measure leading in the wrong direction.

Of those who in the days of 1875 opposed the resumption of specie payments I have nothing to say. There were those who opposed such resumption in 1875. There are those in the Senate to-day who think any resumption act whatever is unnecessary. There are those in the Senate to-day who seem to think that the Government can maintain a paper currency without anything provided for its redemption. There are those who vote for the issue of Treasury notes without providing anything with which to redeem them. There are those who think it is the province of this Government simply to issue its promises to pay without providing any fund whatever for redemption. To these paper-money men I have no appeal whatever to make. To the men who want to establish a paper currency without any redemption fund with which to maintain it I have nothing to say. It is a part of their creed; it is a part of their theory; it is a part of the system of finance which they want inaugurated in this country. They are fiat-money men.

Mr. President, it was appropriately announced by the sponsor of this bill and by the leader of the Populist party upon this floor yesterday that it is a Populist measure. So be it. So it is. Let there be no misunderstanding of it. It is boldly avowed to be a Populist measure.

What is the effect of this proposed act? What is the act of 1875? The act of 1875 simply provided the method and manner of redeeming the paper currency known as the United States notes. There were greenbackers in those days as now who thought that no redemption fund was necessary, who wanted an irredeemable paper currency, who said that the simple fiat of the Government is sufficient for its money and nothing else is needed, that there shall be no hard money back of it, nothing that requires labor and wealth to produce. That is their theory. They can consistently, of course, support this measure. It is part of their principles, a part of their creed, a part of their policy.

Mr. President, I am not one of those who believe that it is either good policy or that it is right for this Government to put afloat its promises to pay without something substantial back of them, something that is money in fact, something of intrinsic value, something that will take labor to produce, something that possesses all the ingredients of money, of hard money.

Mr. President, I do not now propose to review any of the decisions of the courts of our country as to what constitutes money. The subject is an old story. I know not what the courts might decide now if the question were presented anew. I am opposed to the issuing of greenback currency or paper money to circulate as money, especially in the absence of a proper and complete and full redemption fund always ready to redeem such paper money upon presentation at the Treasury.

As I said a few moments ago, there were those who thought and who still think that no redemption fund is necessary for paper money. They prefer the "battle-scarred greenbacks," and want nothing back of them. They want no fund provided with which to redeem paper money; they want to compel by decree of law that the people shall take it as a legal tender for the payment of debts. They do not want any redemption now or hereafter. This is the theory of finance upon which this bill is based. This is the theory of those who clamor and have recently clamored for the repeal of the resumption act of 1875.

Of course the Senate may pass this bill. I do not believe there is a Senator here who thinks it will pass the other House. I do not believe there is a Senator here who thinks that the President can consistently approve of the measure. It is not because I am anticipating that the bill is to become a law, but because I dislike to see good friends, with whom I agree upon many financial problems, place themselves upon record as they do by this vote in favor of an irredeemable paper currency, for that is what this scheme is, that I am opposing this unwise and dangerous measure. In substance and in effect it repeals the only act upon the statute books of the United States that provides securely and safely for a redemption fund.

What is the argument? The friends of the bill assert that we need no redemption fund; we want none. The fact that it will cripple the Government does not concern them in the least.

What is the effect of this proposed repeal? The revenues of the Government are now insufficient even to meet its ordinary expenses. We keep constantly making appropriations from the Treasury, extraordinary appropriations as well as ordinary appropriations, which will soon exhaust its funds. Senators upon this floor have justified their votes in favor of large appropriations by pointing to the funds in the Treasury, placed there by the sale of bonds. We can not refuse to look at the situation that confronts us. A tariff bill has been passed—no matter how or why passed—which does not realize sufficient moneys for the support of the Government. When you exhaust your reserve fund as well as your annual revenues, in the end there will come a time when there is nothing left for the floating of your paper currency—nothing for redemption purposes. What is then to be done?

If your revenues do not bring you sufficient moneys, how are you to provide a fund with which to keep your paper currency afloat except by borrowing, when your revenues will not even support the ordinary expenses of Government? This bill is nothing more nor less than plain, open, bald repudiation. Repudiation is what this bill means. Dishonor is what this bill means. Degradation of your currency is what this bill means. The "crime of 1873," so called, pales into insignificance compared with the enormity of this contemplated measure.

We have now over $100,000,000 in gold in the Treasury, and about $168,000,000 of other funds. The presentation of greenbacks, which can be made under existing laws, will, of course, if they are redeemed, reduce either the gold reserve or silver funds in the Treasury. The payment of the appropriations made at this session of Congress will largely reduce the amount of money on hand. The contracts entered into for the future, authorized by legislation here enacted, will draw largely upon these funds and in the near future exhaust them.

It may be said that this is a safe measure to pass, because in the future there will be provided sufficient revenues to meet all these required expenditures. When the reserve funds are drawn it will be said, "We shall provide a tariff which will furnish ample rev enues for the expenses of the Government, and also for the redemption fund." Let Senators be not deceived. You know the political complexion of this Senate; you know how it is divided upon the financial question, and divided in reference to other questions. The man who expects any tariff legislation of any consequence in the next year or two will be disappointed. The very make-up of this Senate, the very lines upon which it is divided, and upon which it is likely to be based for the next two years, will prevent any sufficient revenue legislation to adequately replenish the Treasury.

Assuming, then, for the purposes of this argument, that the Wilson bill, so called, will not do better in producing revenue than it has done during the past two years, the question is presented, What is to be done? How is the situation to be met? By repealing all laws for the issue of bonds. Is that the answer? Is it then expected that Congress is to provide some other mode or method of redemption? Is that the theory; is that the idea? Every time during an interval of Congress when the reserves are so low that redemption must stop is there to be an extra session of Congress called? What are we to do during next September or next October? Is Congress to be convened to pass a revenue bill—a revenue bill which will take weeks and months to pass? Is that an adequate remedy? No; this measure, this infamous scheme, takes the Government by the throat; it "holds up" the Government; it substantially paralyzes the Treasury, makes your greenbacks irredeemable, and it destroys the only fund and means provided by which your greenbacks can be redeemed.

I need not enter into any discussion of the question of the authority to issue bonds under the act of 1875. Those who have zealously favored this bill have doubted the legality of the issue of bonds for the purposes of redemption. I might say, if there is no authority now existing, why expressly prohibit such issue? Why do an unnecessary thing? Mr. President, it is because they believe and are convinced that the authority exists now under the act of 1875 that they want to further embarrass and strangle the Government. If there shall be no tariff legislation enacted in the next year and this bill should be passed, how are you to redeem your paper currency that will be presented? It is not the silver question which is here involved; it is more than that. It is the integrity of your Government; it is the honor of the Government. The question involved here is the preservation of the good faith of the Government, which demands that our paper currency shall always be redeemable in the coin of the Government.

I hear some good friends say, "Oh, pay in silver. That is the solution of the difficulty." Is it? Let us see. Suppose to-day that the Secretary of the Treasury should proceed to coin the seigniorage—that is, all that is available, for against the remainder of the bullion in the Treasury notes have been issued, and they are outstanding among the people. You have therefore pledged, you have mortgaged that bullion fund, and you can not reissue or use it without taking up your Treasury notes.

There seems to be a prevalent idea in the minds of some that there is a fund of two or three hundred million dollars of bullion which the Government has which can be coined and the coined money put right back into the Treasury for the uses of the Government. That is not true. That is a false notion, a false idea. If every particle of the bullion in the Treasury was coined, the most that could be realized for the uses of the Government for the payment of its expenses, or for redemption purposes, would be about $55,000,000 additional, and that is all; and that is the seigniorage, so called. That whole sum, if coined, would pay but a small portion of the appropriations already made and to be made by the present Congress. It would be but a "drop in the bucket" toward an adequate redemption fund. This is an important fact which is not generally understood.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator from New York if he believes, under the act of 1875, or under any other act now in force, money can be raised for the purpose of paying the ordinary expenses of the Government or for any purpose other than the redemption of greenbacks?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have answered that a dozen times before. Money can be raised for the purpose simply of redeeming the greenbacks, of course, and for no other express specific purpose. But need I again elucidate the point? When your greenbacks are presented for redemption and they are redeemed in gold, need I tell the Senator from Mississippi that then those greenbacks are funds of the Government? A law has been passed, to which I propose to call the attention of the Senate before I am through, which compels the Secretary of the Treasury to reissue those very greenbacks again to pay the appropriations which you have made.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that may be true.

Mr. HILL. It is true.

Mr. GEORGE. That may be true, yet it is no justification to retain upon the statute books a law authorizing the issuance of bonds for the purpose and intent of securing money to run the Government upon.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, nobody is proposing to issue bonds with which to pay the expenses of the Government. I said it before, and I repeat it. Senators, it seems to me, must be able to comprehend the distinction which I make. The act of 1878, passed after the act of 1875, defined this question, defined the status of redeemed greenbacks, and I should have supposed, when the law of 1875 said that money should be provided with which to redeem greenbacks, that of course it meant their subsequent cancellation. I should have supposed that one redemption would have ended the question; that it of course would have ended it; that when they were redeemed they were paid; they were no longer obligations of the Government; as when a man pays a note, ordinarily that would be a cancellation of it; he would not keep that same note in his possession to reissue it to the next man who came along. But you passed a law in 1878 which said that when the greenbacks were paid it should be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to reissue them; that he should not cancel them, he should not retire them, but should reissue them to pay the expenses of the Government.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is good Democratic doctrine.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. The act of 1878, taken in connection with this provision of the act of 1875, imposed upon the Government and upon the Treasury a continuing duty from time to time to pay in coin the greenbacks as they should be presented, even those that were reissued and were coming back in this endless chain which has been so often spoken of.

Mr. HILL. Between 1875 and 1878 there was a considerable amount of greenbacks redeemed, and the question arose what was the legal status of those greenbacks; a very interesting and novel question. The strict constructionists claimed, and I think properly so, that the United States notes were in effect canceled; that they were paid; they were virtually exhausted; that they were done away with; that there ought not to have been anything afterwards done with them except that the Secretary of the Treasury might properly destroy them. That was the contention. While that question was being discussed, about which there were conflicting opinions, the old Greenbackers, of whom there are still remnants in the Democratic party, were clamoring for the reissue of these greenbacks. They wanted an irredeemable currency; they wanted a paper currency that was circulating; they did not want any true redemption, and finally the act of 1878 was passed, a most unfortunate measure, because it perpetuated the existence of paper money in this country and has led to the difficulties which confront us to-day.

I will tell the Senator from Mississippi how you can absolutely prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from using any of these greenbacks thus redeemed for the expenses of the Government. All you have to do is to add a little amendment to the pending bill, which I intend to propose, in order to carry out your scheme in full and reach the alleged difficulty of which you complain:

> It is further provided that upon the redemption of any United States notes the Secretary of the Treasury shall not reissue the same.

Mr. GRAY. They ought to be destroyed.

Mr. HILL. I do not care very much what becomes of them.

Mr. President, what is the complaint of those who now wish to repeal the last vestige of legislation for the protection of the Treasury in the redemption of greenbacks? When I ask them, Do you want to keep up an irredeemable paper currency? some say they do, and some do not know whether they do or not. The law of 1878 says that United States notes must be reissued. That is a duty imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury, a duty which he can not escape, which no—if I may use that expression—silver Secretary of the Treasury could escape. If Congress makes an appropriation, and the Secretary of the Treasury has not other funds, he, of course, takes any funds which may be in the Treasury to meet the appropriation.

The complaint is further made that after the greenbacks are redeemed and are placed back in the Treasury, subject to all appropriations and all expenses of the Government, the Secretary of the Treasury does use these redeemed greenbacks for the payment of appropriations for the expenses of the Government. Mr. President, there is no law to prevent it. On the contrary, there is a law absolutely requiring it to be done. Yet, instead of bringing in a bill proposing to repeal the law of 1878, which would keep this fund of redeemed greenbacks intact and prevent the use of these redeemed greenbacks in the future, they bring in this measure, which absolutely stops the accumulation of any redemption fund. If my friends here with whom I differ upon this question want to stop what they call the use of the redemption fund for the payment of the expenses of the Government, if that is the complaint, if that is the wrong which is being done, then let them accept the amendment which I may suggest, which will absolutely prevent the use of these greenbacks for any such purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator from New York would it not be better for Senators on both sides of the Chamber, seeing the trouble in which the Treasury is placed, to lay aside partisan views and pass, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], a revenue bill for the purpose of raising the necessary funds? I think that would be the way to meet this difficulty, rather than using funds raised by the sale of bonds for an entirely distinct and separate purpose.

Mr. HILL. Those will be welcome words to the ears of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not hear a word the Senator from Mississippi uttered. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I will inform the Senator from Ohio, in behalf of my friend from Mississippi, that he suggests whether, in the interests of pure, unadulterated patriotism, we should not on both sides accept the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed immediately to prepare a revenue bill which will provide ample revenues for the support of the Government, and I say——

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from New York allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. I prefer to be the organ to express my own opinions rather than to have even the distinguished Senator from New York do so for me.

It was stated by the leader—I believe he is called the leader—of the Democratic side of this body that the Secretary of the Treasury laid great stress upon the fact that there was a large deficit. The Senator from Ohio agreed with that—and he is the leader on the other side—and suggested a mode which was very agreeable to me, that the Senate on both sides agree on some nonpartisan, fair revenue bill for the purpose of meeting the necessary expenses of the Government. If those words from me are welcome to the Senator from Ohio, as suggested by the Senator from New York, then I am very glad to have so distinguished an authority to be in consonance with my views upon that subject.

Whilst I am up, if the Senator will allow me, I will repeat in public what I have said privately—and what I believe has been said by some members of this body—that it appears to me to be an absolute shame, when it is acknowledged on all hands that there is a deficit, and a very large deficit, in the revenues of the Government as compared with the expenditures, that we should sit idly here and quarrel with each other as to who is responsible for this unfortunate state of affairs rather than devote our time and attention for the purpose of formulating a measure which will produce the necessary revenue.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator from New York allow me to say a few words, if it will not interfere with what the Senator is about to say now?

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator want to ask me a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I wanted to answer very briefly the remarks made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said yesterday and I say to-day in all seriousness that I think for the Congress of the United States to adjourn without some provision being made to meet the current expenses of the Government would be an outrage, a shame, and a disgrace that would fall upon both branches of Congress, but more especially upon the Senate.

We have gone on in the most affluent way, like a spendthrift who has just come into the possession of a fortune, and we have made appropriations to the extent, as near as I can gather from the Committee on Appropriations, of somewhere from fifty to one hundred million dollars more than the current revenues of the Government that will accrue during the next fiscal year. The President of the United States has no power to borrow money except for a single purpose, and undoubtedly he will not do it except for that purpose. This Senate has refused to give him the power to borrow money at a lower rate of interest, and it refuses in this bill, in the most ignominious manner, to provide any measure whatever to redeem United States notes. It is the act of a bankrupt, and of a dishonest bankrupt at that. What I have suggested ought to be done, and everybody knows it ought to be done.

This bill proposes to repeal the only provision by which is maintained the parity of silver and gold, and that is the purpose of it. Those who advocate the measure know there is no other way of doing it. This measure is now mere moot-court talk in the Senate, because the House of Representatives will not pass such a law, thank God, and therefore we are wasting our time and exposing ourselves badly before the people of the United States, because everybody knows this bill can not pass the House of Representatives. We are taking it up at this inopportune time merely to debate old questions over again.

Mr. President, I think it would be wise if the Democratic party—I would leave out our Populist friends, who have notions that I do not believe they will advocate in a year or two—I think it would be wise if the Democratic party, one of the great political organizations of this country which has existed for a long period of years and was in power almost from the time of Jefferson down, except during and since the war, could demonstrate that it was strong enough and powerful enough to free itself from the popular whims and passions of the moment and take up and consider measures for the relief of the Treasury.

The Republicans of the House of Representatives have sent you a bill. It may not please you; it does not please us; but it was a bill intended to meet the very difficulty that we shall encounter on the 1st day of July next, a temporary bill, made so purposely, and not a bill framed upon the theories and arguments of the Republican party nor upon the theories and arguments of the Democratic party. It may not be a good bill; but the Democratic members, joining with the Populists without even a hearing, laid it on the table by striking out all of it after the enacting clause and substituting a provision for the free coinage of silver.

The Democratic party can not escape the responsibility in this matter, and the people of the United States will remind them of it over and over again. The conservative element, especially in the Eastern States, will know that whatever difficulties occur by a deficiency of revenue must rest upon the Senators here who destroy this bill when they might have taken it up, removed its errors, and made provision, and ample provision, for various sources of income to supply the deficiency.

I said before, and I say now, that in order to supplement and add to the provisions contained in the House bill which was sent to us I would vote for a moderate tax on tea and a moderate tax on coffee, and I would increase the tax on sugar if it was thought to be necessary. That would depend entirely upon the figures. Suppose you should get the figures from the Committee on Appropriations, and they should tell us that it would be necessary to raise fifty, or sixty, or seventy million dollars more than the existing revenue law provides for, it would be our duty to provide increased revenue. The House bill would raise about thirty or forty million dollars, and the Senate should take up that bill and add to it increased taxes.

That is the business of the Senate. It is their constitutional prerogative to make amendments to revenue bills and change them as they may deem necessary. If we do not do that, it seems to me that the Senate of the United States will fall below the high standard it has so long held in the history of the country, and that it will grossly neglect the duties which we are sworn to perform. If we do not do that, we can not help but feel that on the 1st day of July next the President of the United States will be justified in calling us back here to do what we ought to have done in the past. That is my position.

In expressing these opinions I have no party feeling whatever. I think on this side we have done the best we could. We have attempted to change the revenue bill sent to us by the House of Representatives. We sent it to the Committee on Finance, where it could be considered fairly; but that bill was summarily disposed of, first in the Committee of Finance and then in the Senate. Now, we have no jurisdiction in the way of securing additional revenue unless we take up that rejected bill and act upon it, because we have no other bill upon which we can formulate a tariff. The House of Representatives must originate such bills, and we have not the power to do it. The only bill which we could utilize for that purpose is the bill which has been ignominiously rejected and laid upon the table and is there to-day.

That is all I desire to say.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from New York pardon me a moment?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] in regarding this as a crisis in the history of this country and in the history of the Senate of the United States. I believe with him that to adjourn without some remedial legislation for the evils with which we are threatened and the evils which we are now suffering would be, in his language, an outrage and a shame.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GRAY. In one moment. I shall be through in a moment.

Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that if his committee, or if he will give the assurance that it is supported on his side of the Chamber sufficiently, will propose a measure for increasing the revenue, a measure to reasonably increase the revenue, such as he last indicated, of which there can be no doubt at all as to its effect—I mean a small duty on tea and a small duty on coffee and an increased duty, to use the words of the Senator, if necessary, upon sugar—he will find enough votes on this side, I believe, to pass such a measure, and I make that offer now with that belief.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Democratic party is in the minority compared with the Republicans of the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. Of course we are. We are not responsible for legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. The House of Representatives is nearly three-fourths Republican, and I do not know but more. There is in that House a majority so large that you can hardly measure it. The Senator's proposition is that on the only measure of relief upon which we can act we will disregard the action of the House of Representatives, the only body that has the power to originate taxes, that we will tear their manuscript bill into pieces and disregard it, in order to take up the idea of purely a revenue tariff. A great majority of the other House believe as I do that every tax ought to be levied with a view if possible to promote an American industry while it produces revenue.

Mr. GRAY. Ah!

Mr. SHERMAN. Yet the proposition now made by a minority of this body is that we, who at least constitute a plurality in the Senate and a great majority in the House of Representatives, shall entirely ignore the action of the House and select three or four items of taxation on the food of the poor. They would have us confine the taxes to tea, coffee, and sugar. I say that a more liberal spirit and a broader spirit must prevail. We must take into consideration the views of the House of Representatives, and if they have not provided enough means, I will join with the Senator in any tax—yes, I would levy a tax on your coat or your clothes or anything you have to secure adequate revenues.

Mr. GRAY. All right.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Delaware permit me?

Mr. GRAY. In just one moment. I was afraid that the Senator from Ohio did not thoroughly understand himself when he made the offer. He spoke of a patriotic nonpartisan offer, and in that regard I desired to cooperate with him; but now he modifies his proposition, and says we must accept in addition the measure that came from the House, which, in my opinion, is demonstrably a purely protective measure that would produce no increased revenue, but would be much more likely to decrease, as the McKinley Act, its prototype, did decrease, the revenues received from customs taxation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why could not the Senator, then, propose amendments? Let us take up the bill in the Senate; you can propose your amendments, and if you have a majority——

Mr. GRAY. I want a revenue measure proposed on a nonpartisan basis; a measure that will produce revenue and not one in which we are compelled, in order to get revenue, to pay toll for the benefit of interested classes who wish to use this exigency of the Government in order to benefit their own pockets.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HILL. I was simply going to suggest that the tariff bill which is on the table had better be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor, and unless he yields to some other Senator he is entitled to proceed.

Mr. DANIEL. I only rose for the purpose of asking the Senator from Delaware a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. I merely rose to ask the Senator from Delaware, who was upon his feet tendering the good offices of the Democratic side to the Republican leader to support one of their measures, if he would vote for a Democratic proposition to coin the seigniorage in order to furnish the depleted and broken-down Treasury with a little money?

Mr. GRAY. I did not stand here and make a tender of the Democratic side. I said there would be cooperation on this side in the direction indicated by the Senator from Ohio, for the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has just asserted the same thing. I undertake to assert that there will be support enough on this side of the Chamber for such a measure, if it should be introduced, to enact it into a law.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator vote for a proposition to coin the seigniorage and give a little money to the Government?

Mr. GRAY. That is not the way to get money.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from New York allow me for a moment?

Mr. HILL. I yield to my good friend the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Delaware. The motion has been made once or twice to take up in the Senate the House bill upon the Calendar, and it has failed. I now suggest to the Senator, in view of the tender he has made of his own assistance—we know not whose else as yet—that he now move to take up the bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of the Government and provide against a deficiency.

Mr. GRAY. No; I will move to take up an honest measure, but I never will agree to take up a fraud.

Mr. CHANDLER. It has been reported to the Committee on Finance with an amendment. This business must come down to some specific proposition at some time, and the conversations between the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] will not bring us to anything specific. If we can get this bill up and can reject the free-coinage amendment which is proposed by the majority of the Finance Committee, we can arrange all these other details with the aid of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] and the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] and other Senators, and make actual progress in the business of getting the country out of the crisis which the Senator from Delaware appreciates so fully, but does not seem to be ready to help to dissipate.

Mr. GRAY. The difficulty with the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. GRAY. I will be through in one moment.

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. GRAY. The difficulty with the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire is that the bill to which he refers is a bill to increase the revenue of the protected classes of this country and not a bill to increase revenue to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a bill which we can amend, if the Senator from New York will allow me.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator from New Hampshire will agree to amend it in a way different from that I will join with him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will agree to vote to amend it. I will make a tender—I think I will have about as many Republicans with me as the Senator from Delaware has Democrats when he makes an offer on the floor—I make a tender to the Senator of my own support and the support of many Senators upon this side of the Chamber in the direction of amending the bill in the interest of patriotism.

Mr. GRAY. I will be glad to cooperate with the Senator from New Hampshire in that direction.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from New Hampshire says he makes a tender. The trouble is, it is not a legal tender, and it can not be accepted on this side.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HILL. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not forget the main proposition involved here.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to say a word or two in relation to the condition of the Treasury. I represent nobody in what I say but myself. I am the humblest member of this body, and I do not pretend to control its proceedings. I have been profoundly impressed by what has been said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], as well as by what has been said heretofore by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], as to the unfortunate condition of the Treasury. I believe we have reached a point where, to appropriate an idea expressed by the Senator from Ohio, we ought to lay aside partisan motives and undertake the patriotic duty of furnishing the necessary money to pay the expenses of the Government.

I desire to say to him, and to Senators on the other side of the Chamber, who only lack one of having a majority in this body, that if they will propose any measure along the lines I shall indicate they will have one accession on that question, which will give them a majority, whether anybody else goes that way or not. I do not think they ought to present us with a protective measure now. That will not do. I do not think they ought to undertake to pass a measure here which will excite partisan debate. I think we ought to pass a temporary measure for the purpose of raising revenue, and in order to do that I will indicate some of the measures for which I am willing to vote.

I am willing to vote for a tax on beer. I am willing to vote for a revenue tax on wool. I think that ought to have been put in the bill that we passed in 1894. I am willing to vote for a revenue tax, the very same tax that was incorporated in the act of 1883, on lumber. I am willing to vote for a tax, a fair revenue tax, on tea and on coffee. I am willing, also, to increase the tax on certain species of tobacco, on cigars, manufactured and imported, and on cigarettes. I am willing, also, to vote for a revenue duty on any agricultural product that is imported from Canada into the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi what he would figure a revenue duty on wool?

Mr. GEORGE. I should say about 30 or 40 per cent ad valorem. I would not be particular about it, however, so it was not protective.

I am willing, also, to go to the free list and put a tax on statuary. I am willing to put a tax on the fine paintings which are introduced here, and if there be any other article upon the free list which is used generally by the people of this country, not confined to consumption by the poor alone, I am willing to vote for a tax upon it. I will do that upon my own responsibility without reference to what action is taken by any other Senator on this side of the Chamber. I believe we ought to raise revenue.

I voted to amend the tax bill from the House in a way which, if we had so amended it, I believe we would have had plenty of revenue. I believe that if we had substituted the free and unlimited coinage of silver for the bill which came from the other House there would have been such an advance in the prosperity and business of the country as would have resulted in bringing us an increased revenue—sufficient revenue. But as it is certain that such a bill can not pass, I will vote to reconsider that, and to take it away from the tariff bill, provided only we can get a fair, nonpartisan, and reasonable revenue measure which will yield sufficient money to pay the expenses of the Government. I think it is our duty to do that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Mississippi, then, join with the Republicans on this side, or as many of them as will vote that way, to take up the House tariff bill and see if we can not amend it in such a way that we can agree to it and pass it?

Mr. GEORGE. I hesitate to answer in that way for the reason that I think there ought to be some understanding before that question is mooted as to what is to be done.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Mississippi. He speaks of additional taxes to raise revenue. I can not comprehend what is the immediate necessity for revenue. There is $270,000,000 cash balance in the Treasury, and it seems to me what afflicts the country now is a surplus and not a want of revenue. With the present deficit going as high as thirty to thirty-five million dollars a year, it will take several years to draw down the surplus to a healthy amount. I do not see any immediate necessity for revenue. The difficulty is that we have impounded our money and we get too much revenue into the Treasury.

Mr. GRAY. It got there by issuing bonds.

Mr. HAWLEY. By borrowing.

Mr. STEWART. Stop issuing bonds and then there will be enough for two or three years.

Mr. GEORGE. I had assumed that it was the general understanding, both on this side of the Chamber and on the other side, that there was a large deficit in the revenues. I am willing to make that deficit good along nonpartisan lines, so that there will be no necessity to borrow money to pay the appropriations of Congress. I have said all I desire to say upon that question.

Mr. LINDSAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky will suspend. The Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] is entitled to the floor. Permission must be asked from him.

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. LINDSAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he does not think it would be a simpler line of procedure to reduce the appropriations rather than to increase taxation under existing circumstances?

Mr. GEORGE. I have been on that line all the time. I always thought that when a man got into financial difficulties there were but two ways to get out of them—one to reduce expenses and the other to increase profits. I do not see any chance to reduce expenses. On the contrary, as far as I see the tendency is to increase them.

Mr. DUBOIS. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, it seems to me there will not be much trouble for Senators to come together by making just a few concessions here and there. I do not profess to speak for anyone but myself, but I will state that I will vote for any reasonable revenue bill which is designed to raise revenue to conduct the Government, provided it is coupled with the free coinage of silver.

Senators will recollect that five Senators voted here not long ago against taking up the Dingley tariff bill, so called. Those Senators have been indorsed almost unanimously by their people on that issue. Every one of them will be a delegate to the national convention. I myself, for instance, received every vote but five in our State convention, with the distinct understanding on the part of the delegates, as I read the instructions, that I shall not vote for any tariff bill now or hereafter unless it is coupled with the free coinage of silver. Now, with this condition confronting us here, just these few and trifling differences of opinion among Senators around the Chamber, I see no reason why we should not go ahead and adjust the tariff bill in accordance with the convictions of each of us, raise revenue for the Government, and adjourn and go home.

Mr. HILL. The proposition to go home will meet with the entire approval of the American people. [Laughter.] In the language of a distinguished gentleman from Alabama in the other House, "Where were we at," Mr. President, when I submitted to an interruption in regard to the tariff?

The side discussion which has been had—and I was very glad to permit it, even to the extent of hearing the views of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who was not so kind to me last evening when I wanted to make a few brief observations—has illustrated the difficulty which confronts us. The very discussion which has been had, the tenders upon each side of votes which nobody can control, show the difficulties that are in the way of agreeing upon a tariff bill.

First came the startling proposition of my rash friend the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who rushed pellmell into the arena with the declaration that he is anxious, earnestly desirous, of cooperating with the great Republican leader upon the other side. I was rebuked the other day by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], whose State stands by him as well as the State of Idaho stands by the Senator from that State [Mr. DUBOIS], because I spoke a few words of commendation of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and I was substantially sought to be read out of the pure old Jacksonian-Calhoun party.

Here comes my friend the Senator from Mississippi, who tenders his vote, his voice, and his influence in this Chamber for the purpose of enacting a nonpartisan tariff bill, and immediately the distinguished Senator from Ohio nibbles at the bait, and he welcomes him with open arms. He says, "Of course, we want to have a tariff bill," and then he gets into a discussion with my friend the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who rather "calls" him. Then the Senator from Ohio retracts and says, "Of course, I mean a bill satisfactory to the great Republican House, which must be largely consulted." So, immediately, all their nonpartisan professions go to the wind, and after all each stands upon his fundamental party principles.

The Senate as it is at present constituted contains an element, a bold, vigorous, I will not say unscrupulous minority of silver Republicans, ready to take a great tariff measure by the throat in order to procure the free coinage of silver. They are true to their convictions. They seem to think that the free coinage of silver is just as important to the great Republic and to the Republican party as is the tariff. They are acting consistently from their standpoint in taking the position they do. There are four or five of those Senators, and I think upon a muster they could get several more who sympathize with them, but do not have quite the courage they have. In the light of all those Senators being sustained at home, I think in the near future, next December, when the next Congress meets, they will rally more upon that side than now. This side is divided upon the financial question to some extent. The other side is divided, both sides differing as to what should constitute a nonpartisan tariff bill. How is a tariff bill to be formed, then?

Mr. President, the experience of the past is that tariff bills are framed by political parties. They are not perfect; necessarily they are imperfect; but in the main there has been no such thing in the history of this country from an early day as a patriotic nonpartisan tariff bill. We are governed by parties, and we will continue to be governed by political parties as time rolls on. These proffers of Senators are all right enough for political effect. I am sorry the distinguished Senator from Ohio is not here. I think I recollect an interview with him after the election last fall, when he was flushed with the victory that resulted from the efforts of his party. He said, "Yes; there must be tariff legislation; but I shall insist that in any tariff bill that is enacted by the next Congress there shall be a duty upon wool."

He knew that the Democratic party had in the main championed the idea of free raw materials. He knew that the Democratic party were unanimous upon this side of the Chamber in favor of free wool. He knew that it was utterly impossible for us to agree upon any such tariff, and it was very easy, therefore, for him to tender to Democrats upon this side a tariff bill which he knew they could not consistently accept. Had they not just passed (I do not refer to myself, because my own personal record upon the subject is of no special consequence) the Wilson tariff bill after great deliberation, putting wool upon the free list? If the party was committed to anything upon that subject it was committed to that. It could not retreat in less than a year and a half—before the experiment had been fully tried. Therefore I do not take much stock in these nonpartisan professions of willingness to prepare and agree upon a nonpartisan bill.

No, no, Mr. President; be not deceived. There will be no tariff bill passed at this session. If the President calls an extra session, there will be no tariff bill passed. Next session there will be no tariff bill passed, and a year from now there will be no tariff bill passed. Do not these very differences of opinion which we have here disclosed prove it? Need I call other witnesses here? I might imitate the course pursued once by a distinguished Senator when he called Senators as witnesses here and there to give their testimony. What kind of a hotchpotch tariff bill would we have here if every Senator got up and stated what he wanted? Tariffs can not be constructed that way.

Therefore the point I make is that with the Senate constituted as it is, with no prospect of any material change in the future upon this subject, with this Senate divided among Republicans, Populists, and Democrats, they also in turn divided—a faction of the Republican party divided upon the propriety of passing any tariff bill at all unless coupled with the free coinage of silver—how can any man outside of an insane asylum think there is any prospect of agreeing upon a tariff bill to produce revenue? Yet with that situation staring us in the face, and in the meantime with the country pledged to the maintenance and redemption of your greenback paper currency, when you have not adequate revenue, when you can not practically provide means except by borrowing to redeem the pledges which you have given out to the people, you propose to take the Government by the throat and repeal the only safeguard there is for the protection of the honor and the credit of the Government.

That is the situation. It can not be disguised. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] made a suggestion and said, "Coin the seigniorage." If coined it would not last a month, and you could not coin it in a whole year. The coinage of the seigniorage would afford but little relief—a mere trifle. But it is said, "Open your mints to the free coinage of silver, and there will be money enough." You can not get any money into the Treasury in that way. As I said before, some people think there is a bullion fund of two or three hundred million dollars, and that all you have to do is to coin it and put it right into the Treasury to the credit of the Government. It is not true. Suppose to-morrow a bill for the free coinage of silver should pass. What would be the effect of it?

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from New York allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HILL. Not now. What would be the effect of it? Everybody who has silver bullion would take it to the Treasury and have it coined into silver dollars, and take his dollars away with him. Where does the Treasury get any benefit? How does that replenish the Treasury? Some gentleman suggested that it would improve to some extent the general prosperity of the country. That may be. I will not discuss that question now. That is an indirect benefit. It might, or it might not. Free coinage does not specifically put any money into the Treasury, and you have to have either gold or silver, and you have not enough of either to redeem the paper currency. You have to earn it. You have to receive it from revenue, and you can not get revenue if you do not have taxation. Yet, with this situation confronting us, you propose to take the Government by the throat and stop redemption. When there is a deadlock here, by men adhering to their convictions, it is proposed to refuse to allow the President to borrow the money necessary to keep your greenbacks afloat. That is the situation.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from New York allow me?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the Senator from New York to assert with some confidence that there will be no such change in the political personnel of the Senate at the next session, even as will enable the Senate to pass or agree upon a tax bill.

Mr. HILL. That is my view.

Mr. GEORGE. With the acknowledged inability on the part of the present Senate and on the part of the next Senate to pass any revenue bill to increase our receipts, does the Senator propose that we must get in the condition and remain in the condition during all the next Congress, two years beyond this, of relying upon the act of 1875 as the means of procuring revenue to pay the expenses of the Government?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the situation is indeed a grave one. If we are running behind at a rate of $30,000,000 for annual expenses, which is about the figure, and with the large appropriations made by this Congress in pending bills in addition, and you can not agree upon a tariff measure necessary to produce it, and I think you can not, notwithstanding the offers and professions which have been made here, then I say, sir, that it is prudent—it is, in fact, the height of wisdom—to leave upon the statute book the measure which gives you authority to redeem the greenbacks which may be presented, and after they are redeemed gives you funds with which you can legitimately pay the expenses of the Government. In other words, if you can not agree upon a tariff bill to get your revenues, shall you stop the Government or shall you borrow? It is honorable to borrow, and notwithstanding the stabs that have been made at the credit and honor of the Government it can borrow and borrow cheaply even now. Therefore I say there are but two courses to pursue. Either provide your revenues upon the one hand, or if you are so situated politically that it can not be done, then borrow your money. But I would not strike off from the statute book the only authority you have got to keep your Government afloat.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator from New York allow me a question at that point?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. PEFFER. Does the Senator from New York pretend to represent the views of the Administration in the remarks he has just made?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I supposed that even the Senator from Kansas comprehended my position upon this floor. I have repeatedly said that I do not assume to represent the present Administration. I sustain that Administration when I think it is right; I oppose it when I think it is wrong. I am not identified with its interests. I am not even consulted by it.

Mr. President, I fail to see the significance of the question "whether I represent the Administration." Sir, Senators upon this side of the Chamber, with whom my personal relations are the most pleasant, and I hope they will continue to be, although we differ upon this subject, I have seen vote for appropriation after appropriation for which I could not conscientiously vote, piling up enormous appropriations and pointing to the very fund in the Treasury realized from the sale of bonds as the place where they are going to get the money to meet the appropriations.

Sir, if I represented this Administration, if I were the President of the United States, which I suppose, Mr. President, from the present outlook, I never will be [laughter], I would tell my party friends, "If you do not give the Treasury some relief I will stop paying out the moneys to meet these appropriations." I would exercise the discretionary power vested in the Chief Magistrate in regard to these appropriations for great public works, and I would stop them until Congress should provide moneys necessary for them and necessary for redemption also. I would not let the paper currency which was provided by my predecessors in office, and for the existence of which I was not responsible, go to protest. I would take the last dollar in the Treasury—I was almost going to say rightfully or wrongfully—to redeem such currency. I would maintain the honor and credit of the Government at all hazards, and I should expect the people to sustain me.

Sir, I misjudge the character and the courage and the firmness of the present President of the United States if he does not take substantially that position. I believe, sir, that he will insist at all hazards, at all risks, at all times, that our paper currency of the country shall be redeemed in coin, in something of value, in something that labor and wealth will produce; and he will see that when we declared away back in 1869 that the Government would redeem its paper money in coin such pledge shall be kept. Mr. President, I would not sanction the programme of refusing to raise adequate revenue, of refusing to strengthen our necessary reserve, and then tolerate extravagant appropriations and spend them for the benefit of particular localities. I would stop these appropriations, as he has a right to do, although undoubtedly, sir, reluctant to do it.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from New York tell me that if he were President of the United States he would stand by the doctrine expressed by him in his speech at Elmira, N. Y., December 4, 1892, to pay out silver coin to bring it to a parity, or favor the free coinage of silver to bring it there, as he said in that speech it would do, and that nothing else would do it but that?

Mr. HILL. Is that your question?

Mr. BUTLER. That is the question.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, all the information the Senator has upon the silver question he seems to have derived from that Elmira speech. I will simply say to the Senator——

Mr. BUTLER. I want to say to the Senator from New York that it is very good doctrine and I am sorry that the Senator will not stand by it. He was a candidate for President then. He said a few days ago that the South had declared for Grover Cleveland and the free coinage of silver; that they did not get the free coinage of silver, but they got Grover Cleveland.

Mr. HILL. That is ancient history.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems if they had gotten DAVID BENNETT HILL they would not have gotten free coinage.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, a word about that Elmira speech. Every time I rise to speak, or somebody else does, my friend from North Carolina grabs that Elmira speech. "Did the Senator from New York say this?" "Did the Senator from New York say that?" He absolutely threatened the other day to put that Elmira speech in the RECORD. Let me tell my dear, good friend from North Carolina I myself put that Elmira speech in the RECORD a year or two ago, and it is there now.

Mr. BUTLER. Then you are right on the record.

Mr. HILL. It will stand. It has nothing inconsistent in it with any position that I have taken here to-day. Study it, my good friend, and you will understand the silver question a great deal better than you do now. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There must be order in the galleries.

Mr. HILL. Now, Mr. President, here is the situation: Last evening when this bill was moved I recognized the fact that probably a majority of the Senate desired to pass it, probably at this session. I thought it would be unwise to take it up. The moot discussion which has been spoken of by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] I presumed would be inaugurated; perhaps nothing new could be said upon the subject; and I was going to suggest that possibly some arrangement might be made by which a vote might be had upon it. But the moment I proceeded to make a single suggestion the impetuous Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] jumped to the front and would not let me say a single word, and I concluded that I would take a course whereby I would be enabled to say something, if not last night, at least to-day.

Now, if the Senate desires to pass this measure, well and good; it has the power to do so. We all know the complexion of the other body; we all know the views of the President of the United States. It can not become a law. I do not think it is a wise measure, my Democratic friends, and I speak to you in all candor. I do not think it is a good measure on which to go before the people. It actually injures the silver cause. It has nothing to do specially with the silver cause. With the free coinage of silver to-morrow secured, as I have explained, you will still have to get the money with which to redeem your paper currency, and you have got to get that money, not by the free coinage of silver, because the silver belongs to the men who own the bullion—you have got to get that silver or you have got to get that gold from taxation, and if you can not agree upon a tariff bill, you have got to get it under the law of 1875.

Now, shall we go to the country upon this proposition? A majority of the Democrats upon this side of the Chamber, I regret to say, want us to go to the country on a proposition upon which we can not get a solitary vote in the Northern States. The old Democratic State of New York, which was Democratic and I hope it will be Democratic again, stood by our good friends in the South and West in all the fights they made in the past for their rights and endeavored to sustain the Democratic cause. We are asked now to go to the country with a majority of Democrats sustaining such a measure as this to repeal the last piece of legislation left with which to sustain the honor and credit of the Government. Do you expect us, with such a measure, to keep up our party in the Northern States? It is clearly unwise legislation. It is foolish legislation. It is unnecessary legislation. It is a Populist measure, and you have espoused it.

Mr. President, it is the height of folly. It is 1860 and 1861 over again. It will surely divide the old Democratic party as it was divided in the past. I am not now in this part of my argument complaining of your advocacy of the free coinage of silver. It is a question which, I have frankly stated over and over again, is a matter about which good men may honestly differ, but I do think and feel that it is a mistake to plant ourselves upon the issuance of an irredeemable paper currency and call ourselves hard-money Democrats. No, no, Mr. President, we have enough to contend against in the North now, with a tariff bill which cuts down the revenues of your Government greater than was ever anticipated. We have hard enough work to keep up the old Democratic party in the North without having this legislation imposed upon us. It makes my friend from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] smile. Usually, with that sober countenance of his, he listens to all we have to say, but when I picture the fact that the old Democratic party can not stand this strain he even indulges in a smile. Of course it suits the Populists. Just such measures suit those who want to destroy the Democratic party.

Now, Mr. President, what good will it do? Why, it is said we are making a record. Yes, that is true. We are making a record, such as it is. It is a record which will bring dishonor and defeat. Our friends would have us pass this bill and go into the fall campaign in the months of August, September, and October with the greenbacks presented at your Treasury repudiated. With such a result we could not carry a single State in this Union. Talk about previous follies of the party; talk about our tendencies toward greenbackism; this would be the worst step ever taken, Mr. President. The Democratic party can stand a good deal, but it can not stand this. We must see to it that when the notes of the Government, for which its honor is pledged, are presented for payment they shall be met—met in the coin of the Government; met in hard money, and redeemed. That is the Democratic theory. That is the true theory of our Government. That is the honest policy. It is the only policy we can pursue.

Mr. BAKER. Will the Senator from New York yield to me a moment to make a brief statement with reference to the bill?

Mr. HILL. Yes, I yield for a few moments.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this bill appears to be harmless upon its face; but at the present time and under existing circumstances I regard it as one of the most dangerous bills ever presented to any legislative body.

It is quite evident that on the 4th day of March, 1897, we shall have a Republican President, Major McKinley, or some other equally good, honored, and trusted Republican. And in order to maintain the honor and credit of the country it is essential that we have sufficient revenue to pay the current expenses of the Government. It is admitted by all parties represented in this body that the Gorman-Wilson bill does not produce revenues sufficient to pay ordinary current expenses; that under such bill there is, and will be so long as it remains on the statute book, a deficiency of from fifty million to one hundred million of dollars annually in the national revenues. And no method is provided with which to raise money to supply this deficiency. The Senate of the United States, by its action at this session, has refused to place upon the statute book any law increasing the revenues, although Democrats, Populists, and Republicans alike admit that we need more revenue.

The Democratic Senators, the Populist Senators, and five silver Republican Senators have gone into the RECORD as opposed to any tariff legislation. Thirty-nine Democrats, six Populists, and five free-coinage silver men have voted against tariff legislation. These Senators combined constitute a large majority of this body and dominate all legislation, and that they will continue so to conduct themselves I have no doubt; and if they do, and the President is shorn of all power to sell bonds to raise money to protect the credit of the nation, then bankruptcy and repudiation are inevitable.

Under existing conditions and circumstances this bill, if enacted into a law, will be, in my judgment, the greatest crime of the nineteenth century. The years of sorrow and trouble through which we have and are now passing will be nothing in comparison to the evils the legislation proposed by this bill will produce.

A government long without revenue can not exist; a free people will not long submit to such condition. Revolution will come, peaceably, I hope—forcibly, if necessary—to maintain the honesty and integrity of the nation. This bill attacks the financial honesty and integrity of the Government; it foreshadows panic, disturbance, and repudiation.

It at once seeks to unsettle the finances of this country and to destroy the equality of our circulating medium, composed of gold, silver, and paper money, all as good as gold.

We need money to maintain the credit of the nation. This bill seeks to destroy the only method left to maintain the credit of the nation.

That Congress, as now constituted, will not cooperate in raising sufficient revenue to pay the expenses of the Government has been established by the deliberate act of the Senate; and that it will not maintain the present monetary system is apparent by the advocacy of the present bill by free-silver Democrats, free-silver Republicans, and paper-money Populists.

For the reasons herein given I shall cast my vote against this bill.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question before he closes. Does the Senator from Kansas approve of the issue of bonds by the Government under the present Administration?

Mr. BAKER. I will answer that question in this way: When I first came to the Senate of the United States at the present session I would have voted for this measure, because I then was under the impression and thoroughly believed that the Republican party, aided and assisted by a sufficient number of patriotic men from the other side, would place upon the statute book a revenue law that would give us the money requisite to pay the current expenses of the Government. When I saw that effort defeated, when I saw the Senator from Colorado and four other Republicans joining their forces with the free-silver Democracy and refusing to take up any tariff legislation, then I changed my mind upon the subject. As I believe that there will be a Republican President in 1897, and that we must have revenue in order to carry on the expenses of the Government or else go into shame, disgrace, and bankruptcy, I changed my mind, and I am now in favor of leaving this little vestige of power where it exists, because when that time comes the Democratic party and the ardent free-silver men will combine again and hold up this great Government and say it shall have no legislation at all. For these reasons I am in favor of leaving this little vestige of power right where it is now.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas one more question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will suspend for a moment. The Chair is compelled to call attention, under the rule, to the order of business. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, and there being no unfinished business and no special order, under the ninth rule the consideration of the Calendar is in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of the bill that is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to take up Senate bill 1341, the bond bill, which has been under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1341.

Mr. HILL. Is it proper to take me off the floor in the midst of my speech?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it certainly was the duty of the Chair, under the rule, so to do.

Mr. HILL. The clock is to blame, not the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir; the clock was right. So was the Chair. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. WILSON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], but will transfer that pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON]. If the Senator from Utah were present, he would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], but I transfer my pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], but I am informed that he is in favor of this measure, and I therefore exercise my discretion and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which I transfer to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEAR. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and vote "nay."

Mr. BRICE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. I presume he would vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER. I will state that my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] would vote "yea," if he were here.

Mr. BRICE. I am informed that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] is not paired, and I will transfer my pair to that Senator and vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], who is not in the Chamber, and vote "yea."

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have recorded my vote, but I inquire if the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. DANIEL. Then I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Washington voted "yea" on the former vote.

Mr. STEWART. He voted "yea."

Mr. DANIEL. Very well; I will let my vote stand.

Mr. BATE (after having voted in the affirmative). Is the vote of the Senator from Utah [Mr. BROWN] recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that his name is not recorded.

Mr. BATE. Then I will withdraw my vote. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the fact that the Senator from Utah [Mr. BROWN] voted "yea" on the former vote.

Mr. BATE. I am informed that the Senator from Utah voted "yea." I will then let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Allen,	Daniel,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Roach,
Bacon,	Dubois,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Bate,	George,	Pasco,	Teller,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, before this pleasant interruption which we have had, we were discussing the question as to the probability of agreeing upon a patriotic, nonpartisan tariff bill, and I expressed some apprehension that possibly we might not be able to agree. The question then occurs, if we shall be unable to agree upon any increase of revenue in the immediate future, and this bill should become a law, what would be done in regard to the redemption of United States notes? Mr. President, I pause for a reply from any friend of this bill who wants to explain the situation in which the Government would be, and what course would then be pursued.

Mr. PLATT. I am not a friend of the bill, but does not the Senator understand that the object of this bill is to prevent the possibility of the redemption of United States notes in gold?

Mr. LINDSAY. Or at all.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the same difficulty will exist of redeeming them in silver. It is not a question of redeeming them in gold or silver; it is a question of redeeming them at all.

Mr. PLATT. That is very true.

Mr. HILL. It is the question where you would get the silver, let alone where you would get the gold. The President of the United States could not issue silver bonds if this bill should pass. Assuming, then, that this bill is to pass Congress and become a law; assuming, as it has been clearly demonstrated, that you are to have no change in your revenue system for the next two years, which is clearly shown by the attitude of this Senate, what is to be done with the Treasury notes when they are presented for redemption?

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator allow me a question at that point?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. PEFFER. I submit to the Senator, in case the Secretary of the Treasury changes his present policy to one which is strictly legal, and proposes to redeem the greenbacks and Treasury notes with silver coin, in my judgment that would immediately stop all application for further redemption.

Mr. STEWART. We have $50,000,000 for that purpose.

Mr. HILL. The $50,000,000, I have already explained, will last but a short time. The difficulty with the explanation of the Senator from Kansas is that it does not explain. For whom does he speak? Does he speak for the holders of greenbacks?

Mr. PEFFER. No.

Mr. HILL. I think not. He has heretofore in this Chamber disclaimed the idea that he represented the holders of greenbacks, and now is he to step forward and say that they will not be presented for redemption? If they are presented, is the question I put to the Senator. The right to present them is an option which exists not with the Senator from Kansas; it exists with the owners of the greenbacks, and when they present them for redemption with your Treasury exhausted, and with neither silver nor gold, and no means to provide revenue, pray tell me what kind of a spectacle would then be presented? In what dilemma would the Government then be placed?

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me to read him a statement——

Mr. PEFFER. I ask permission to be heard for a moment.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Kansas seems to have the right of way.

Mr. PEFFER. I will yield to the Senator from Ohio in a moment, but what I wish to say comes in properly at this point.

The Senator from New York speaks about discretion and states that the discretion in this matter of redemption in one coin or the other belongs to the creditor. I insist, in the presence of the Senator from New York and in the presence of our history, that there is no such discretion allowed, and there never has been any such discretion allowed; that the discretion is upon the part of the Government and not upon the part of the holders of these notes. If I made a mistake in the use of the words before I beg pardon, but what I wish to say is this, that the debtor, when he has several different kinds of legal-tender money, has always had in banking history, in business history, in Government history, the right to determine for himself which he will offer in payment; that he may make his own selection and choose the money with which to pay. If that policy were adopted and the interests of the Government would prevail instead of the interests of the speculators and the gold gamblers, then this business of redeeming Treasury notes in gold would stop immediately, and the country would have no further trouble on this subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to read to the Senator from New York a statement in regard to the silver certificates.

The silver dollars in the Treasury are pledged specifically by law for the redemption of the silver certificates. The amount of standard silver dollars to-day in the Treasury is $363,590,000; the amount of standard silver dollars outstanding and in circulation among the people is $348,322,504, leaving only a margin of about $15,000,000. Those silver dollars are all pledged for the redemption of silver certificates alone, silver certificates being payable expressly in silver.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Ohio, if he will allow me, that we have bullion to the amount of $178,000,000 and more.

Mr. SHERMAN. Bullion purchased by the Treasury notes, which are outstanding.

Mr. TELLER. We have $55,000,000 of silver bullion, which does not represent notes or anything else; and under the system of redeeming the notes in gold there is no sense in maintaining that silver; but there is $55,000,000 of free silver bullion in the Treasury.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, a portion of the statement of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is a very fair one. All that the Government has——

Mr. TELLER. I would inquire what is not fair in it? The statement is absolutely true.

Mr. HILL. I was referring to the statement in reference to the seigniorage, so called; I mean that it is fair to this question involved. I did not mean to accuse the Senator of any unfairness. Of course he does not suppose I would. The proposition is this: For the purpose of redemption of any kind we have only, first, what we realize from revenue and, second, what we have on hand. That is a very clear proposition. From only two sources have we any redemption fund. First, what we have on hand, realized from revenues and from the sale of bonds, which will in the near future be exhausted by appropriations of the Government. No one denies that. In the second place, you can realize about $55,000,000 seigniorage, which, when coined, belongs to the Government. That is your capital, and that is all. When you use the seigniorage you have nothing left with which to redeem your Government obligations when your gold reserve and other moneys have been exhausted. Now, the question—and I state it again—is not a question of redeeming in gold or silver; it is a question of redeeming at all in either metal.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HILL. I will be more kind to the Senator than he was to me last evening. Yes; I will yield to him.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, we have in circulation nearly $350,000,000 now of silver certificates.

Mr. HILL. I would suggest to the Senator not to go clear back to the A B C of the question.

Mr. STEWART. I shall be brief. Those silver certificates remain in circulation and constitute the only good money we have out in circulation.

Mr. HILL. What is the amount?

Mr. STEWART. Nearly $350,000,000 of silver certificates now, which, as I say, is the only good money. It does not come back; it is not necessary to redeem it; it stays out among the people, and does, I think, three-fourths of the entire business of the country.

What would be the condition if we took away the royal prerogative of the Executive to carry on the Government by raising revenue through the issuance of bonds? What would be the situation? That is the question. In the first place, we know very well that silver certificates stay out; that they do not come in for redemption, because they are redeemable in silver. Greenbacks and Treasury notes are also redeemable in silver, and we could convert them into good money if we redeem in silver according to law.

We have now in the Treasury, I believe, about $114,000,000 of gold. We have in the Treasury, which it is the duty of the Secretary to coin, $55,000,000 worth of silver bullion. That would be a pretty good fund to start on and to pay out the silver first. The gold we have got there will last as long as the present law remains if it be kept there. But that is not all. Those silver certificates being such good money that when they come into the Treasury they can be converted by the Treasury, they can be exchanged for the silver itself, and the Government can take the current revenues ad libitum, as they come into the Treasury constantly, and pay out silver certificates, which are coming in daily. They can be exchanged by the Secretary for silver and the silver which is in the Treasury can be used in that way for the redemption of Treasury notes and greenbacks.

The resumption act provides, in the first instance, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem these greenbacks with any money in the Treasury which comes in by way of revenue and is applicable to the redemption of greenbacks. Having in the Treasury one hundred and ten or one hundred and fourteen millions of gold, having a surplus of $55,000,000 of silver bullion, and $35,000,000 more, making $90,000,000, we have over $200,000,000 of available coin for the redemption of outstanding greenbacks and Treasury notes. Inasmuch as a large portion of our revenue is paid in silver certificates, as they come in they are exchangeable at the counter for silver coin, and an abundance of silver coin is constantly coming into the Treasury in that way; and so you have got an endless chain of supply, an unlimited supply, as the revenues come in with which to redeem your greenbacks.

All this act proposes to do is to resume the function of Congress, which has been usurped by the Executive, to provide for the current revenues of the Government. How ridiculous the idea that it is unusual or prejudicial to the credit of this Government that the function provided in the Constitution shall be maintained, that the independence of the coordinate branches of the Government shall be observed, that Congress shall provide revenue; and the idea that Congress is not as patriotic as the Executive and will not attend to it, or that the credit and honor of the Government will not be preserved, is absurd. There can be no question about the duty of taking from the Executive this power, this dangerous power, the exercise of which by Charles I was the principal cause of his overthrow. The raising of revenue by the Secretary of the Treasury without the sanction of Congress was unheard of in a republican form of government until the recent usurpation.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I always like to listen to my friend from Nevada. He seems to believe what he says, while some of those, I think, who argue upon the other side hardly can be charged with that. I want to ask my friend from Nevada a question or two.

Mr. STEWART. Then I stand up.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator see any reasonable prospect of any new revenue legislation?

Mr. STEWART. At this session of Congress, to increase taxes?

Mr. HILL. At this or the next session.

Mr. STEWART. To increase taxes?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. We already have a surplus in the Treasury.

Mr. HILL. About what time will it be, does the Senator think, before we shall have any revenue legislation?

Mr. STEWART. We ought to go on for two or three years; but if it be necessary, before there is any more revenue legislation, with the present law we ought to draw out the $150,000,000 of surplus in the Treasury before we put any more in and take it away from the people. The Constitution has trusted Congress by providing that Congress shall have power over this matter.

Mr. HILL. I did not know but the Senator would be willing to fix some date, say two or three years hence, when there will be a likelihood of some additional tariff legislation.

Mr. STEWART. There will not be any necessity to raise more revenue during this century under the existing law. It will take the balance of the century to draw down the surplus to reasonable proportions. That is settled; and I think we can trust the Congress of the United States in the next century as well as we can trust ourselves.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, exactly how the Senator from Nevada is going to figure, with no increase of revenue for the next three or four years, with simply the amount of money we have on hand, and with the ordinary present revenues coming in from the sources which the Government has, that we are going to survive,

I can not see, because the amount of money in your Treasury will be substantially exhausted within the next year. That has already been demonstrated over and over again. Bear in mind that if this bill passes we can secure no borrowed money. All the money received by the Government must be from revenues; and I say within the next year your revenues will be exhausted.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator anticipate that the deficiency during the next year will be $170,000,000?

Mr. HILL. All the appropriations have not been yet made by this Congress, but the deficiency will be very large. I ask the Senator within what period does he himself think this fund will be exhausted?

Mr. STEWART. I think it will be about four or five years.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, my friend is very confident; but it will be but a very short period, under existing conditions, when, if greenbacks are presented, the gold reserve will be drawn down. My friend sees no difficulties or dangers to the country in that. Be that as it may, the point I am making is, that while the present deadlock continues, and it is likely to continue for the next year or so, and the Treasury funds become substantially exhausted, what will you do with the greenbacks which are presented? It is not a question of paying in silver. You will not have the silver with which to pay, because, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says, all the silver that you can possible procure, aside from taxation, is the $55,000,000 of seigniorage in the Treasury.

Mr. STEWART. Oh no.

Mr. HILL. What would you have on hand, then?

Mr. STEWART. We should have the silver certificates coming into the Treasury every day.

Mr. HILL. The silver certificates come in simply as part of your revenue that is all.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Precisely. That does not change the situation. The silver certificates must be redeemed in something, and the bullion in the Treasury, other than the seigniorage, is mortgaged for your silver certificates. It does not really belong to the Government. In other words, it is an even thing. They both represent the same thing. The bullion must meet the silver certificate and the silver certificate the bullion. It is not an available fund for the Government for purposes of redemption.

That, Mr. President, is the situation; and there is no Senator who will rise in his place and tell us what is to be done if this bill is passed when the present redemption moneys are exhausted and you have no new revenues coming into the Treasury.

Mr. PEFFER. I asked the Senator a question a moment ago—which I have no doubt he overlooked in the tumult we had here—whether or not in his opinion, if the Secretary of the Treasury should exercise his lawful discretion and say to the people, "We will redeem your greenbacks in silver when we have more silver than we have gold"—if the Secretary of the Treasury would exercise that discretion, if he were to pursue that course, does the Senator believe that there would be any drain upon the Treasury?

Mr. HILL. The difficulty is not as to the question of redemption in gold or silver; the difficulty is that when the Government is constantly running behind it becomes a mere question of time when all the redemption funds will be exhausted.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator either does not get my meaning or else he is evading an answer. I do not know which. The Senator himself can tell.

I put this proposition first, that the Secretary of the Treasury has the lawful discretion to redeem greenbacks and Treasury notes in silver whenever he wishes to do so in the interest of the Government. Now, I put the question directly to the Senator whether, in his opinion, if the Secretary were to pursue that policy and proposed to redeem these Government notes in silver, would not that course immediately have the effect to stop all runs upon the Treasury? If the Senator answers that question "Yea," then I ask whether or not the revenues which are now being received from year to year would not be sufficient for the next four or five years, at any rate, without a change of the tariff law?

Mr. HILL. The mere fact that the Secretary of the Treasury would announce that he was going to pay the greenbacks in silver would not affect the question one way or another. It is a question of funds, and not a question as to what particular coinage he shall pay in.

Mr. PEFFER. But, again, if this policy is pursued the greenbacks and the Treasury notes——

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me to put to him a question?

Mr. PEFFER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HILL. About how much are we annually running behind now?

Mr. PEFFER. I do not think we are running behind now. I think we are catching up, to use a schoolboy's expression—that our deficits from year to year are less than they have been in the past two or three years.

Mr. HILL. I will commend that statement to my friends on this side of the Chamber, who would be very glad to have that statement established as a fact. I have heard it disputed upon the other side.

Mr. PEFFER. The best authority in the world that we can have is the President of the United States, who has told us several times within the last year that it is not a question of revenue with the Treasury. The language in one of his messages, if I remember correctly, was this, that we have a comfortable surplus of some sixty-three millions on hand, but it is not gold, and the difficulty is as to gold. The President wants to pay greenbacks in gold.

Mr. HILL. The difficulty will not be with payments in gold or silver in the future. It is a question whether we shall have any adequate fund of either gold or silver. So long as we are running behind our ordinary expenses at the rate of $30,000,000 a year, and with appropriations that are being made here in excess of our revenues far beyond that sum, if we do not have more revenue it is a question of bankruptcy in the end, unless the President calls a halt and refuses to recognize these large appropriations as available at present.

Mr. PEFFER. Again, if the Senator from New York will allow me, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has repeatedly expressed the idea that the Secretary of the Treasury has the power, and has frequently exercised the power, and is doing it now, and some of his subordinates are doing the same thing, of refusing to make contracts where there is not sufficient revenue in the Treasury or in process of coming in with which to pay the indebtedness that would be incurred thereby.

Mr. HILL. I am very glad my friend has spoken about that. This, then, is his expectation, that if there is no new tariff legislation, if the revenue law does not produce more than it seems likely to produce now, and if there are no new receipts coming into the Treasury, the public works are to be suspended. That is the way you are going to get money with which to redeem your paper currency. That does it; that solves the difficulty, it is true. Is that the spectacle to which we are invited? Is that the feast to which we are asked to sit down? Is that the way this Government is to be continued, by cutting off the expenditures on account of appropriations which have been made?

Of course that is a remedy. All the President has to do is to stop all the works, to stop every appropriation, to absolutely dispense with them, although Congress has solemnly voted these moneys. What will the Senator's constituents say to that course? That may be the only course left for the Administration of this Government to pursue. That, Mr. President, of course can be done, and all these appropriations cut off. Then of course you will have moneys with which to redeem; but who expects to do that, Mr. President?

Mr. PEFFER. That would be better than selling bonds.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, it is not better than selling bonds. There is not a dollar of your bond money wasted. If there are public works to be constructed, and you have not got the revenue with which to construct them, you must borrow the money. Of course you must pay some interest upon it. You can not issue your irredeemable Treasury notes, as the Senator voted to do the other day. Of course it is an easy way when you want money to simply issue Treasury notes. That proposition was voted for by several Senators the other day, as though that was a remedy, as though those notes did not represent a debt, as though they had not to be met at some time in the future and be redeemed.

No, no, Mr. President; the stoppage of all the public works in this country will give you adequate moneys to redeem when the source of revenue from bonds shall be cut off. But is that the kind of administration you want? No, Mr. President. An Administration that would voluntarily follow that course must be driven from power.

Now, I appeal to my Democratic friends to observe what the Senator from Kansas, one of the leaders of the Populist party on this floor, wants us to do. He wants to crowd the Democratic party into the condition of cutting off the possibility of raising money by the issuance of bonds, and cutting off the revenues. Then he wants to stop the public works of the country. What show would we then stand against the Populist party or any other party in the Government? And yet some Democrats seem bent upon following just such a course as that, and think they are going to preserve and strengthen the Democratic party. It is folly. It is madness. It is political suicide.

Mr. PEFFER. If the Senator will allow me, he undertakes to state my view, and I have no object in view——

Mr. HILL. You have undoubtedly some patriotic policy in view.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator is in the habit of coming in between my sentences at such a point as to make them ridiculous.

Mr. HILL. I do not know anybody more to blame for that than the Senator himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEFFER. If the Senator will allow me for a moment, he assumes that my object is to destroy the Democratic party by dishonorable means. I do not want to destroy the Democratic party by such means.

Mr. HILL. I do not accuse the Senator of using dishonorable means.

Mr. PEFFER. I do desire to destroy the Democratic party, and I also desire to destroy the Republican party, but I want it to be done on high grounds, honorable grounds. I want the people themselves to take care of this thing. The old parties will in a very short time disintegrate. The Democratic party now is disintegrating on the money question. It is simply a question of time.

If the Senators who are represented in this matter by the distinguished Senator from New York and their friends would take the course laid down and advised by the Populist party, it would eventually redeem both the Democratic party and the Republican party and bring all the governing forces of the country back to where the fathers used them.

Mr. HILL. And then the millennium will come. [Laughter.] No, no, Mr. President, I do not accuse the Senator of endeavoring to destroy the Democratic party by any dishonorable means on his part; not at all. But he is not doing all this for fun. He has not that intense desire to serve the public that he wants us to believe. He is a shrewd Kansas politician, and a good one at that, and he thinks he can drive the Democratic party into a false and wrong position, that is all, and he is trying to do that; and therefore day after day he is speaking against bonds, bonds, bonds, and not a word about preserving the honor of the Government.

Not a word about insufficient revenue; not a word about the difficulties that confront this Administration. He asserts that this Administration is dishonoring the Government by its course, ruining the people, overtaxing them. Then he says that "we will not agree upon any revenue bill; we will prevent the issue of bonds, and then if you can not run the Government successfully, why, stop all your public works"; and then he expects us to appeal to the people for support. That is a fine scheme mapped out by the Populist Senators. Democratic Senators seem to be following in their lead and apparently expect to be sustained by the Democratic party. No, Mr. President, an unwise policy is sought to be pursued here by those who support this measure.

The other day the argument was made that it was wrong for the President to use the proceeds of the bond sales—that is, the redeemed greenbacks—to pay the current expenses of the Government. After you have used up the $50,000,000 seigniorage coined what would you do then to pay the expenses of your Government? There is no answer to that. There can not be any answer to it. I have suggested a way by which gentleman, if they want to, can stop the use, directly or indirectly, of any of the proceeds of the sales of bonds to pay the current expenses of the Government; and yet you will not adopt that course. You want to keep these greenbacks afloat. You want them issued and reissued. You want an irredeemable paper currency.

I suggested an amendment providing further that upon the redemption of any United States notes the Secretary of the Treasury shall not reissue the same. That settles it. If you object to the President using directly or indirectly the proceeds of bonds with which to pay the current ordinary expenses of the Government, then amend this bill by stopping the reissue of greenbacks, and that settles the question. No, no, Mr. President, they want the greenbacks to be reissued. Under existing law they compel the President to reissue them, and then they cut off the only means, except a limited and insufficient revenue, that he has to properly redeem them. The free coinage of silver does not settle this question of redemption at all, as I have repeatedly explained. It will not fill the coffers of the Treasury. It will simply enable the owners of silver bullion to take the bullion to the Treasury and get money therefor. It does not help the Government one penny. You can coin your seigniorage, and that is all.

Mr. President, as I have said before, there is not any prospect of tariff legislation being enacted—none whatever—now or in the near future. The same combination that prevents it or the same influences that have prevented it in the past will prevent it in the future. Therefore we must meet this question and meet it squarely. This is simply a scheme whereby the President of the United States shall be prevented from redeeming greenbacks as they are presented. That is all there is of it. It is repudiation, pure and simple and undisguised. It can not be evaded. Of course if you had revenues and plenty of them, then it could be done; but when your revenues are exhausted, your money on hand is exhausted, and you can not borrow money, your greenbacks must go unredeemed.

From a party point of view I object to this course. I do not wish to detain the Senate after I have expressed my views fully upon this question. If the Senate wants to pass the bill, it has a right to pass it, and I would not have objected last evening to a vote being had after I had made a few remarks if I had not been suddenly cut off by my impetuous friend the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who seems to think he is in league with this side of the Chamber, and he has actually taken a seat here on the Democratic side. My Populist friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] announced that this is a Populist measure. My friend from Colorado is over here getting Democratic votes to sustain a Populist measure.

Mr. PEFFER. We always have pickets in a fight.

Mr. HILL. They are trying to pick off the Democrats in the fight. That is the business of the Populists. I do not blame them for being over here trying to disorganize our party, trying to make them follow false gods and false teachers, but I object to Democrats going off and following these men, crazy as they are upon the subject of finance. A man may sincerely believe in the free and unlimited coinage of silver and not believe in this bill. He is not obliged to believe in the pending bill. The most earnest friends of silver can consistently oppose the bill. A sincere friend of silver can well say, "These obligations of the Government must be redeemed in something."

If the revenues are insufficient and there is no prospect of tariff legislation, why forbid the President from borrowing? What will be the result? He can well say from his standpoint that at every opportunity he will vote for the free and unlimited coinage of silver. That is a different thing. That relates to establishing a new system of finances for the country. That affects the volume of money. That affects our general business relations. It may directly or indirectly aid business. That may be true. I am not now going to discuss the silver question proper. But free coinage will not bring you revenues with which to take care of this large volume of paper currency which is afloat.

As I said at the outset, there are those who think that paper money should not be redeemed. There are those who opposed any specie resumption in 1875. There are those who think that bonds are an invention of Wall street. There are those who think that all the money in the country is owned by Wall street instead of by the people. It is useless to address argument to such men. But this bill presents an entirely different question from the gold and silver question proper. It is a question of paper money. It is a question of taking care of that paper money. It is a question of keeping the paper money at a parity with your gold and your silver. You must always keep a fund sufficient to redeem those notes whenever they are presented, and when you cut off these sources of redemption it is repudiation, unless at any time when a man presents one of these notes you are prepared to give him coin in place of it. That is the true position; that is the right position; that is the correct position; that is the true Democratic doctrine.

I have detained the Senate longer than I expected upon this question. If Senators think this is a proper bill, they will exercise their own judgment in voting for it. I wash my hands of the whole business. I think it was unwise to inject it at this session. I think it was unwise for the Democrats to support it in view of the present delicate situation of the party upon the financial question. I have avoided as far as I could any discussion of the gold-and-silver question proper, which I say is not involved in this matter. We have difficulties enough to contend with without adding this.

Mr. President, let it once be understood that the party to which we belong is attempting to cripple the business of the country by not maintaining a sufficient fund with which to redeem the paper currency, and there is an end to our prospect of success. We may as well count the days until we shall retire permanently from power. Sir, all my ambitions and all my hopes are involved in the success of that party to whose support I have given the best days of my life. It is said I represent in part a great financial center of the country. I beg to remind my Democratic friends that the city of New York but once in its recent history has given a Republican majority, and that was upon a local issue. In the days of our distress, when other localities disappointed our expectations, the great stronghold of Democracy has been the city of New York. It has saved the country by its immense majorities on many an occasion. Thousands and thousands of business men, its bankers and its merchants, have maintained their fidelity to the Democratic cause. They differ with you upon the details of the financial question, but they are loath to believe that you are in favor of irredeemable money. Do not attempt to convince them that they are wrong.

Mr. President, we can not maintain our party in the North—in the Middle or Eastern States—upon any such theory. Let it be understood that we shall provide ample funds at all times with which to redeem our paper currency, and then we will solve the gold and silver question satisfactorily thereafter, and we can maintain the grand old Democratic party, which in the history of the country has done so much for its glory and its honor.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, we should consider this question as if we were the only legislative body, the supreme and final authority, in the United States. It is altogether wrong and quite useless to be thinking of some cooperative body or of some executive officer who shall remedy the wrong we do. We are responsible, and shall be held to be responsible. We shall deserve just as much of glory or of infamy as if we alone had passed and executed such a law.

Now, what is this great deliberative body, which has managed to keep the respect of the country for a hundred years, about to do by the coming vote? What is the situation? This is the bill:

That the issuance of interest-bearing bonds of the United States for any purpose whatever without further authority of Congress is hereby prohibited.

It is a short, absolute, sweeping, thorough bill. What are the obvious facts, that need not be dwelt upon? Everybody, every intelligent boy, knows that the revenue is largely insufficient, and that it has been for some years. In the next place, the Senate refuses even to consider a revenue bill. I am disregarding party lines. I am talking about the Senate and not the Democratic party or the Populist party or the Republican party. The Senate refuses to consider even for a moment a revenue bill.

In the third place, the Senate is about to forbid the Government from borrowing money for any purpose whatever. Does anybody need to be told what these things mean? Now, the Senate, I say, can not avoid the responsibility which will remain upon us; and, in my judgment, if we carry this bill through, whether it becomes a law or not, it will be one of the foul spots—the foul spot, the only foul spot, I may say—on the record of this great body, that in the opinion of the Senate it is for the good of the country that the bill shall become a law.

I positively, with all respect for my honored colleagues, can not believe that that is the real belief of the Senate. It is horrible; it is altogether impossible. I would resent the charge if I were on the other side of the globe and heard somebody say the Senate was about to do such a thing. We might just as well say that we will not pay bonds as to say we will not issue bonds; for we can not redeem existing bonds; we can not pay them without issuing others, for our revenue is deficient.

Now, Mr. President, this is repudiation—and nobody has shown it better than has the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]—this is bankruptcy; this is anarchy; it would be infamy.

I have nothing to add, desiring only to place on record my total and earnest disapproval of the measure.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I have listened to-day to two of the most extraordinary addresses I have ever heard in my life. I have heard a three hours' argument made by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] to the effect that it is the duty of the Government to borrow money to carry on its ordinary expenditures. I have heard a plea from him and an impassioned exhortation by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] denouncing the effort to take out of the hands of one man in this country the extraordinary power to enslave its whole population, that the greed of foreign and domestic money changers may be satisfied.

It has been seriously maintained in this body that the American people are incapable of sending representatives to their Legislature who will have the integrity and the capacity and the patriotism to levy taxation to obtain revenue to carry on the Government. It is assumed and gravely assumed by the distinguished Senator from New York that the present Congress, the Congress to come, and the one to come after that, and all the other Congresses, I suppose, will pass no law for the raising of revenue by taxation to meet the current expenses of the Government, and it is argued that this extraordinary power must remain upon the statute book, allowing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell a thousand or two thousand millions of bonds, or three or five thousand million dollars of bonds, the limit only to be defined by the measure of the greed of those who wish to have investments in the blood and sweat of the American people.

Mr. President, if such a scheme had been proposed a hundred years ago to our fathers, they would have denounced it in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Texas allow me?

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator think that the present Congress is likely to agree upon some revenue bill?

Mr. MILLS. It does not make any difference about what the present Congress is going to do. If the present Congress does not do its duty to the people of the United States, the people are still sovereign and every element of their power is unwasted, and they will send to Congress those who will do it.

Mr. President, when the Constitution was formed it placed the power in the Congress to lay and collect revenues for what purpose? To pay the debts, to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the Union. One of the grandest of all the statesmen this country ever produced said he would make but one amendment after the Constitution was formed, and that was to take from the Government of the United States altogether the power to borrow money. Why is it that the Senator from New York and the Senator from Connecticut do not help us to lay and collect some duties, some excises, in order to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States? Why do they not support propositions to raise revenue by taxation to carry on the Government, and why have both of them and the forces behind them opposed at all times all efforts to lay just and equitable duties and excises upon the property-owning people of the United States to help to support the burdens of this Government?

The Senator from New York has been a conspicuous advocate and defender of the moneyed interests of this country. He refused to vote for the tariff bill which is now upon the statute books. He would not vote for an income tax. The Senator from Connecticut would not vote for an income tax. He would not vote to put an internal-revenue tax on manufactured articles which brought in a hundred and thirty-odd million dollars a year during the last years of the war and just after it was over; but it was swept away. It was said that it was an inquisitorial tax, because it struck the wealth of this country. I will vote with him to-day and every day that I stay here, and I will vote with the Senator from Connecticut every day to put a direct tax on these protected manufactures and take a part of the protected price from those goods and put it into the public Treasury. But I will not get any support from the Senator from Connecticut, nor will I get the vote of my distinguished friend the Senator from New York. They will not vote for any tax on wealth. They will pile the tax to exhaustion on consumption, which falls on the poor people of this country, which falls by indirection, so that they do not see it when it comes. They only know there are hard times. They only know there is a want of employment for labor. They can not see how the blow is coming, but it comes because this is the only Government on earth which excuses all wealth from taxation and puts the whole burden upon the backs and shoulders of the laboring people of the country.

Mr. HILL. I understood the Senator from Texas to say that I would not second his efforts to pass a proper revenue bill. I think that is the charge, is it not?

Mr. MILLS. Let the Senator make his charge.

Mr. HILL. Is not that it in substance?

Mr. MILLS. Let the Senator make his charge, whatever it is, and I will answer it.

Mr. HILL. I am asking if that is not the charge.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know what the charge is. Let the Senator himself make it.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the Senator whether in his patriotism he would be willing to vote for a duty on wool, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] said he would?

Mr. MILLS. I do not want to vote for a duty on wool, and I do not want to vote for a duty on woolen goods.

Mr. HILL. That shows the difficulty there is in agreeing upon our own side.

Mr. MILLS. No, the Senator is not talking about me. He is talking about the Senator from Mississippi. He is avoiding the issue.

Mr. HILL. I am simply showing the difficulty of agreeing upon a tariff bill and the unlikelihood of any bill being passed at this session or the next session of Congress.

Mr. MILLS. Very well. There is just as much difference between the Senator from New York and the Senator from Mississippi as there is between him and myself. We differ about those things. The Senator from Mississippi feels that wool ought to be taxed. I do not, and I have my reasons for it. I know very well that if you put a tax on wool, you have to put what is called a compensatory duty on woolen goods; and I know the whole of it goes to the manufacturer and that the woolgrower does not get a cent of it, and he never has.

The Senator from Mississippi perhaps does not think so. He has not investigated the question as much as I have. It does not occur to him that if we put a tax on wool we have to raise woolen goods in the same proportion. If you do not do it, and permit wool to come in untaxed and woolen goods to come in untaxed, you destroy all the woolen manufactures in this country, and our wool will have to be exported to a foreign market to be manufactured, and instead of having the advantage over the foreign woolgrower that he has to pay the cost of transportation to the United States in order to compete with us, we shall have to pay the cost of transportation to the foreign market to compete with him there.

Mr. GRAY. It all falls on the consumer.

Mr. MILLS. I do not want to be drawn off to these side questions.

All this most remarkable plea, all this most revolutionary and un-American plea, for bond sales are based upon the assumed proposition that you can not pay the Treasury notes of the United States in anything but gold, notwithstanding they are made payable in coin by the declaration of law. It is said if we pay in silver the silver will soon be exhausted. We have had day by day for months, for a year, a surplus of some twenty-five or thirty million standard silver dollars in the Treasury, over and above all the outstanding silver certificates, which may be applied in the redemption of these notes; and, as I said once before, $1,000,000 is enough.

Do you suppose, Mr. President, or does any other sensible man suppose, that the holders of the greenback notes will present them for redemption in silver? The greenback is every bit as good in the whole circulation of this country as the silver dollar. What object could there be in the exchange? There would be an object in asking for gold. Paper is more convenient than silver, and that is one of the first requisites of circulation. Nobody will come to the Treasury to exchange a Treasury note, which a man can put in his vest pocket, for a thousand dollars in silver that he will have to hire a conveyance to transport. No, sir; that is not in the play. What he wants is gold, and he wants the gold because the Government has not got it. He wants the gold because he can compel the Government to sell him bonds. He wants the gold because if he can get the Government to agree that he shall be paid in gold alone he can compel the Government to pay him interest, and he can secure a profitable investment for his idle money; and for large capital there is no such investment as the bonds of an honest government, a rich government, and a powerful and prosperous people like ours.

Mr. President, does it not seem a most absurd contention on the part of the Senator from New York and those who agree with him that these notes must be redeemed in gold and gold alone, and the power to sell bonds for gold shall remain upon the statute books in order to provide the country with revenue for its current administration, when it has been denounced to us by high authority as an endless chain; that it takes the gold out of the Treasury; that it puts back the gold again when the bonds are sold, and the endless chain puts out the gold again, and day by day and month by month and year by year this monumental pile is heaped upon the shoulders of the American people and upon their children, born and unborn, in order to constitute an investment to the bondholders, foreign and domestic? It does not serve the purpose for which it is contended here. The President has said to us that he does not need any money for current expenditures. He has said that he had a comfortable surplus. I do not agree with him. I agree that money is needed. At one time it seemed as if the deficit was falling away and that we would come to a par between expenditures and receipts by the 30th of June, 1895. But that has been dissipated, and we do need more revenue to meet the current expenditures of the Government. If this Congress does not afford it the next one will. The people will speak, and speak so as to be heard, and speak so as to be obeyed. If they do not, then all of our theories about the capacity of the people for self-government will have been exploded, when they permit their Government to fall because it has not energy enough in its legislative branch and has not power and virtue enough in the constituency to send men to Congress who will make the proper levies of taxation and appropriation to run the Government.

But, Mr. President, it is a strange sort of contention for a Democrat on this floor to become the enthusiastic advocate of bonds. I was prepared to see the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] get up and denounce as repudiation the effort to repeal this most extraordinary war power placed upon our statute books, that gives to one man the power at his pleasure to enslave the whole nation, because by the sale of bonds for thirty years, as he has been doing, he can sell a thousand million or ten thousand million dollars' worth; and there would be a cry of repudiation, indeed, if the people could not pay the interest and pay the principal of that debt. But the Democratic people who originated the party to which the Senator from New York and myself belong began early in this century to teach to their children and to teach to the people of the United States the great evil of a bonded debt. They have told us that one generation has no right or power to bind another; that each generation comes upon the earth and is entitled to its enjoyment as long as it lasts, but that it must leave the earth to its successors unencumbered.

They have told us of the facility and warned us against the evil of increasing the bonded indebtedness. The bonded indebtedness of this country in the earlier stages of the Republic was paid rapidly. The bonds ran for only short periods, and it was made the duty of the legislature to lay and impose a tax consecrated to the extinguishment of that debt within a reasonable time and emancipate the American people. But, strange to say, when one century has gone, we see rising in the Senate of the United States a great leader of the Democratic party, who tells us it is one of the main features of the Democracy that we must obtain the money to support the current Administration of the Government by selling interest-bearing bonds, and argues to say that we can not pass a tariff-tax measure; that we can not pass an internal-revenue-tax measure; that we can not pass any measure of taxation that raises revenue of any kind at all; that we are utterly incapable; and assuming that as a fact, he labors for three mortal hours to impress upon the Senate of the United States the importance of selling bonds to meet the current Administration of the Government and continue to do it. If we should adopt that policy, the fool killer ought to be turned loose on the Senate; we are unworthy of the position we occupy here; we are unworthy to be called Senators by a free American people; and the American people will not be long in discovering that we are unworthy to hold the position to which they have accredited us.

I am not to be alarmed, Mr. President, by the denunciations of the Senator that this is Populist doctrine. This was the doctrine of the Democratic party before the Populist party was in the egg-shell, before it was ever dreamed of. It was advocated by Democrats eighty years ago—sixty, fifty, forty, thirty, twenty years ago; and it has come down to us as good American doctrine, the doctrine of the people. I am not to be driven away from the cardinal doctrines of free government and just government by the characterization of the Senator from New York that I am following the leadership of the Populists. The Populist people I do not think are entirely beyond the hope of recovery. They do some things and they advocate some things, and many things, to which I disagree, but they do occasionally fall in line with some good old-fashioned Democratic doctrine, and whenever they do I am willing to meet them and to share with them the honors of carrying into effect the Democratic policies of our fathers. The Populist people do not believe in irredeemable national-bank notes; they do not believe in a currency issued by corporations for the benefit of corporations; they do not believe in giving to corporations the power to contract and expand the currency. They sat at the feet of Democracy and learned in those lessons the doctrine of the fathers of Democracy. It was the doctrine of Andrew Jackson, and it was the doctrine before Andrew Jackson. Yet, with all the strong denunciation and the long denunciation of irredeemable paper money by the Senator from New York, he confined himself to the Treasury notes and never once spoke about the irredeemability of national-bank circulation. Is not that as irredeemable as the Treasury notes? It is redeemable by law in the Treasury note, and if the Treasury note is irredeemable, the bank note that is redeemable in an irredeemable note must be irredeemable, too.

Yet the Senator did not give us the benefit of his opinion upon the subject of national-bank notes. The Senator wants a monumental national debt. He wants it as a pedestal, as a foundation, upon which to erect a mammoth and monumental system of national banking in this country and turn the whole circulation of the country into the hands of corporations with the power to contract and expand as much as they please and when they please, and they always will please whenever it is to the interest of their pockets either to expand or contract, to expand and put prices up and contract and tear them down, and sell out the country and pocket the profits of the transaction. Yet there is no condemnation of that. He was as "gentle as any sucking dove" when he was talking about irredeemable paper money.

Now, the great value of the Treasury note is that the power to contract and expand is in grasp of the representatives of the people. It is a power that can not be exerted without the representative feeling the strong cord of responsibility that ties him back to his constituency. He has got to be called to account for his action in that respect. But the national bank corporations are responsible to nobody but to the stockholders. They want to drive the silver out of circulation; they want to drive the greenbacks out of circulation; and then they will occupy the whole field with gold as the only basis. But tell me when in the history of this country the banks did not drive the gold out too? When, in the history of this country, since banks have been created with a power to contract and expand the currency at their will, did it not drive both metals out of circulation and give the people wildcat currency worth 10, 15, 20, 30 cents, sometimes nothing, in the dollar? Prices go away yonder and then they commence contracting. They hold their annual association. They agree about what they are going to do. They understand their business thoroughly. It is a very intelligent corps of people. They do not fight upon that question because they know that they are very vulnerable upon it, and they direct all their shots on the credit of the country, pleading for the maintenance of the national credit; demanding bonds in order to keep up the credit of the country.

Suppose you carry on the business of selling bonds until you can not pay what you owe; you can not pay your principal, and your bonds go to protest. Your people are too poor because the whole wealth of the country is excused from taxation. Not a dollar rests upon land, not a dollar upon personal property, not a dollar upon railroad and bank stocks, and all those things, in order to support an Administration that requires from five to six hundred million dollars a year. It all falls upon consumption, on food, on raiment, on shelter. This whole burden falls on the strong arm of the laborer, the mechanic, the cabinetmaker, the blacksmith, and the farmer at his plow.

It is a very easy thing to get up in the Senate of the United States and talk in great, round, eloquent numbers about public credit while you are enslaving the people. What is all this aggregation of wealth in the East, from whence the Senator from Connecticut comes, who denounces our action here as repudiation? His face was almost swollen with rage while he denounced the effort to emancipate ourselves from this most extraordinary power as an act of repudiation. How is it that that is the money-lending section of the country? Is it as rich as your delta of the Mississippi? Is it as rich as your fertile lands in Alabama? Texas raises about one-third of the cotton of the whole United States and one-fourth of the whole world, and yet with all of these advantages she can not accumulate wealth; but New England, New York, the great manufacturing centers, are the money-lending and the banking sections of the country.

They have got the money. It is through legislation, it is by the infamous system of taxation that excuses the wealth and property of the country and puts all the burden upon labor, that destroys our markets and grants them a monopoly to sell at exorbitant prices. How sickened we are occasionally when we see an account in our newspapers of some American girl being sent to Europe to be sold for a title, despising the institutions of the country where she was reared, despising the people from whose pockets she has been enriched, so that she becomes an object of sale, her father and mother exposing her to the highest bidder all over Europe to be bid for by dukes and counts and earls and nobodies, whoever they may be, who have a title. All this business of piling up great bonds and concentrating great wealth and establishing a system here by which the poor are made poorer and the few are made richer is tending all the time to undermine the institutions of the country. It is tending to let down the whole great democratic fabric of this Government, and it is one that as long as I stay in public life I shall oppose with all my might.

Mr. President, all this extraordinary devotion to the enslavement of the American people by piling upon them interest bonds I would have expected from the other side of the Chamber—the men who come here to represent the great corporations, manufacturing and banking and others; but of the men who come here confessing the creed of equal and exact justice to all as the first and fundamental element of a Democrat, I am a little surprised that my distinguished friend from New York should be the advocate and defender of the system. It is the duty of the American people, through their representatives in the Senate and House, to pay their bonded debt and stop the interest as rapidly as possible. When my friend from Ohio gets up his filled-cheese bill, I give him notice now that I am going to test the sincerity of some of our people on this floor by offering to fill in a little more of that bill, and to put an internal-revenue tax on the manufactures of iron, and steel, and copper, and lead, and zinc, and all the metals, and cotton, and wool, and flax, and hemp, and jute. All these are protected. You have enormous duties levied upon the people that places an enormous amount of revenue in the pockets of these protected classes. I want you to pay some of them into the public Treasury, and there I want it to remain, pledged as a fund for the purchase and redemption of the bonded debt of the United States. We shall then see who is in favor of equal and exact justice to all; who is in favor of emancipating the people from this cancer (Jefferson called it a cancer) which is eating at the vitals of the people. The people want that debt paid. They want the interest stopped. They want the requirements of the sinking fund religiously observed until that debt is extinguished. They want to see the expenditures of this Government on account of its debt lessened, and all its expenditures lessened, and they want to see it come down to an honest, economical administration of public affairs, and the money to support it taken by a just system of taxation.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, in discussing this question it may be well to understand what the law and the facts are. That will have something to do with this question as well as rhetoric. By the law certain duties are imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury in the redemption of United States notes. I read now from the resumption act. After providing for resumption, or making it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem Treasury notes on the 1st day of January, 1879, the resumption act provides:

> And to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required, he is authorized to use any surplus revenues, from time to time, in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell, and dispose of at not less than par, in coin, either of the descriptions of bonds of the United States described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions, to the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect, and to use the proceeds thereof for the purposes aforesaid.

The act of 1890, under which the Sherman notes were issued, makes those notes redeemable in gold or silver coin at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the third section of the act declares that the Secretary of the Treasury shall coin sufficient of the bullion purchased under the act to provide for the redemption of the notes issued thereunder. So all the obligations of the United States are redeemable in coin.

The bonds are expressly payable in coin, principal and interest. It was so declared, ex industria, in the act of July 14, 1870. It was provided in that act that the bonds authorized therein to be issued should be paid in coin of the then standard value. The coin at that time consisted of silver dollars containing 412½ grains of standard silver, and the silver dollar was the unit of account at that time. The gold coin was of a larger denomination. That was the law, and that is printed on every one of the bonds of the United States now outstanding. There is no mistake about what the law is. Then the Secretary is authorized to sell bonds to buy coin when there is not sufficient coin in the Treasury coming from the ordinary revenue with which to redeem these greenbacks.

There never has been any authority to issue bonds to redeem Treasury notes of the act of 1890. On the contrary, there is a prohibition against selling bonds for that purpose, because the act provides how coin shall be obtained. It is to be obtained by the coinage of the silver in the Treasury, and that by implication excludes any other mode of obtaining coin for that purpose. That he may sell bonds to buy coin to redeem the greenbacks when there is not enough in the Treasury there can be no doubt.

Now, what is the condition of the coin in the Treasury? In the first place, the cash balance in the Treasury, in round numbers, is $270,000,000. Of that $270,000,000 there is about $114,000,000 of gold coin. I can not state the exact amount, because gold is going out every day. There is about $114,000,000 of gold coin. The Treasury statements show that there has been issued $350,000,000 of silver certificates—I speak only in round numbers—that there is in the Treasury some 374,000,000 silver dollars, leaving 24,000,000 silver dollars in the Treasury for which no certificates have been issued. There is also in the Treasury, say, $11,000,000, speaking in round numbers, of silver certificates. These silver certificates may be exchanged by the holders for silver dollars. The Government can exchange them for silver dollars whenever it is convenient to do so. That makes 35,000,000 silver dollars available for redemption. In addition to that, there is $55,000,000 of uncoined silver in the Treasury, which it is the duty of the Secretary to coin, making, in round numbers, $90,000,000 of available silver and about $114,000,000 of available gold for redemption purposes.

The President of the United States informs us that there is abundant revenue; that there is no necessity to sell bonds except to get gold. We say that there is no necessity for that purpose, because the law expressly provides that these obligations may be paid in silver. That question was solemnly decided by nearly a three-fourths vote of the two Houses of Congress in 1878. It is plainly written in the law. No man can mistake the law in that regard.

Then we find ourselves with $270,000,000 cash balance, nearly $100,000,000 of which is silver and over $100,000,000 gold. Can anybody suggest a possible reason for the sale of more bonds? There was no necessity for the last sale of bonds, or the one before it. There was a surplus then in the Treasury, as the President of the United States informs us. The reason for selling bonds is to discriminate between the two coins and violate the platforms of both parties. Both parties have declared over and over again in their national platforms that they were in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money, without discrimination; and the only reason for selling bonds now is to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to violate the law. He is only authorized to sell bonds to the extent necessary to buy coin when there is a deficiency in the Treasury. There being no deficiency in the Treasury, it is a bald violation of law, and he has been violating the law.

The other reason I have given for selling bonds is to discriminate between gold and silver and to degrade silver. If the law on the statute book had been observed there would have been no panic in 1893; there would have been no raid on the Treasury to get gold for the gold gamblers, because there has been at all times ample provision for silver to meet all the Government obligations. We know very well that if the law had been executed there would not have been a word said; nobody would have made or pretended to have made a raid upon the Treasury, any more than they did upon the French treasury or the German treasury, which were situated precisely as our Treasury. There they have the option to pay in either gold or silver. They tell all comers, "If you demand gold for export we will pay you in silver." Their credit was not injured. If this law had been executed, the credit of the United States would have been preserved. It is the repeated violations of law, after the Secretary has piled up the money of the country to lie idle in the Treasury, thus ruining business, and the scandals which have been created by the sale of bonds, which have affected the credit of the country more than anything else. The scandals with regard to the mode of disposing of these bonds have gone on from year to year.

After all this, Senators say it would be repudiation to stop this Executive usurpation; it would be repudiation for Congress to assert its power under the Constitution. Nobody believes that Congress does not have the credit of the nation at heart as much as the Executive. Besides that, legislation is delegated to Congress as a coordinate department of the Government, and it is its duty, from which it can not shirk. The idea, the pretext here, that Congress will not do its duty, and therefore we must abdicate our duty and let usurpation go on in the land, is not to be entertained.

I have heard statements here this morning about the revenue and the passage of bills for its increase. It was said that parties in this Chamber could not agree upon particular methods, and therefore we should allow the President of the United States to exercise the same powers which Charles I and other usurpers have exercised—to raise revenue without authority of law. I say that no Senator can maintain for a moment that there is not sufficient revenue in the Treasury; and if the Secretary of the Treasury has any power to issue bonds, either for gold or silver, it is only to the extent necessary to get coin. Does anybody say that with $270,000,000 in the Treasury—$200,000,000 of coin or bullion convertible into coin—there is any necessity to issue bonds to buy coin to redeem those notes? Everybody knows there is no such necessity; and when it is admitted that there is no such necessity then it follows that there is no such power.

We have allowed this to go on without rebuke. At whose behest has it been done? It is not the people who are suffering for coin, not the people who are suffering for a circulating medium, not the people who are ground to powder by the gold gamblers and the money changers who manage the affairs of this country, who want these bonds sold. It is those who speculate in them, those who make their $10,000,000 out of them, who want bonds sold. They control the banking fraternity on the other side of the Atlantic, and the banking fraternity on this side of the Atlantic controls this Government and compels it to violate the most sacred laws, compels it to issue bonds when we have a surplus in the Treasury, compels it to issue bonds for speculative purposes contrary to the plain provisions of the law.

This is a dangerous power. It never was intrusted by the Constitution to the Executive; it never can be intrusted in any free government to an executive. It is the highest legislative function to raise revenue either by taxation or by borrowing money. Place in the Executive the power to borrow money, and your liberties are gone. Liberty can not exist where that power exists, because it makes the Executive supreme. He is the Commander-in-Chief of the armies and navies. Give him command of the revenues of the Government by the unlimited power to borrow money and you have a despotism as rank and as extensive as any other ever created on the earth. There never was a more bold defiance of law and usurpation of power than the issue of bonds to buy coin and to redeem the greenbacks when there was ample coin in the Treasury and when there was no authority to issue the bonds, because they can only be issued to the extent necessary to provide coin.

Now, the plain proposition is, Will Congress assert its legislative function, or will it go on and let the Executive issue more and more bonds and have more scandals?

Talk about the credit of the Government! The credit of the Government has been more injured by violation of law than by any other cause. All that has injured the credit of this Government for the last five years has been the violation of law and the declaration that we were insolvent. The Governments of France and Germany were not injured by executing the law. If we had executed the law there would have been no raids on the Treasury.

These bond dealings are bringing the Government into disrepute. See how the bankers of Europe distrust this country, distrust our finances, distrust our solvency, because we proclaim ourselves insolvent—with a Government like ours, with $1,100,000,000 of circulating medium in silver and in paper, dependent upon what gold we can borrow. Of course we have no credit. Our credit has been destroyed by the administration of the Government, and our credit will never be restored until Congress makes laws and sees that they are executed—sees that they are not violated. There is power in the two Houses of Congress to require the Executive to obey the law. The machinery is provided when usurpation occurs; and to stand idly by and give up these powers to the Executive is entirely wrong.

I tell you, Senators, there is nothing which shocks the people of the United States so much as the issue of bonds by the Executive without Congressional sanction. There is nothing which alarms patriotic men so much as this. Can anybody believe that Congress will not make proper preparation and provision for emergencies? I claim the provisions of law are sufficient, are ample, that the revenues of the Government will be sufficient for years, according to the present rate of deficiency, and that this surplus ought to be drawn out of the Treasury. I say that the suggestion which has been made in the Senate that we tax the shirts off the backs of the American people so as to make them pay something they did not agree to pay in order to maintain the credit of this Government is an outrage, when the Executive declares that we have no credit, when the Executive makes his own laws, and when we lie supinely by and do not resist his usurpations.

It would be hailed with delight if Congress should pass this bill and put an end to these scandals and to these usurpations. Let the legislative department of this Government assert its independence. We must have three departments or we have no free Government. Everything now is done at the other end of the Avenue; nobody dares speak out against this usurpation. I am glad this question is before the Senate face to face, and I believe it will be answered manfully and independently.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to protract this debate; but on a bill which seems to me as dangerous as this bill, I desire to state my own position very clearly. I do not think the question is one that lends itself to much debate. The use of gold or silver, the question of money standards is not involved, still less is the question of the proper policy to be pursued in regard to the tariff. It is a plain question here of honesty and good faith. We know, as a matter of fact, that the Government revenues are short and show a monthly and annual deficit; we know that the Senate is unable and unwilling to pass a bill to give the Government additional revenues. If this bill passes it means that we shall not only be placed in a position where we can not redeem our coin obligations, but that we shall be unable to meet the just debts incurred in the ordinary running of the Government. This bill means the practical repeal of the resumption act, for it takes away the power to sustain the reserves of the Treasury given by that act. It will amount in six months to a virtual repudiation.

Mr. President, I am well aware that this bill, if it passes the Senate, will not pass the House of Representatives. It is true that a Republican House would kill this bill if it ever allowed it to come to a vote. It is equally true that a President, at least nominally Democratic, would veto it if it ever reached him. It is also true that the performances of the United States Senate in regard to the great question of revenue and the great question of the public obligations have been such as to prevent people from giving much weight to what the Senate does. But when business is in the condition that it is now men do not stop to reason too carefully; and it will go out to the world, if this bill passes, that the United States Senate has deliberately voted to put the Government in such a position that it can by no means whatever meet its current obligations or pay its coin notes. That is what this bill means.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question at that point.

Mr. LODGE. I decline to be interrupted. I should like to finish what I have to say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts declines to yield.

Mr. LODGE. It amounts to a direct repudiation. That will be the effect. Business is very bad, it has been very bad; men are very sensitive; business is very sensitive. The action of passing this bill will be another blow to the business of this country. If it passes here to-day or to-morrow you will see a repetition of the alarm, the fear, the panic, which have beset business at different times during the last two or three years.

The only plea I desire to make at this moment is that the Senate should spare this blow to the business of the country. We know here, if it is not understood elsewhere, that this bill can never become law; that it can not pass the House of Representatives; that it can not, if it passes that House, get by the President's veto. We know that it is merely an exhibition of a certain power in this Senate; and although it is a miscellaneous Senate, without party cohesion or party responsibility anywhere on these questions, nevertheless this action will be disastrous and injurious to the already stricken business of the country.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will at least spare the country this last blow to its business. Why should we alarm business further by taking this perfectly useless and yet menacing and dangerous action?

I have nothing further to say, Mr. President. I only wished to make my earnest plea that the Senate would not pass this dangerous and dishonest bill, which can do infinite harm by its passage here, although it can by no possibility become law.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I rise for information only. I am impressed by the speeches that I have heard with the importance of this vote. I do not desire to give my vote to any bill or any policy that means repudiation; I do not desire to give my vote for anything that means dishonor to the credit of this nation; I do not desire to give my vote to anything that savors of anarchy. I care nothing for prophecies of evil to come. I am impressed by the reasons which have been given against this bill; and if they have their foundations in fact, I desire to vote against the bill, and I should be glad to ask the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] if he were in his seat; but, as he is not, I take the liberty of asking the Senator from New York in good faith if there is anything in this bill, from the Calendar number at the top of it until the bill closes with the word "prohibited," that prevents the Government of the United States from borrowing every dollar that is necessary not only to redeem the greenbacks, but to pay the current obligations of the Government?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CLARK. I asked a question for information, hoping that it might be answered.

Mr. HILL. The act of 1875 is the only authority upon the statute book which gives to the Secretary of the Treasury the right to issue bonds for any purpose whatever; and if that act shall be wiped out, no bonds can be issued for any purpose. I state that upon my investigation of this subject. The Secretary of the Treasury a year ago suggested to Congress, and the House passed, a measure which provided that there should be authority in the Secretary of the Treasury at all times to issue certificates of indebtedness for the purpose of meeting temporary deficiencies in revenue. The recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury was not complied with. A bill did pass the House of Representatives in reference to that subject, but it did not pass the Senate, and therefore there is no authority whatever for the purpose of raising money to supply temporary deficiencies.

Mr. CLARK. I am obliged to the Senator for the candor of his answer, because it convinces me of my own opinion as to the necessity of the passage of this bill and as to its passage at this time. In voting for this bill I shall vote as though the Senate of the United States were the final arbiter of this question. I will not assume to say that the Republican House of Representatives will not stop an Administration in its mad career of selling bonds upon every provocation without the consent of Congress.

I understand that this bill means to cut off from the Chief Executive and from the Secretary of the Treasury the right, at their own will and at their own pleasure, whenever they shall see fit, to sell interest-bearing bonds of the United States for the purposes of resumption, or for any other purposes whatever. To that I have been unalterably opposed, and I am now unalterably opposed to it. I believe, if it has never been a bad policy for this Government before, that the circumstances, that the scandal, that the infamy, if I may say so, of selling bonds within the last twelve months should appeal to the Congress of the United States to take that power from the Executive here and now and forever.

The Congress of the United States has patriotism enough, Mr. President, in my judgment, to see that no repudiation shall come upon this Government. Our obligations having been issued by the authority of Congress, Congress will see to it that they are not repudiated.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator have that confidence in the judgment and ability of this Congress to agree, that if to-morrow there should be a raid made upon the Treasury for the redemption of greenbacks, and there should not be sufficient money in the Treasury to meet it, this Congress would give authority to the President to issue bonds?

Mr. CLARK. I am not prepared to answer for Congress.

Mr. HILL. Then what would be done?

Mr. CLARK. I am prepared to answer for myself; and while the silver question, in my judgment, enters not into the consideration of this matter, and while I bow to no man in my allegiance to silver, I will say to the Senator from New York that, so far as I am concerned, if the exigency should arise that we were on the brink of bankruptcy, as he says—and it can not arise with that suddenness—my voice and my vote would be given to save the country by any reasonable measure that might be presented to Congress; and I have no reason to believe and I have no reason to intimate that any other member of either House of Congress would fail in his duty to his country on an occasion of that kind.

Mr. HILL. Has not the Senator heard here repeatedly from the lips of almost a majority of the members of this Senate that under no circumstances would they vote to issue bonds in time of peace?

Mr. CLARK. I have not.

Mr. HILL. And yet, how do you expect this Congress to give relief, if the President should send in a message asking for it?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have never heard the statement; I have never seen the vote recorded to which the Senator alludes. I believe in the patriotism of Congress to meet any great emergency, because the history of my country teaches me that Congress always has been patriotic in emergencies. The country never has been bankrupt, although it has often been threatened worse than it is threatened at this moment. There never has been a time in the history of this nation, Mr. President, when our country has been so threatened by usurpation of the Executive power as it is threatened now.

Mr. HILL. What is the usurpation of which the Senator complains?

Mr. CLARK. I complain of many things, not in a querulous manner, as the Senator intimates in his question, but I say, Mr. President, that there never has been a time in the history of this nation when the executive power of this Government so overshadowed the legislative power, to the great danger of the country, in my judgment, as at the present time.

Take any of the constituted committees of this body; take the Committee on Public Lands, of which the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] is chairman, take the committees of which any of the Senators may have cognizance. If a matter of legislation affecting certain States comes before the Committee on Public Lands, what is the first question that is asked by that committee? Is it the question that this bill ought to become a law? Is it a question as to the policy which should be pursued in relation to the public lands? Not at all. The question is: Had we not better, and must we not, send this bill to the Secretary of the Interior or to the Commissioner of the General Land Office to get his opinion as to whether it ought to become a law or not?

Mr. HILL. Does not the Senator know that the custom of asking the opinion of the Departments of the Government in relation to measures affecting the particular Departments has existed for a great number of years?

Mr. HAWLEY. Permit me to say that it is more for the sake of getting facts on record than for the sake of getting opinions.

Mr. HILL. Of course.

Mr. CLARK. Yes, it is for the purpose of getting the facts. For the purpose of getting facts inquiry is permissible; but show me the report that comes from one of the Executive Departments of this Government. It is not the facts that are given; it is an opinion as to how the law will operate if the bill should be passed into law.

Mr. President, I intended to make no extended remarks. I can only say that, believing as I do that the object and intent and purpose of this bill is to curtail the powers of the Executive of the Government in the control of our financial affairs, and believing that Congress alone, under the present conditions and circumstances, should have the right and the power and the authority to say when and where and what kind of bonds and paper of this Government shall be issued, I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, if there was ever any necessity on the part of the Government of the United States for adopting a measure to resume specie payments and enacting into law the provisions of the act of 1875, commonly called the resumption act, that necessity exists to-day and now. Under the provisions of that act we did resume specie payments, and this country was extricated under the Administration then in power from all the disasters and troubles that menaced the country from an irredeemable paper currency.

It is true, sir, that there was a provision in a subsequent act, the act of 1878, which was utterly at variance with the theory and principle of the act of 1875, which was not entitled to be called wise finance, making it obligatory upon the Treasury of the United States, after the demand obligations of the Government had been redeemed in coin, to reissue them. After that law was put in force there grew up a practice in the Treasury of the United States, afterwards recognized by law, of providing and setting aside a sum in gold coin, established at $100,000,000, in order to secure the speedy redemption of all the demand obligations of the United States and to give confidence to the business of the country. That policy has been pursued from that time to this by all Administrations, and this Administration, in its management of the fisc of this country, has thought it obligatory upon it to maintain that policy and to keep in the Treasury of the United States a sum in gold coin that should not be less than the $100,000,000 recognized by law as necessary to the stability of the constantly reissued greenbacks and the paper currency payable in coin that was accumulating from time to time by virtue of enactments of Congress.

But, Mr. President, that is not all. That is not the full measure of the duty imposed by law upon the Administration. In 1890, by the law known as the Sherman law, which provided for the purchase of 4,500,000 ounces of silver bullion every month, and the issuance and payment therefor of Treasury notes to be redeemed in coin, these demand obligations of the United States were enormously increased, and yet the gold reserve remained at the old figure of $100,000,000. Still more, that law made it the duty of the United States and of the Executive Department to maintain the "two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio or such ratio as may be provided by law." That was a duty imposed by Congress after due consideration, after exhaustive debate, and it has been lived up to from the time it was enacted until this day; and because of those obligations imposed upon the Treasury of the United States, because of this unwise financial method, of paying obligations and then reissuing them, thereby putting the Treasury of the country in a position anomalous, I will venture to say, among all the treasuries of the civilized world, we find the Government now struggling under conditions that have never been paralleled in the history of civilized government on the face of the earth.

I admit, sir, that the machinery of the law of 1875 for the maintenance of the gold reserve is awkward, expensive, extravagant, and that it imposed undue burdens upon the American people; but the law is there, and Congress has refused with one of its little fingers to touch the burden which it placed upon the Treasury of the United States. When the law of 1890 was repealed, what did we do? Did we reform in any respect this anomalous, this unfortunate condition? Not at all. We repealed the purchase clauses of the act of 1890, it is true, but we again declared in a form of law that—

The efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States.

Where? At the Treasury, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] said the other day when I was speaking on this subject in an interlocution with some one who had the floor? No, No, but "in the markets" of the world. How is that to be done? Senators say here it must be done by paying out silver to a creditor who demands gold and paying out gold to one who demands silver. Instead of pursuing the only course that a wise man would pursue under this obligation of duty to maintain the parity of the two coins in the markets of the world by indifferently paying either at the demand of the creditor, Senators say it was the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay in the coin that was not demanded, to discriminate against the creditor, and thereby maintain the parity of the coins.

I can not believe that Senators are sincere when they say they have confidence that that plan and that practice would have maintained the parity which to-day, and up to this hour, happily exists throughout all the borders of the United States. Why is it that this boasted parity which our silver friends on both sides of the Senate sometimes speak of is maintained to-day? Why is that 50 cents or thereabouts of silver, measured in gold, when coined is maintained at a parity with a gold dollar of 100 cents? It is because the Treasury of the United States up to this time has held itself out as willing to pay indifferently either coin as it may be demanded in order that the parity may be preserved, not as an equality at the counters of the Treasury, but in the markets of the world.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me?

Mr. GRAY. I will hear the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator, if a silver dollar is on a parity with a gold dollar and just as good as a gold dollar, why the creditor of the Government should demand gold instead of silver?

Mr. GRAY. The very fact that that duty was enjoined by Congress upon the Administration testifies to the anomalous condition existing at the time when those laws were enacted. Never before in the history of this country, or in any other that I know of, was such a duty imposed upon an executive. And why was it? It was because the commercial ratio between the silver dollar and the gold dollar was not what the mint ratio was. It was because an ounce of silver was not worth in the markets of the world and commercially 129 cents. It was not worth more than 70 or 80 cents, as the market might happen to be at the time.

Mr. MILLS. Does my friend the Senator from Delaware think that the parity of the two dollars is kept and preserved alone by the action of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. GRAY. I do.

Mr. MILLS. Then the Senator has no objection to the unlimited coinage of silver? It would not disturb the parity, would it?

Mr. GRAY. I do not understand the Senator. I have objections to the unlimited coinage of silver.

Mr. MILLS. Why?

Mr. GRAY. Because it would put us upon a monometallic silver basis, in my belief.

Mr. MILLS. Would that disturb the parity?

Mr. GRAY. Of course.

Mr. MILLS. Then the Secretary of the Treasury has nothing to do with the parity?

Mr. GRAY. He could not maintain it with free coinage. I hope I do not have to teach such a distinguished leader of my party as the Senator from Texas what, it seems to me, with all deference to him, are the A B C's of monetary science, that when a metal is coined at a ratio not corresponding with its commercial ratio, nothing but the limitation of that coinage and the discretion given to the Secretary of the Treasury can maintain the parity.

Mr. MILLS. I agree with the Senator from Delaware, but that is not the question. The Senator says the Secretary of the Treasury may either maintain or disregard the parity of the two metals by the manipulation of the two dollars, gold and silver. I deny his power to disturb the parity by any manner of payment.

Mr. GRAY. Suppose a silver half dollar or two quarters containing less silver together than is contained in the half of a silver dollar should be brought to the Treasury and other money demanded for them, and the Secretary of the Treasury should announce the policy that hereafter he would only exchange for those silver coins weight for weight, instead of money exchangeable with all the current coins of the United States, what would those coins be worth in the market? You could not buy a bag of peanuts with them without a discount.

Mr. MILLS. Suppose Congress should make two half dollars legal tender in payment of every gold obligation for a dollar of the United States; then they would be just as good as gold.

Mr. GRAY. Very well. I acknowledge the tyrannical force that is contained in a legal-tender act. You can force me to scale my debt by compelling me to take a depreciated coin for a debt that I contracted when that coin perhaps was at par with the most valuable coin current in the country. When you come to the execution of legal-tender laws, it is one thing, but I am talking about men upon whom the shackles of such a law do not rest, and when we are free to accept or decline, then there is another condition and there is another question as to the currency of the common coin of the country.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator admits that the law can force him to scale down his debts and take one half dollar on payment for a dollar, he admits at the same time that the law can force the debtor to pay two dollars for every one that he agreed to pay, by laws that have appreciated the standard of value.

Mr. GRAY. I have already, in such fashion as I was able, discussed the matter of the depreciation of silver and the appreciation of gold. It is a question of monetary economics, and I do not care to discuss it now.

All I want to say in regard to the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is, that we are to repeal the resumption act of 1875 and put nothing in its place. It seems to me to be an act of political suicide and that we ourselves are bankrupting our own Treasury, stabbing and destroying the life of our own Government, and repudiating the faith that the Government has pledged to the people of the country and to the creditors of the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. May I tell the Senator from Delaware what I propose to put in the place of it? This puts in the place——

Mr. GRAY. I do not see anything in the place of it in the Senator's bill.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator can interpret the plain reading of the English language. It puts the power and responsibility upon Congress, upon the two Houses, in place of the will of one man. Does the Senator think that the President of the United States is more patriotic than Congress, and that Congress can not be trusted to represent the wishes of the people?

Mr. GRAY. I think he is quite as patriotic.

Mr. BUTLER. Quite as patriotic. Then let us have Congress consulted before the debt of this country is increased for any purpose. This is a constitutional duty of Congress, and Congress never has had the power to delegate it to the Executive or to anyone else.

Mr. GRAY. Since these bond issues have commenced for the purpose of maintaining the parity of the two coins in the markets of this country, nearly two years have elapsed; Congress has been in two sessions in this city, and it has failed to withdraw that power from the Executive. If it had chosen, or if it had been willing, it could have passed a law similar to the one proposed by the Senator from North Carolina at any moment of its existence.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a pity it did not do it.

Mr. GRAY. It never has done so, and the Executive of this country was authorized to accept that nonaction as the will of Congress; that they did not intend to restrain him from acting upon the will of Congress as expressed in the act of 1875.

Mr. BUTLER. So much the greater reason for acting now.

Mr. GRAY. Very well. It is perfectly within the competence of Congress to repeal the act now. The Senator had a right to introduce his measure, and we are now debating it, and when Congress expresses its will in accordance with the bill of the Senator from North Carolina that power will cease to be exercised by the President, and all the consequences that I and many on this floor who agree with me believe will happen will fall upon the people of this country. Panic, business stagnation, wretchedness, and want will stalk like specters all over this broad land of ours. If it had not been for the agitation of the unwise, uneconomic, unphilosophical free coinage of silver we would have been to-day, in my belief, on the highway to that prosperity of which we hear now that the advance agent has started from the banks of the Ohio River. No, sir; it will not come with that or any other advance agent. It will not come until the people of this country, through their representatives, bring about——

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. One moment. It will not come about until the people of the country, through their representatives, bring about that repose, that confidence in the stability of the great measure of value in all the markets of the world which can only be brought about by a standard that is stable and fixed, and not liable to be attacked by parties either in or out of this Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator predicts disaster if this act is repealed. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware what there has been in the history of this country, from its formation down to this time, that leads him to believe there would be any disparity between gold and silver if they were both admitted upon terms of equality to the mint?

Mr. GRAY. I do not intend to be led aside into all the excursions that questions of that kind might lead to, but I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that there is this in the history of the country, there is this in the monetary experience of the world, that the one essential to business prosperity, to the prosperity of a country civilized as is ours, is a monetary stability, stability in the measure of value——

Mr. ALLEN. I agree with the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. And confidence that when a dollar is put into a business enterprise a dollar of similar standard value will be returned, and not a depreciated one.

Mr. ALLEN. I agree to that; but I call the attention of the Senator—I do not want to interrupt him unnecessarily—to the fact that there never was a disparity between gold and silver as coins in this country until that disparity was made by legislation, and even under the partial disparity made by the legislation of 1873 we accumulated from 1878 to 1890 about $236,000,000 of gold, notwithstanding we were coining silver under the Bland-Allison Act and the Sherman Act.

Mr. GRAY. We went on coining silver; and because the disparity did not come at once, or because the difficulty of maintaining the parity was not immediately apparent, does not argue that it would not have come under the Bland-Allison Act, a conservative act in comparison with anything that came afterwards. But $2,000,000 a month was coined, and there was no accumulation of silver at that time upon which to pile those dollars.

So we went on, until the act of 1890 more than doubled the coinage of silver and in addition to that provided for the increase of the legal-tender demand obligations of the United States, dollar for dollar, for every dollar's worth of silver that was bought. Because a reservoir of water into which a pipe or stream is leading does not overflow its banks in a single hour or a single week or a single month does not argue that it will not go on until it does overflow, when the disastrous flood will come.

Mr. ALLEN. It never has come.

Mr. GRAY. It came, I think, in 1893, when we were called here to repeal the Sherman Act providing for the purchase of the silver and the issuance of the Treasury notes, which then had displaced gold to such an extent that it was leaving the country and depleting the reserve that had always been held in the Treasury to maintain the paper issues of the country.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to call his attention to a fact?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that from colonial days down to early in 1893 there had been no disparity between gold and silver in this country until Mr. Harrison announced to the world that he would redeem all forms of paper money in gold. Thereupon began the panic which has continued from that time ever since.

Mr. GRAY. The time is too short for me to undertake to answer——

Mr. ALLEN. It is a historical fact.

Mr. GRAY. I do not agree with the Senator's statement of what is a historical fact. I have no doubt he thoroughly believes it is a historical fact.

Mr. ALLEN. I think I can prove it.

Mr. GRAY. I certainly do not believe—for that is not a historical fact, it is a matter of opinion—that the consequences of those transactions were such as he states.

Mr. ALLEN. When did our gold begin to leave us? The Senator must confine himself to facts.

Mr. GRAY. It began to leave us shortly after the passage of the act of 1890. I have not the figures now.

Mr. ALLEN. It never started to leave us in the world——

Mr. GRAY. Oh, yes, it did.

Mr. ALLEN. Until Mr. Harrison declared it his policy to make every dollar as good as every other dollar, meaning that he would redeem all forms of money in gold.

Mr. GRAY. The argument post hoc, propter hoc can be made by anybody. I do not believe in cause and effect such as stated by the Senator from Nebraska, and I have not the time now, for it would only be consuming time unnecessarily, and be a diversion from my purpose when I rose, to answer him. My purpose was to point out that the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to repeal the resumption act leaves the Government stripped stark naked and helpless before the money sharks and gold gamblers of New York, about whom the Senator from Nebraska has so much to say.

As long as we have these anomalous conditions confronting the administration of our fiscal system, as long as we have the demand notes, not only greenbacks but Treasury notes, outstanding, all of them authorizing the holders to draw upon the pile of gold in the Treasury, it seems to me it is madness, it is folly on the part of the Senate of the United States to attempt to take away from the Executive the only power he has to meet and defend the Treasury against such attacks. Repeal, then, if you will, but take away from the President and the Administration the command of law that now exists on the statute books that he shall maintain the parity. Take off from him the burden which you have placed upon him if you are going to disable him from maintaining that burden, paralyzing his arm, defeating every purpose he has to carry out the will of Congress as enacted into law in 1890 and again in 1893.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate long this evening or to engage at any length in this debate. I merely wish to express my conclusion.

I am very sorry that this bill has been introduced, not that it will do any harm in the one sense of the word, for it is a harmless project. It will fall dead as soon as it passes the Senate. It will not be acted upon by either the House of Representatives or the President of the United States, in my judgment. The evil which will be done by the bill will be that it will excite agitation, create alarm among the most timid of all people in the world, those who are conducting the business of banking and those who engage largely in other business where they are either compelled to borrow or where they are enabled to lend money. This little bill, which seems to some of you so harmless and so plain, will create a great deal of trouble, a great deal more distress than we are aware of, and will probably lead to grave doubts as to our ability to maintain specie payments.

Now, there is another thing. The law of 1875 is just as much a contract between the United States and the holders of its bonds as a contract between two individuals by which one individual borrows money and agrees to give a mortgage to secure the repayment of the money. This was done in the act of 1875. It must be remembered that the act of 1875 was the beginning of the process of resumption. It did not accrue until four years afterwards, but the details and the mode and the manner of resumption were pointed out by the resumption act. That act is a contract made between the people of the United States and every holder of a United States note—just as much a contract as one between two individuals for the loaning or borrowing of money.

That contract contained the stipulation that the United States would after a fixed period redeem those notes in coin at the will of the holder of the note. It is a stipulation which is expressed on every note of the United States. It is an obligation of the United States expressed fully in a law defining the form of the contract and printed on the face of every note issued. It is just as much the obligation of the United States as if the law were written over and over again on paper and signed and re-signed as the most formal business paper that could be drawn up. It is the law. It is the contract, and that contract is between every individual holder of a note and the United States of America.

The United States can not violate that contract in any of its terms. If it does, it stands in the position of a person perfectly able to pay, but seeking to avoid the obligations of his contract. That is the position of the United States. By the terms of that contract it was the agreement of Congress that the Secretary of the Treasury, an officer always at his post, an officer who is charged with these financial duties and not Congress, should pay the notes when presented, and in order to enable him to do so, it authorized him to sell certain classes of bonds to pay them, and he was authorized to say which of those classes of bonds should be sold in order to provide the money. That is a contract, an obligation with terms and details, and we are bound by it. The means of paying the notes and the authority to issue bonds of a particular description to secure their payment is as much a part of the contract as if it was printed on the face of the note.

The people of the United States are bound by contract, and for more than fifteen years that contract has subsisted. It was passed in 1875. It went into operation the 1st of January, 1879. From that day to this that contract has been preserved inviolate, and this is the first time, I believe, in the history of our country when it is proposed to violate such an obligation.

Now, sir, you repeal this authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds. Who else can issue them? Congress, it is said, may authorize their issue. The Secretary of the Treasury is a public officer who is always at his post. The character of the bonds is defined by law. Every man when that law took effect knew that a 4½ per cent bond, or a 4 per cent bond, or a 5 per cent bond, either of which might be sold, should be used, and those particular classes of securities were set aside and mortgaged to the holder of these notes. You have no right to change them. You have no right to take away the power from the Secretary of the Treasury—I mean in the broad, moral sense. It is the duty of every man to fulfill his obligations; especially is it the duty of every government to fulfill its obligations. There the stipulations are made. You propose to repeal all authority to issue any of this character of bonds and leave it for Congress.

Suppose, sir, no such law as that had been upon the statute books when the bonds were sold here in the spring of 1895. Suppose it had occurred then, in the midst of excitement, when people were alarmed. It was believed that we were going down to the silver standard and that everything would be in chaos. Why, sir, it was with great difficulty and only at a sacrifice that even the Secretary of the Treasury and the President were able to arrest the torrent. If Congress had been in session it would have taken them six months to decide what should be done. Congress is not an executive power; it has no executive duties. It is a legislative power. It passes laws, and those laws must be obeyed literally and strictly by the executive officer, but Congress is totally incompetent to execute any law except that which relates to its own rules and regulations.

The executive and legislative powers are necessarily dissevered and entirely inconsistent with each other. Is it the idea that these notes should not be paid until Congress is in session and then that a bill should be introduced to say what kind of security shall be given, whether it would be paid in silver or gold, whether the Democratic party is in power, or the Republican party is in power, or the Populists are sufficiently strong to make the two great parties utterly unable to do anything? Is that the condition you desire?

Why, Mr. President, the more I think of this proposed measure the more it seems to me indefensible and wrong, as violating the public faith, as in every respect undesirable. Now, we must redeem our notes. We must maintain our contracts. We can not do otherwise. If the Government of Great Britain would violate one of its contracts with its people we would denounce them in unmeasured terms. We have from the foundation of our Government preserved the public credit with untarnished faith. From the time of Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson, when they first provided for the coinage laws, and from the time they provided for the funding of the public debt up to this hour, the public debts of the United States and the public contracts made by Congress have been religiously observed.

This is a gross violation of the public faith, pledged to creditors at home and abroad. I do not say that the notes will not be paid, that Congress will not be compelled by public opinion to sell bonds to pay them, but the difficulties of convening Congress, the uncertainty of their action, their effort to pay in silver, the disregard of express provision for their payment—all these and many other causes will impair the credit of our securities, and is apparent to everyone. Therefore, I say this is a repudiation of a public debt. I denounce it as a repudiation. It is as bad as if we should pass an act that we will not pay the public debt. It is just as bad to violate any one of the stipulations made in that contract as to violate the main one, that we will pay these notes in coin whenever presented. So the public mind will be disturbed by even the fact that the Senate of the United States has taken this action, the place where, of all others, the obligations of contracts ought to be preserved, that serene body of old men, as it was supposed the Senate would be when this Government was formed.

It was supposed that this Senate would be the conservative check upon a numerous and tempestuous body of Representatives, and prevent unwise and hasty legislation, and yet we here, the part of the Government of the United States which it was thought could be most safely relied upon, violate the most sacred contracts made by the people of the United States. You strike out the resumption law; you leave these outstanding notes without defense or protection; then you will have your silver certificates, which are paid in silver dollars, and there are but little more silver dollars here than enough to pay the silver certificates. You will then have forced upon the people, to the extent of the amount now coined and in the Treasury, 370,000,000 silver dollars, when we have been unable, with all the efforts that have been made by the executive department, to hold in circulation more than $60,000,000 at any time. Now about $50,000,000 are outstanding in circulation.

So with your Treasury notes issued for the purchase of silver bullion. They are being gradually paid off, as they ought to be; but do you say that no provision shall be made for the United States notes, the most sacred obligations of all, that they shall be dishonored? Do you say that they shall travel all over the world with only the promise to pay? Sir, during the war we had to issue those notes. The United States promised to pay $1, but did not say when or where, and the result was that our notes went down, down, until they were worth only 40 cents on the dollar. The pride and honor of the people of the United States, the general sentiment of the country, gradually raised those notes up to the par of gold by the promise to pay them on demand when presented at the Treasury of the United States. And when power was given to a Chief Executive officer to sell bonds, to sell the credit of the United States and to pay these notes in that way, in coin, at that time in 1875 there was no controversy between silver and gold. Silver had been dropped out by the act of 1873, and in 1875 it began to be perceived that silver was falling below the margin of gold.

In 1878 what is called the Bland-Allison Act was passed. But this contract was made at a time when both silver and gold were at par with each other, and now it is proposed to violate the faith by which we pledged to redeem those in coin. The United States exacted for their bonds gold coin, and now it is proposed to pay both bonds and notes in silver worth but 50 per cent in gold.

It is proposed to repeal this law; it is a direct, open, papable violation of the law. It is a crime to be denounced, and not a measure to be voted on. It may pass the Senate here in the hurry of the closing days of its session, but I believe every man who votes for it will feel the injury that he has done to his standing and to his character. I say now that it is as much a crime for any agent of the United States to violate a public engagement as it is for him to violate his own obligation, whatever may be its terms. I regard this simply then as a violation of public faith, a thing that ought not to pass. It will only injure the Senate of the United States. Thank God the House of Representatives still stands on the right side, and the President of the United States will aid that House in preventing any such action. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] dwells at some length upon a contract which he says we made with the bill holders, but the Senator does not state truthfully what that contract is. He knows, and everybody here knows, that we never made a contract to pay in gold.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said in coin.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly, but the Senator assumes that it was gold. That misrepresents this question to the American people, as it has been done by the Senator from Ohio for many days and many years. He knows very well that the letter and the spirit of that law is preserved when we pay in silver coin, and he knows, as every other man knows, that every dollar of silver coin in this country in circulation is the equal of every gold dollar. Now, upon what theory, upon what ground, that is not an insult to the intelligence of the American people, can the Senator stand here and say that we are violating the pledged faith of the Government? That is arrant nonsense, and it is untruthful. The Senator knows that we violate no moral or legal obligation when we pay according to the letter of the contract.

Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss this question now, but I can not allow statements of that kind to go unreproved and unrebuked. The whole argument of the Senator is that the people of this country can not trust the legislative department, but can trust the executive. It is the argument of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] in extenso that the people can not leave the question of raising money to meet the obligations, whether they are the current obligations or the plighted obligations with reference to the redemption of paper, to the legislative department, but must leave it to the executive.

It has been a fundamental principle of English law for hundreds of years, which we incorporated into our Constitution, that the appropriations for current expenses and to meet Government obligations were to be provided by the legislative department. It is an abandonment of the legislative function when we turn it over to the executive. That a Democrat from the Democratic State of Delaware should present such a doctrine is most astonishing, except upon the fact that the craze to maintain the gold standard has destroyed all sorts of honest politics and all sorts of honest opinions, and is, I think, rapidly destroying the Democratic party, as it will undoubtedly destroy the Republican party before the craze ends.

Mr. President, the Congress of the United States is bound by the Constitution, it is bound by the demands that the people will make upon it to meet every obligation. If there is an obligation to meet the greenbacks with coin, the people of the United States will see to it that Congress meets it. There is no attempt to repudiate on the part of the silver men.

The Senator from Ohio talks about the sacredness of contracts. I remember when the Senator from Ohio declared that the person who would not take a 40-cent greenback in exchange for any debt that the Government owed him was a robber and a thief. Mr. President, he changed his mind very soon after that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think I used those words.

Mr. TELLER. He used the words "robber" and "extortioner"; that it was extortion.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not "thief."

Mr. TELLER. He was a robber. He could hardly be a robber without being a thief.

Mr. President, I am entirely willing, so far as I am concerned, to trust the legislative department of the Government. The Senator from Ohio knows, however, that there would be no necessity whatever for legislative interference if the letter and spirit of the act of 1875 had been carried out. He knows, as I said before, that that act meant silver coin as well as gold coin, and he knows that to-day the Government has $55,000,000 of seigniorage coin that can be made into silver dollars which every holder of a greenback will take, unless he be an exporter of coin. There is not a business man in this whole country who wants a gold dollar in exchange for a greenback except for export. The Senator is speaking in the interest of the exporter of coin, and not in the interest of the honest holder of the greenback. No one pretends that that $55,000,000 of seigniorage is pledged for any purpose; we have that in addition to the silver certificates and silver dollars in the Treasury.

We have enough to make up the amount of $178,000,000 that lies idle in our Treasury. The Senator says it is pledged for the support of the Treasury notes. The Senator knows that under the present system, as conducted by the late Administration, and conducted by this Administration, and as he will insist shall be conducted by the next, that $178,000,000 will perform no more money function and be no more valuable to the American people than if it had been dumped into the sea. Yet with a people to-day staggering under burdens such as no free people ever did stagger under, with our industries depressed and destroyed as had never been the case since our flag floated, he is willing to borrow $178,000,000 more of money, and put the cost of that borrowed money upon the American people, that he may accommodate the exporters of gold to European markets.

Mr. President, I shall not go into a discussion of this measure. I want to vote on it. I want to cast my vote in favor of saying, in the first place, that I will trust the American Congress to maintain the credit of the American Government, and in the second place, that I will trust no Executive, whatever may be his name or character or to whatever party he belongs, to perform the disgraceful acts which have been performed within two years with reference to the issue and sale of American bonds.

The Senator from Delaware talks about what will happen. He talks about the alarm. So does the Senator from Ohio. That is their stock in trade. That is the black beast that is held up to frighten the American people from having a fair and decent monetary system established in this country. Whom are you going to frighten? The bankers in New York City, he says. In 1893 they created a panic to compel the Congress of the United States to accede to their demands, and they have indicated very plainly within a few days in the public press, the great public press of New York City, that they intend to repeat that thing again.

Mr. President, let them do it; and if we should ever get a man at the head of the Treasury Department who has the nerve of a Jackson, and the honesty of his predecessors as a general thing, he will put every one of those banks in liquidation, as might have been done in 1893, to pay them for the dastardly act by which they brought upon the country the panic of that year, uncalled for and unnecessary, that is still following the American people with its dire results and the effect of which is likely to be felt for years to come.

Mr. President, I repudiate the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio that I am any less honest than he. No act of mine upon this floor or anywhere else justifies him in saying that I have less regard for the integrity of our credit than he has; nor can this be said of the men who voted with me for a decent monetary system that would bring back to this country prosperity and with it maintain the credit of the American Government.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I think that the Senate and the country would be at a loss to understand the very great excitement of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] upon this question without some information that I hold in my hand, and which will, I think, explain his great concern. This is a circular [exhibiting] sent out by a syndicate of the national banks. This is the first copy that has gotten to the public. It explains why they want to keep this power to burden the country with debt in the hands of the Executive. It shows a conspiracy on the part of these bankers and bondholders to capture the national conventions of the two old parties and nominate men for President whom they can control. Here are their instructions sent out to the banks over the country calling upon them to control the two old party conventions and put up men who will stand for their infamous and thieving processes and methods.

Mr. President, I am going to have this circular read and put in the RECORD, but before doing it I want to reply to something said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. He said that he denounced this bill of mine as an attempt at repudiation, and to tarnish the honor and credit of the country. It is astonishing how a man who has been one of the chief actors in committing so many financial crimes against our people, a man who has gone into a conspiracy to rob his own people for the benefit of foreign shylocks, can have the face to stand up here and attempt to defend his actions. He knows that this bill is right and honest. He knows that the present policy of the Treasury Department is not. Mr. President, I denounce the action of the present Secretary of the Treasury as dishonest in trying to maintain the parity by discriminating against silver coin and paying out the other exclusively. He is trying to create a disparity. I denounce it, and I denounce equally the action of those who support it, as being detrimental to the best interests of the American people. I ask that this bank circular sent out, which was handed to me by a bank official, may be read, and that it be put in the RECORD in full, heading, signature, and all. Thank God, there are a few bank officers who will not become tools and agents of the gold trust to oppress and damn their own people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION,
2 WALL STREET AND 90-94 BROADWAY,
New York, March 23, 1896.

[President, Eugene H. Pullen, vice-president National Bank of the Republic, New York; first vice-president, Robert J. Lowry, Lowry Banking Company, Atlanta, Ga.; chairman executive council, Joseph C. Hendrix, president National Union Bank, New York; treasurer, William H. Porter, vice-president Chase National Bank, New York; secretary, James R. Branch, 2 Wall street, New York.]

To the Bankers of the United States:

At a meeting of the executive council of the American Bankers' Association, held in this city on March 11, 1896, the following declaration was made by unanimous vote:

THE EXISTING STANDARD OF VALUE.

"THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF THE AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION DECLARE UNEQUIVOCALLY IN FAVOR OF THE MAINTENANCE OF THE EXISTING GOLD STANDARD OF VALUE AND RECOMMEND TO ALL BANKERS AND TO THE CUSTOMERS OF ALL BANKS THE EXERCISE OF ALL OF THEIR INFLUENCE AS CITIZENS IN THEIR VARIOUS STATES TO SELECT DELEGATES TO THE POLITICAL CONVENTIONS OF BOTH THE GREAT PARTIES WHO WILL DECLARE UNEQUIVOCALLY IN FAVOR OF THE MAINTENANCE OF THE EXISTING GOLD STANDARD OF VALUE."

Your influence is earnestly requested to give practical effect to this action.

THE NEXT CONVENTION.

The next annual convention of the association is to be held in St. Louis, Mo., on September 22, 23, and 24, 1896, and it is intended to make the convention of unusual interest to bankers, and to devote the programme chiefly to the discussion of banking questions by members. To this end short, compact questions involving banking practice or problems are solicited from all parts of the country.

ARE YOU A MEMBER?

The association seeks to unite all banks and bankers in one efficient national organization, and it solicits all national and State banks, savings banks, and banking firms to become members. For the current year ending September 1, 1896, the dues are $10 for banks with a capital of $100,000 and more, and $5 for banks having less than $100,000 capital and for private bankers. The advertisement in the association's proceedings, sent to all banks and bankers, is alone worth the cost of membership. If you desire to join, kindly sign and return inclosed blank.

WAR UPON BANK CRIMINALS.

Special attention is called to the protective feature of the association, which is developing into great practical benefit. Through it the association becomes the aggressive agent of its members against professional bank criminals.

Every bank in the United States should cooperate in this important work. This association recently captured the forgers who swindled a bank in San Francisco out of $20,000 in gold. It has ample evidence to show that criminals know who are members of the association, and are selecting nonmembers for attack. Ten burglaries, yielding over $50,000, were recently committed against nonmembers, and in one instance a burglary was abandoned because of the discovery that the bank involved was a member of the association.

EUGENE H. PULLEN, President.
JAMES R. BRANCH, Secretary.
JOSEPH C. HENDRIX,
Chairman Executive Council.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question about that circular?

Mr. BUTLER. You may.

Mr. GRAY. Where did the Senator discover that secret and criminal missive?

Mr. BUTLER. It speaks for itself.

Mr. GRAY. I say where did the Senator discover it?

Mr. BUTLER. Where did I discover it?

Mr. GRAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think it is my duty to tell the Senator who furnished it to me; but I challenge him or any other man who stands for the bankers on this floor to say that that is not a true copy of the resolution passed, a copy of which was sent to every banker in America.

Mr. GRAY. I hope it is a true copy, but I do not understand, and I want to understand, about this conspiracy, among other things, to punish forgers, bank thieves, and other criminals against the public.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply had it read in full to show that it was genuine and referred to bank matters as well as to other matters; but if the Senator from Delaware will look at it, he will see that the resolution directing the bankers of the country to use their efforts to capture the two old parties is put in black type and in big letters at the head of the circular, and everything else is in small type as to the matter of details.

Mr. GRAY. Is this meeting to be held at night and in secret?

Do they propose to meet in darkness, or is it to be a meeting in open daylight, as American citizens are entitled to meet?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know whether in the night or in the day; but these actions are so damnable that they ought to meet in midnight darkness; and I can not see how any honest man in the day or in the night can indorse it.

Mr. GRAY. I am not indorsing it yet until I can find out what are the special matters the Senator from North Carolina finds fault with. If it is not a dark-lantern and secret organization, not one that indicates a conspiracy against somebody, but is to meet in open daylight, in the presence of their fellow-citizens, exercising the right of American citizens, as manufacturers, for instance, get together and devise means of electing Mr. McKinley or somebody who represents the protective idea, I am at a loss to know what it is the Senator condemns in these American citizens exercising the right of association and combination. And I wish to know whether we live under a tyranny that is to be created by the Senator from North Carolina, and a junta of such as he who are to sit in judgment upon what American citizens may or may not do?

Mr. BUTLER. It is under the tyranny of a majority of the American voters.

Mr. GRAY. You have not got that majority yet.

Mr. BUTLER. And under the tyranny of common justice, which is a terror to all evil doers.

Mr. President, I want to say in this connection that the more I study the question of the demonetization of silver and every act which has been passed on finance by this Government from 1869 to 1870 and 1875 and since, the more I believe that every one of those acts was inspired by the bondholders. I believe that free silver was struck down to increase the value of their bonds, to increase the purchasing power of the money in which the bonds will be paid. I believe that silver was struck down in the interest of the bondholder. There have been many other effects to follow it, but it was done with one purpose, and it was backed by one set of men and one focalized influence, and that was the holders of wealth, who conspired to rob the American people to make themselves richer.

Mr. President, I call that a conspiracy, because it is a united effort of the gold power of this country to control both the old party conventions and to nominate a man who will do their bidding. If the Republican party should elect their candidate for President (Mr. McKinley, or whoever he may be), and he should call to be Secretary of the Treasury the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], as he probably would, then I suppose that the next Secretary of the Treasury would pursue the same policy which the present Secretary pursues in defiance of law and the spirit of law, and pay coin obligations in gold alone, when he knows and the present Secretary of the Treasury knows, that that appreciates gold and depreciates the other coin, silver. It not only appreciates gold, but it puts down the price of products, puts down the price of American labor, and makes the standard which measures values grow shorter, causes money to get scarcer, debts to get bigger, while the people suffer and the bondholder grows fat and rich.

Can it be possible that we are to have the next Secretary of the Treasury carrying out that criminal and infamous policy as the present one is? I fear from the speeches that we have heard from him to-day, and the great concern that he shows that this power shall be left in the hands of the President, that if the Republican party should elect the next President we shall have Mr. SHERMAN for Secretary of the Treasury and that the Carlisle policy will continue.

This endless-chain robbery was first started by the Republican party under Secretary Sherman; it has been indorsed and continued by the Democrats under Mr. Carlisle, and now we are threatened (with the help of the banks) with a return of Mr. SHERMAN to the Treasury Department to continue and consummate this evil and direful wrong.

The gold power may not be able to capture both Houses of the next Congress, but they are determined to own the President, and therefore the Senators from New York and Ohio are anxious to keep this power to issue bonds in the hands of the President.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I think it is entirely proper before this imporant bill shall pass——

Mr. HILL. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska, with his permission, of course——

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. To the assurance made by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] that the friends of the measure were not intending to participate in the debate.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think we will participate to any very great extent, and yet I do not think I shall be prevented from saying what I desire to say by the remark of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. I have no objection to the Senator's doing so; on the contrary, I welcome the Senator into the debate. I merely called his attention to the fact.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I think this is a good time to begin to tell the truth respecting this important bill, and I want to review very briefly some of the arguments that have been made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

The Senator from Ohio became quite indignant and characterized this bill as a measure of repudiation and those who advocate it as repudiators, because it was intended to take from the Chief Executive the power to issue the bonds of the Government ad libitum. The Senator from Ohio said, with his peculiar kind of logic, that seems to be made to fit every occasion, that it was a part of the contract when the resumption act of 1875 was passed that the notes that had been issued by this Government, the greenbacks, should be redeemed in coin. I agree entirely with the Senator from Ohio that that statement is true. When the Congress passed the act of 1875, the resumption act, it did pledge the faith of the Government and the revenues to the redemption of all forms of paper money that had been issued; and while it can not be said in a strict legal sense to be a part of the contract, because the notes had been issued before the resumption act became a law, yet the Government by the passage of that act became morally bound to redeem the outstanding notes in coin.

The Senator from Ohio also characterized any person who disputes his statement as a repudiationist. He visits all such persons with the full weight and power of his wrath, and yet I say the Senator from Ohio has himself given more aid and comfort to repudiation and has been a greater repudiationist than any Senator in this Chamber for a quarter of a century. He has encouraged the policy which converted the coin-resumption act of 1875 into a gold-resumption act and has helped wrest it from its original purpose and meaning. His aid was given to this work as Secretary of the Treasury a few years ago; his voice and his vote have been given to it in this Chamber; and I have been told that the Senator has been the chief adviser of the present Administration respecting the financial policy it has pursued. At any rate, he has been a visitor at the White House and was a visitor there in 1893 more times as an adviser than the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Mr. President, if it is important to observe the provisions of the resumption act of 1875 and redeem our outstanding notes in coin, was not the Senator from Ohio a repudiationist when he advised the President to refuse to redeem them in both gold and silver coin? Of course, redemption in gold and silver coin does not answer the purpose of the power which moves the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from New York.

Then the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] sings the old song that has been sung here for three years to my knowledge, with that peculiar air of superiority of knowledge that characterizes the gold advocates, that the two coins are kept at a parity now by the construction given the law by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senator from Delaware tells us that the parity is maintained between gold and silver now by the construction placed on the Sherman Act of 1890 and the previous coinage acts. There is not a school child 10 years of age who does not know that the parity has been stricken down and does not exist to-day. There is no parity. Why stand in the presence of the American people, then, and say to them that a parity exists between gold and silver when one has been made the chief and the other subsidiary metal? Silver was stricken down by the criminal action of Congress in 1873, the chief mover in which event was the senior Senator from Ohio. There never has been a parity between the two metals from that time to this, and yet the Senator from Delaware tells us that if we resume the redemption of our notes in silver we shall go to a condition of silver monometallism and destroy the parity between gold and silver.

Mr. President, that statement is a mere dream of the Senator, and it is a bad dream at that. There is not the slightest thing in our history to prove or to support the assertion. We coined silver in our colonial days, and that silver stood at a parity with gold until the crime of 1873. There had never been a disparity between the two coins until that time. In 1873, when the crime—for that is what it was, a crime against civilization and the happiness and prosperity of our country—was committed by the demonetization of silver, silver was at a premium over gold almost 4 per cent. Of course it was a nice thing to do to demonetize silver. It was an honest thing to do to strike down one-half of the money of the country and increase the indebtedness of the people one-half and correspondingly depreciate the prices of labor and products. Having obtained advantage by this criminal act, it is proposed to hold it, to the detriment of the country.

Then the honorable Senator from Delaware fails to note that after the partial remonetization of silver in 1878 by the Bland-Allison Act, instead of gold coin taking to its heels and fleeing the country, as he assumes it would now under free coinage, we actually accumulated $236,000,000 in gold more than we had from 1878 until 1893, at the time of the unconditional repeal of the purchase clause of the Sherman Act. The history of the country is against the assumption and the assertion of the Senator from Delaware.

Have we any right to suppose that under a system of free coinage, if inaugurated now, the condition of the country would be different from what it was in the past? A distinguished colonial statesman, I think it was Patrick Henry, said that the only way to judge the future is by the past; and judging the future by the past under a system of absolute and unrestricted free coinage as well as under partial coinage, gold coin, instead of disappearing, has been increasing. No, sir; gold monometallists are not afraid that gold will be driven away by free coinage. Shylock has the contract that calls for the pound of flesh, and he proposes to enforce it in dollars that have swollen from 100 to 200 cents under gold appreciation, and to take from the debtor $2 of his produce and in the products of his labor and his field where $1 was in the first instance contracted.

Then the Senator from Delaware grows indignant again as respects maintaining the parity. Mr. President, how can the parity be maintained between gold and silver when one is demonetized and the other is coined without restriction? When the two metals are placed on an equality before the mints, when you give them equal monetary functions, when you permit silver to do that which gold is permitted to do alone, you will put the two metals on a parity, and until you do that a disparity between the coins will exist and be maintained as a result of legislation.

Mr. President, for the purpose of deceiving—for it could have been for no other purpose, I think—in 1893, when we repealed the purchase clause of the Sherman Act, there was inserted in the repeal bill a part of the Democratic platform. I presume that is the only way in which it will ever be transmitted to posterity as a part of the permanent history of this country. Here is the plank:

SEC. 7. We denounce the Republican legislation known as the Sherman Act of 1890 as a cowardly makeshift, fraught with possibilities of danger in the future which should make all of its supporters, as well as its author, anxious for its speedy repeal. We hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country—and to the coinage of both gold and silver without discriminating against either metal or charge for mintage, but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, or be adjusted through international agreement or by such safeguards of legislation as shall insure the maintenance of the parity of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts; and we demand that all paper currency shall be kept at par with and redeemable in such coin. We insist upon this policy as especially necessary for the protection of the farmers and laboring classes, the first and most defenseless victims of unstable money and a fluctuating currency.

If any Senator will refer to the repealing act of 1893 he will find this language—

It was thought necessary to put a part of that plank of the Democratic platform of 1892 in the act of 1893. But was there any attempt after we passed the repeal bill of 1893 to supplement it by free coinage? We were told at the time by the Democratic party that immediately on the passage of the repealing act of 1893 a bill would be introduced here and into the other branch of Congress for the free and unlimited coinage of silver. That bill has not been introduced. The honorable chairman of the Finance Committee at that time, who is unfortunately absent from the Chamber as a result of ill health, told us in repeated speeches that the Democratic party was pledged to the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and that as soon as the repeal bill of 1893 should become a law a measure looking to free coinage would be introduced and would be passed speedily through both Houses of Congress, and would receive the approval of the President. That is the last we have heard of it.

Mr. BUTLER. It has been suggested to me that we can not get a vote to-night, as several Senators desire to speak. Therefore I should like now, while the Senate is fairly full, to ask unanimous consent to vote on this question on Monday next at 4 o'clock. That seems to be to those with whom I have conferred a satisfactory hour, and I hope it will be satisfactory to the Senate.

Mr. HILL. What hour does the Senator say?

Mr. BUTLER. At 4 o'clock on Monday afternoon.

Mr. HILL. I have no doubt there will be ample time between now and then to make all the speeches desired.

Mr. ALLISON. I will suggest to the Senator to make the hour 5 o'clock.

Mr. HILL. I do not think there is any objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. It may be necessary to act upon some conference reports, and if the time is fixed at 5 o'clock that may be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. At the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] I will change the hour to 5 o'clock, and ask that the vote be taken on this question at 5 o'clock on next Monday.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not object, with the understanding that the right is reserved to all Senators to move amendments at that time, before the vote is taken.

Mr. PLATT. That is right.

Mr. HAWLEY. Without debate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Without debate.

Mr. PLATT. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the vote upon the pending bill be taken at 5 o'clock on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. Reserving the right to all Senators to move amendments at that time.

Mr. ALLEN. The amendments to be considered under the five-minute rule?

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. PLATT. Without debate.

Mr. PUGH. We do not want debate.

Mr. ALLISON. If there is to be no debate on the amendments, I will withdraw my suggestion as to 5 o'clock, and will say 4 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. In order that we may have no misunderstanding about the consent agreement, do I understand the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire to be that after 5 o'clock every Senator shall have the right to offer amendments which shall be voted upon without debate?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Tennessee precisely comprehended my meaning.

Mr. PLATT. Perhaps the hour had better be made 4 o'clock, if that is to be part of the agreement.

Mr. LINDSAY. Let the agreement stand at 5 o'clock.

Mr. BUTLER. I now desire, on the suggestion of several Senators, to change the request that the debate on this question shall cease at 4 o'clock on Monday, and that at 5 o'clock the final vote shall be taken—not later than 5 o'clock—that the time between 4 and 5 be devoted to the purpose named by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to offer amendments to be voted upon without debate.

Mr. HILL. Do I understand that amendments can be presented at 5 o'clock?

Mr. BUTLER. No; at 4 o'clock—the final vote to be taken not later than 5 o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. The objection to that is that we might not get through. What I meant to suggest to the Senator was that at 4 o'clock debate should cease and we should then proceed to vote upon all amendments without debate, and when the amendments have been completed that the final vote be taken.

Mr. BUTLER. The final vote, however, upon the amendments and the bill to be taken not later than 5 o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. We may not get through by that time.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me the Senator wants to reserve more time than is necessary. If we are to do nothing but offer amendments we ought to vote by 5 o'clock. We ought to get through with the amendments by that time if we do not debate them.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not want to have two different hours agreed upon. At 4 o'clock we cease debate; amendments are then in order; all amendments offered are to be voted upon, and then the bill is to be voted upon before we adjourn.

Mr. TELLER. Amendments are in order from this time on. Senators can commence offering amendments now if they choose.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire, if he will permit me, that to start at 5 o'clock——

Mr. PLATT and Mr. STEWART. Four o'clock.

Mr. ALLEN. Will result in a half hour or an hour when the Senate will not have a quorum present, and there will be inability to obtain a vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. Therefore I understand 4 o'clock is to be the hour according to the present request of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ALLEN. Four o'clock is the hour when the amendments are to be put in.

Mr. BUTLER. Senators are to begin to put in amendments at 4 o'clock, and they are to be voted upon without debate. Now, it is clear that unless there is a string of 100 amendments or more, amendments without limit, they certainly can be disposed of without debate in an hour.

Mr. ALLEN. Do I understand the proposed unanimous-consent agreement to mean that a vote shall absolutely be taken at 5 o'clock?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not anticipate any delay, and I do not understand the anxiety of the Senator from North Carolina to have the voting on amendments to end in an hour. I might want to offer an amendment, and the Senator from North Carolina might, at 4 o'clock, offer the McKinley Act itself as an amendment, which would take more than an hour to read it.

Mr. BUTLER. Hardly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is likely to do so.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to know if, as a matter of fact, the Senator contemplates doing it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I submit the separate proposition, that at 4 o'clock debate shall end and we shall go on and finish the bill, reserving the right to every Senator to offer amendments.

Mr. HAWLEY. And positively to stop at 5 o'clock, when a vote shall be taken on the main question.

Mr. HILL. Five o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not agree to that.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is what I was afraid of.

Mr. CHANDLER. Suppose Senators do not cease offering amendments by 5 o'clock?

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the use of an agreement at all if you are going to make that kind of an agreement?

Mr. CHANDLER. That we shall finish the bill before we adjourn.

Mr. DUBOIS. I shall have to object. I think to-morrow some time we can better arrive at an agreement, after the debate has gone on a little further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. HILL. I ask the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] if he will yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. ALLEN. If I can go on in the morning, the bill retaining its place——

Mr. HILL. It is the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the unfinished business, and the Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. My speech is not yet through. I wish to conclude it in the morning, when the bill is laid before the Senate, and now, as there is routine business to be transacted, I yield the floor for to-day.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8109) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, Mr. GROUT, and Mr. BOUTELLE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Senator from New York to withhold the motion to adjourn which he proposed to make.

Mr. HILL. Very well; I shall not press the motion.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7977) "making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 342 and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"For a deep-water harbor for commerce and of refuge at Port Los Angeles, in Santa Monica Bay, California, or at San Pedro, in said State, the location of said harbor to be determined by an officer of the Navy, to be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy, an officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, to be detailed by the Superintendent of said Survey, and three experienced civil engineers, skilled in riparian work, to be appointed by the President, who shall constitute a board, and who shall personally examine said harbors, the decision of a majority of which shall be final as to the location of said harbor. It shall be the duty of said board to make plans, specifications, and estimates for said improvement. Whenever said board shall have settled the location and made report to the Secretary of War of the same, with said plans, specifications, and estimates, then the Secretary of War may make contracts for the completion of the improvement of the harbor so selected by said board, according to the project reported by them, at a cost not exceeding in the aggregate $2,900,000, and $50,000 is hereby appropriated, so much thereof as may be necessary to be used for the expenses of the board and payment of the civil engineers for their services, the amount to be determined by the Secretary of War: Provided, however, That if the board hereby constituted, as in this section provided, shall determine in favor of the construction of a breakwater at Port Los Angeles, no expenditure of any part of the money hereby appropriated shall be made, nor shall any contract for the construction of such breakwater be entered into until the Southern Pacific Company, or the owner or owners thereof, shall execute an agreement and file the same with the Secretary of War that any railroad company, or any corporation engaged in the business of transportation, may share in the use of the pier now constructed at Port Los Angeles and the approaches and tracks leading thereto, situate westerly of the easterly entrance to the Santa Monica tunnel, upon such just and equitable terms as may be agreed upon between the parties, and if they fail to agree, then to be determined by the Secretary of War; and before any expenditure of the money hereby appropriated is made for the construction of a breakwater at Port Los Angeles said Southern Pacific Company, or the owner of the tracks and approaches leading to said pier, shall execute an agreement and file the same with the Secretary of War, that any railroad or transportation company or corporation desiring to construct a wharf or pier in Santa Monica Bay may, for the purpose of approaching such wharf or pier, and for the purpose of constructing and operating the same, cross the track or tracks, approaches, and right of way now used by the Southern Pacific Company under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War and upon the payment of such compensation as that officer may find to be reasonable: Provided further, That in event said harbor is located at Port Los Angeles no greater royalty on the rock used for the construction of the breakwater than 12½ cents a cubic yard shall be charged, and the Southern Pacific Company shall charge no more than one-half a cent a ton-mile for freight on rock transported over its road."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the language proposed insert the following: "but no such contract shall be entered into until the board provided for in this act to determine the location of a deep-water harbor for commerce and of refuge, as between Port Los Angeles, in Santa Monica Bay, and San Pedro, in the State of California, has made its report to the Secretary of War, and not at all if said report shall be in favor of San Pedro as the location of said harbor"; and the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM P. FRYE,
M. S. QUAY,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. B. HOOKER,
BINGER HERMANN,
T. C. CATCHINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8109) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked by the other House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PERKINS, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

CYRUS THOMAS.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 4910) granting a pension to Cyrus Thomas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Cyrus Thomas, late second lieutenant Battery B, First Vermont Heavy Artillery, and sergeant Company B, Eleventh Vermont Infantry, a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension which he now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARKET PRIVILEGES FOR FARMERS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 148) for the relief of farmers and truck men in the city of Washington, D. C.

Mr. BUTLER. The requests for unanimous consent are granted with the understanding that they do not displace the present bill and can not do so, of course.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Certainly not.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATEN ISLAND RAPID TRANSIT COMPANY.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent to call up a local measure, the bill (S. 2628) to amend the act approved February 9, 1881, to grant the right of way for railroad purposes through certain lands of the United States in Richmond County, N. Y.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN LITTLE AND HOBART WILLIAMS.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 795) for the relief of John Little and Hobart Williams, of Omaha, Nebr.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to John Little and Hobart Williams $1,423.75, being the amount due them as reported by the Court of Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 23, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 22, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, in the vote on the pension of Mr. Hoover I voted "yea" yesterday, under the apprehension——

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey desires to make a personal statement.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I entered into an arrangement with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] for a pair, and received a letter from him stating certain cases that we agreed upon and others upon which he desired to vote, which were particularly the election cases, and from that I understood our pair was limited. But upon reading the letter I am under the impression that I should not have voted on the Hoover matter. I therefore desire to make this explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska demands the regular order, which is private business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 6833) defining the standard shape and size for dry measures in use in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 673) granting a pension to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major general, United States Army Volunteers.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TELLER, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7664) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 28, 32, 61, 91, 92, 93, 94, 96, 97, 109, 111, 112, 115, 120, 122, 123, 124, 126, 127, 128, 129, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 145, 146, 147, 161, and 190, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had still further insisted upon its amendments numbered 130, 132, and 342, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRYE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. VEST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, had still further insisted upon its amendments numbered 37, 64, 66, 69, and 70, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 2042) to increase the pension of Wilbur F. Cogswell.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 15,000 additional copies of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, Richardson's compilation, of which there shall be 5,000 copies for the Senate and 10,000 copies for the House of Representatives, to be distributed and disposed of, including the fraction in each case, as provided in the House joint resolution No. 170, approved on the 30th day of April, 1896.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3170) to authorize the Butler and Pittsburg Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Allegheny River; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 2284) for the relief of actual settlers on unsurveyed public lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 3170) to authorize the Butler and Pittsburg Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Allegheny River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

JOSEPH R. WEST.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 673) granting a pension to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major-general, United States Army Volunteers, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted insert "seventy-five"; and the House agree to the same.

J. A. PICKLER,
HENRY F. THOMAS,
C. J. ERDMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,
W. N. ROACH,
GEO. L. SHOUP,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXAMINATION AND CLASSIFICATION OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Public Lands on the bill (H. R. 5819) to provide for the examination and classification of certain lands in the State of California, and I desire to call it up.

The SPEAKER. The report does not have to be made in open House. It is not in order to make it in the House.

Mr. ELLIS. The Senate has submitted certain amendments to the House bill, which previously passed the House, and they asked for a conference. The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and the committee report it back with the recommendation that the House agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. But the Senate amendments require consideration in Committee of the Whole, do they not?

Mr. ELLIS. I am not sure about that. I think perhaps they do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined them, and finds they do. In that case the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit a parliamentary inquiry as to this case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LOUD. Here is a House bill.

The SPEAKER. It is a public bill, and therefore not in order to-day against unfinished private business.

Mr. LOUD. It is a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. It is not a privileged matter except on the days of public business.

Mr. ELLIS. Then I withdraw it for the present, and will call it up at some subsequent time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the matter should go to the Committee of the Whole, under the rules of the House.

Mr. LOUD. If the Chair will allow me one moment. If this report be made and it then go to Committee of the Whole it then will lose its privileged character.

The SPEAKER. It can not lose any privileged character by going where the rules require it to go.

Mr. LOUD. It seems to me strange how this, being privileged, got to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state precisely how it went to the committee. Being a House bill with Senate amendments, with a request for a conference, it went to the committee. That committee had the right to report, because the Senate requested a conference. Being reported, it goes to Committee of the Whole because that is the rule of the House.

Mr. LOUD. Well, but, Mr. Speaker, I see matters of a similar character every day presented to the House and the House privileged to take some action on the matter.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state any case?

Mr. LOUD. Why, appropriation bills and pension bills with Senate amendments on them.

The SPEAKER. Appropriation bills can not be considered under those circumstances except by unanimous consent. Pension bills for increases of pensions, with Senate amendments, or Senate amendments representing increases by the Senate are not within the rule of measures like this, where a new item is presented involving a new appropriation, which Rule XX of the House sends to the Committee of the Whole. The matter is very clear. That bill was submitted to the Chair, and the Chair was not aware that there was a new appropriation in it on a cursory examination; but on a careful examination it is quite evident there are expenditures not in the original bill, and relating to a new or cognate subject—that is, including another State.

Mr. LOUD. It is the same subject-matter, though relating to another State.

The SPEAKER. Relating to another State and making other expenditures.

NORTHERN PACIFIC INDEMNITY LAND SETTLERS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report. It is the one which we had up the other day. It was then read and laid over until yesterday morning, but I let it go over until this morning so as to give gentlemen an opportunity to examine it. The report was read and also the statement, but an objection was made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] to one feature of the substitute bill presented by the conference committee. I would like to dispose of the bill now, and if the gentleman from Arkansas desires, I will yield him time to explain his objection, retaining the floor. If, however, the other business of the House is in such a situation that this will interfere, I do not care to press it at this time.

The SPEAKER. There is other business pressing.

Mr. LACEY. Then I will withdraw the report for the present.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the river and harbor bill.

The conference report was read.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20, 36, 38, 48, 49, 67, 69, 73, 74, 75, 83, 104, 142, 157, 158, 160, 172, 207, 208, 223, 250, 251, 333.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 46, 47, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 70, 72, 78, 79, 81, 82, 84, 85, 88, 89, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 105, 106, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 127, 129, 131, 133, 134, 135, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 159, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 168, 169, 170, 171, 173 (but to be inserted at the end of the item for the Potomac River, instead of that for the Appomattox River, as erroneously printed), 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 200, 201, 202, 203, 205, 206, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 246, 247, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 261, 262, 263, 264, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 384, 385, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language stricken out insert the two following paragraphs:

"For the purpose of strengthening and improving the bulkheads and pier along the property belonging to the estate of J. P. Robinson, which abuts on the channel known as Gowanus Creek Channel, the said estate of J. P. Robinson, its heirs, their successors, or assigns, are hereby authorized to construct and maintain the bulkhead distant 30 feet southerly from the present bulkhead line, beginning 470 feet from the southerly side of Bryant street and the easterly side of Court street, and said bulkhead shall then continue westerly parallel with the present bulkhead to a point distant 45 feet from the present easterly line of the pier at present owned by the estate of J. P. Robinson, and extending thence southerly in a straight line distant 45 feet from said pier line to the present bulkhead line continued, a distance of about 393 feet.

"Improving Gowanus Creek Channel, New York, by deepening the same to 26 feet at mean low water, from the foot of Percival street to its junction with the Red Hook Channel, $25,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language stricken out insert the following paragraph:

"Improving harbor at Mamaroneck, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, in accordance with report of Chief of Engineers, 1887, $10,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "report," proposed to be inserted; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"And that when said C. P. Goodyear, his heirs and assigns, have procured a 200-foot channel of a minimum depth of 23 feet at mean high tide, $30,000 shall be paid therefor; and when he has secured a channel 200 feet wide, 24 feet deep at mean high tide, an additional $40,000 shall be paid therefor; and that all of said deepening of said bar shall be completed within three years from the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That no payment shall be made to said Goodyear or his legal representatives except upon a certificate of the Secretary of War, made after personal survey by an experienced officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, selected by him for that purpose, that such depths and widths have severally been obtained by him or them; and said officer shall make to Congress a report in detail of the amount of work done, its cost, and its value to the Government."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 86 and 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 86 and 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$80,000"; and strike out all the remainder of the paragraph, being the proviso, including amendment numbered 87; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "improvement," in the second line of the paragraph, strike out the word "fifty" and insert "seventy-five"; and after the word "million," in the seventh line of the paragraph, insert the words "and fifty thousand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 107, 108, 109, 110, and 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 107, 108, 109, 110, and 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the entire paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following paragraph:

"Improving harbor at Manistee, Mich.: Continuing improvement and dredging the interior channel, $15,000; and all moneys heretofore appropriated and now unexpended may be used for dredging such interior channel at the discretion of the Secretary of War. Any limitations on such former appropriations are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the language proposed to be stricken out, and after the word "Provided" in the first line of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the word "further"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 128: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 136: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 136, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the language proposed to be stricken out, and at the end of it insert the following: "If in the opinion of the Secretary of War the interests of commerce demand such expenditure"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 167: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 167, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the twelfth line of the language proposed to be inserted strike out the word "but," after the word "Point," and insert in lieu thereof the word "until"; and in the fourteenth line of said proposed language strike out the words "through the Secretary to the next Congress" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to the Secretary of War on the first Monday in December of the current year"; and at the end of the language proposed insert the following:

"And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to carry out the recommendations of said board, and to modify the present contract, if necessary, and adjust any loss with the contractor occasioned by the provisions of this act, and to pay the same out of the appropriation under which the said contract was made; also to expend the additional sum of $25,000, in his discretion, for such dredging as may be necessary for the maintenance of channels from the mouths of the Appoquinimink River and Blackbird Creek in the channel of the Delaware River through the dike now being constructed from Reedy Island to Liston Point for the improvement of the Delaware."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 185: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 185, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 199: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 199, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 259: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 259, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "dollars," at the end of the first proviso, insert the words "exclusive of the amount herein appropriated"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 260: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 260, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Before the word "obtaining," next preceding the words proposed to be inserted, insert the word "ultimately"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 265: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 265, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the language proposed to be inserted all after the word "Commission" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the purpose of improving the channel by preventing erosion of the banks, not exceeding $70,000 at Omaha and Council Bluffs, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Rocheport, not exceeding $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Glasgow, and for protecting the shore line above Glasgow from the foot of Bowling Green Bend to the head of Harrisons Island, not exceeding $80,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Miami, not exceeding $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at St. Charles, not exceeding $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at and near the mouth of the Little Blue, in Jackson County, Mo., not exceeding $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; on the banks of the river opposite Leavenworth and Atchison, not exceeding $15,000 at each of said localities, or so much thereof as may be necessary; at Nebraska City, not exceeding $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the Commission may also expend such amounts as may be absolutely necessary at any time in the improvement of the channel by preventing erosion of the banks at other harbors and localities on the river."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 308: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 308, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the section proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be made and transmitted to the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress a compilation giving a complete list of all the preliminary examinations that have heretofore been made, date of report, with a statement as to each, whether favorable or unfavorable for survey; also a complete list of all surveys that have heretofore been made, with a statement as to each, whether favorable for adoption or unfavorable, and date of report, amount recommended for completion and amount recommended for each, to be expended during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1896, by both the Chief of Engineers and the engineer in charge; also a complete list of all projects now under construction or maintenance, together with the year when adopted, and if modified, when; the total amount expended on each project and estimate of amount required to complete the same, and amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers and by the engineer in charge to be expended during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1898, the amount appropriated for each project by this act, making reference to the report of the Chief of Engineers, where report of each project is given, together with a statement containing the amount of the unexpended balance to the credit of each project July 1, 1897, whether under construction, work suspended, or appropriation made and work not commenced; also the total amounts appropriated heretofore for the improvement and maintenance of the rivers, and the total amounts heretofore appropriated for the improvement and maintenance of harbors in each river and harbor act; also the total amount of appropriation, by States, for the improvement of rivers and harbors."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 324: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 324, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language stricken out insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause to be made accurate examinations and estimates of cost of construction of a ship canal, by the most practicable route, wholly within the United States, from the Great Lakes to the navigable waters of the Hudson River, of sufficient capacity to transport the tonnage of the lakes to the sea."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 360: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 360, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"Delaware River, with a view to obtaining a channel 600 feet wide and 30 feet deep from a point at or near the city of Philadelphia to the deep water of Delaware Bay."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 375: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 375, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the language proposed insert the following new paragraph:

"Removal of dam in upper Allegheny, near Corydon, and all the dams on the Conewango Creek, and the rapids at or near Waterboro, in the Conewango Creek, a tributary of the Allegheny River."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 376: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 376, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the language proposed to be inserted insert the following paragraph:

"Gowanus Creek, with a view of obtaining a depth of 30 feet at mean low water."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 383: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 383, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the line after the language proposed to be inserted strike out the word "from," before the word "modified," and insert in lieu thereof the word "for"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 386: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 386, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "refuge," in the next paragraph but one preceding, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Inner harbor at Point Judith Pond."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 130, 132, and 342: The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 130, 132, and 342.

W. B. HOOKER,
BINGER HERMANN,
T. C. CATCHINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. P. FRYE,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report, insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments numbered 130, 132, and 342, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. I send to the Clerk's desk the statement which accompanies the report.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The bill as it passed the House carried appropriations amounting to	$10,453,860.00
And contracts amounting to	51,721,210.91
As the bill passed the Senate it carried	12,752,350.00
And contracts amounting to	60,473,121.91
The cash items have been reduced in conference	$201,000.00
And the reduction in the amount of projects placed under contract is	4,110,823.00
The Senate amendments upon which no agreements have been reached involve appropriations amounting to	100,000.00
And contracts amounting to	3,341,000.00

W. B. HOOKER.
BINGER HERMANN.
T. C. CATCHINGS.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, is that statement signed by the House conferees? The rules require an official statement, signed by the conferees. I will, however, waive that point so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HOOKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is any gentleman who desires to debate this matter, I am willing to yield time for that purpose.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to be heard; but I suppose the gentleman himself desires to make a statement.

Mr. HOOKER. I will make mine after you get through. How much time do you desire?

Mr. DOCKERY. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. HOOKER. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suppose the gentleman will yield me five minutes additional if I require it.

Mr. HOOKER. If necessary.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House for a very few moments, but even if I desired longer time I would be unable to secure it. I am in favor of proper appropriations for the improvement of the facilities for water transportation, but I am opposed to this bill because it carries riotous appropriations not warranted by the condition of the Treasury or the condition of business of the country. I know, Mr. Speaker, that what I may say will not be punctuated by applause. I realize that fact as well as any Representative on this floor. As my friend from California [Mr. LOUD] aptly suggests, "We are all in it." That expresses the whole situation. [Laughter.] When this bill left the House it carried, including the indefinite appropriation for the Monongahela River, appropriations and liabilities aggregating $65,148,770.91, having received the affluent consideration in debate of forty minutes all told, without the right of amendment. As reported to the Senate by the Senate Committee on Commerce it carried in direct appropriations $12,690,550, the indefinite appropriation of $3,000,000 for the Monongahela River, and authorized contracts of $63,353,121, making a grand total of $79,043,671.

Mr. Speaker, in this connection I desire to call attention to the rapidly increasing totals of the river and harbor bills, altogether out of proportion to the progress of the country. Since 1878 the appropriations have been as follows:

	APPROPRIATIONS.
1878		$8,201,700.00
1879		7,846,600.00
1880		8,951,500.00
1881		11,441,300.00
1882		18,738,875.00
1884		13,949,200.00
1886		14,473,900.00
1888		22,397,616.90
1890	$25,136,295.00	38,419,274.00
Contracts authorized	13,282,979.00

Mr. HOOKER. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment, I wish to say that he has not correctly stated the amount for 1890. As I understand, it was $13,282,979.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the contracts were additional to the direct appropriations of that bill. The statement to which I am referring was prepared by the accomplished clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations; and I venture to say it is correct.

In 1892 the appropriations were $21,154,218; contracts authorized, $31,760,521; total, $52,914,739. In 1894 the appropriations were $11,473,180, and no contracts authorized. In 1896, in the pending bill as passed by the Senate and sent to conference, the aggregate of specific appropriations was $12,690,550; Monongahela River, indefinite, $3,000,000; contracts authorized, $63,353,121; aggregate, $79.043,671.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. DOCKERY. I can not yield. I have only ten minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will give the gentleman some of my time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I decline to be interrupted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the liabilities under the contract system are rapidly increasing. The contract system was recognized for the first time in the river and harbor bill of 1890, the amount of contracts then authorized being $13,282,979. In 1892 the amount leaped to $31,760,521; and this bill as reported to the Senate authorized contracts amounting to $63,353,121; and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] suggests that the amount should be $100,000,000. I regret that the efforts of the gentleman from Oregon, in behalf of that State, were not recognized by the people of his district in the recent convention which nominated someone else as Representative in Congress; because by his diligence and ability he has furnished through river and harbor bills the greatest source of revenue to the State of Oregon that it has ever enjoyed.

Mr. HERMANN. My friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] will allow me to say that the issue to which he refers was not raised before the people of Oregon; and if the people of Oregon had had the decision of the matter it would, I believe, have been decided very differently, so far as I am concerned, and by a very large majority. The people of Oregon favor the most liberal waterway improvements, and have indorsed my action in Congress many times, for which I feel grateful to them.

Mr. DOCKERY. I agree with the gentleman——

Mr. HERMANN. They believe in public appropriations for purposes of this kind.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know the ability of the gentleman nominated as successor to my friend, but if I had resided in Oregon and been called upon to name a Republican for the position, I should have supported the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN].

Mr. Speaker, I now desire to call the attention of the House to the views of a distinguished citizen of New York; and I commend them to the brilliant young New Yorker [Mr. HOOKER] in charge of this bill. They are the views of Chester A. Arthur, submitted to this body when President of the United States, in the celebrated veto of the river and harbor bill of August 1, 1882. They seem appropriate to this occasion. I quote the message:

To the House of Representatives:

Having watched with much interest the progress of House bill No. 6242, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," and having since it was received carefully examined it, after mature consideration I am constrained to return it herewith to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, without my signature and with my objections to its passage.

Many of the appropriations in the bill are clearly for the general welfare and most beneficent in their character. Two of the objects for which provision is made were by me considered so important that I felt it my duty to direct to them the attention of Congress. In my annual message in December last I urged the vital importance of legislation for the reclamation of the marshes and for the establishment of the harbor lines along the Potomac front. In April last, by special message, I recommended an appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River. It is not necessary that I say that when my signature would make the bill appropriating for these and other valuable national objects a law, it is with great reluctance and only under a sense of duty that I withhold it.

My principal objection to the bill is that it contains appropriations for purposes not for the common defense or general welfare, and which do not promote commerce among the States. These provisions, on the contrary, are entirely for the benefit of the particular localities in which it is proposed to make the improvements. I regard such appropriation of the public money as beyond the powers given by the Constitution to Congress and the President.

I feel the more bound to withhold my signature from the bill because of the peculiar evils which manifestly result from this infraction of the Constitution. Appropriations of this nature, to be devoted purely to local objects, tend to an increase in number and in amount. As the citizens of one State find that money, to raise which they in common with the whole country are taxed, is to be expended for local improvements in another State, they demand similar benefits for themselves, and it is not unnatural that they should seek to indemnify themselves for such use of the public funds by securing appropriations for similar improvements in their own neighborhood.

I invite especial attention, Mr. Speaker, to the following sentence, inasmuch as it emphasizes the appropriate suggestion just made by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD]:

Thus as the bill becomes more objectionable it secures more support.

Again, President Arthur says:

This result is invariable and necessarily follows a neglect to observe the constitutional limitations imposed upon the lawmaking powers.

The appropriations for river and harbor improvements have, under the influences to which I have alluded, increased year by year out of proportion to the progress of the country, great as that has been. In 1870 the aggregate appropriation was $3,975,900; in 1875, $6,648,517.50; in 1880, $8,976,500, and in 1881, $11,451,000, while by the present act there is appropriated $18,743,875.

While feeling every disposition to leave to the Legislature the responsibility of determining what amount should be appropriated for the purposes of the bill, so long as the appropriations are confined to objects indicated by the grant of power, I can not escape the conclusion that, as a part of the lawmaking power of the Government, the duty devolves upon me to withhold my signature from a bill containing appropriations which in my opinion greatly exceed in amount the needs of the country for the present fiscal year. It being the usage to provide money for these purposes by annual appropriation bills, the President is in effect directed to expend so large an amount of money within so brief a period that the expenditure can not be made economically and advantageously.

The extravagant expenditure of public money is an evil not to be measured by the value of that money to the people who are taxed for it. They sustain a greater injury in the demoralizing effect produced upon those who are intrusted with official duty through all the ramifications of Government.

These objections could be removed and every constitutional purpose readily attained should Congress enact that one-half only of the aggregate amount provided for in the bill be appropriated for expenditure during the fiscal year, and that the sum so appropriated be expended only for such objects named in the bill as the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, shall determine; provided that in no case shall the expenditure for any one purpose exceed the sum now designated by the bill for that purpose.

I feel authorized to make this suggestion because of the duty imposed upon the President by the Constitution "to recommend to the consideration of Congress such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient"; and because it is my earnest desire that the public works which are in progress shall suffer no injury. Congress will also convene again in four months, when this whole subject will be open for their consideration.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 1, 1882.

Mr. Speaker, I have read the veto message of that prince among gentlemen, that splendid American President, who, called to the Presidency under circumstances peculiarly embarrassing, so acquitted himself in the discharge of the duties of that great office that in his retirement to private life he carried with him the grateful benedictions of the whole people.

Mr. Speaker, this bill to me is more suggestive of the profligate expenditures of the kings of France in the years immediately preceding the Revolution than any bill called to my attention during my Congressional service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like a few minutes more.

Mr. HOOKER. I yield the gentleman two minutes additional.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman must excuse me. If I had more time I would gladly yield.

Mr. HOOKER. I will yield the gentleman so much additional time as he may require to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well.

Mr. HOOKER. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, in the first place, I want to ask the gentleman this question: Whether he can see any parallel between the expenditures of France, to which he has referred, under the kings there, and the expenditures under this bill, which are for the benefit of the whole people? And, in the second place, is there an item in the bill—and if there is I wish he would point it out—which is objectionable and which can not be advocated and supported on the ground of public good?

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, Mr. Speaker, there was not a King of France who ever laid the heavy hand of the taxgatherer upon the people who did not claim to do it in the interest of the people.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no!

Mr. DOCKERY. And there is not a single item in this bill that does not come here challenging our approval in the name of the people. [Applause.] And I say further that you know, and I know—but I have not the time to analyze the items of this bill in the limited time accorded me—you know that while the bill has many meritorious features, yet it is honeycombed with local projects for private purposes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Name one of them.

Mr. HOOKER. Point them out.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). And, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TOWNE. Let me interrupt the gentleman from Missouri to ask if it would not be better for him, instead of reading criticisms upon a bill 14 years of age, to point out the items in the present bill which he regards as worthy of reproach, or which are unjustifiable?

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that I have not gone into the details of this bill because I was assured by the gentleman in charge of the bill that I could not secure more than ten minutes' time for discussion.

Mr. HOOKER. I will yield you time to point them out.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). And I have to indulge, perhaps, in generalities, because the time is so limited.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that my protest will be unheeded. I know that my voice will fall on dull ears; I know the claim will be made here and throughout the country that the enormous total of this bill, covering as it does about eighty millions of liabilities, is for the public weal. But I desire to say——

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). But I appeal from this tribunal to the great body of the American people. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I appeal from the Representatives here who intend to support this bill to the farmers of the country, to men who follow the plow and toil for their daily subsistence; I appeal to the men who work in the fields and in the factories and in the mines, and to the men who are engaged in the various business avocations of the country——

Mr. HOPKINS. And they will all repudiate you. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). I appeal to the vast army of men who earn their bread by their daily toil. I appeal, Mr. Speaker, to them to condemn this riotous, this enormous, this unjustifiable, this profligate appropriation of public money. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOKER. Now will you yield for a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. If time were conceded I would be glad to yield to any gentleman. But the gentleman from New York will have his own time.

Mr. HOOKER. I will yield you abundance of time.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). If it were conceded by everybody that the incoming Administration is to be Democratic, then it might be claimed by some of us that these stupendous liabilities you are imposing on the people and upon the Treasury are intended to embarrass such an Administration.

Mr. HULICK. Nobody thinks that.

Mr. DOCKERY. But with the confident assurance which you make, with the claim that the incoming Administration is to be Republican, I am at a loss to understand the policy which piles up appropriations and liabilities to more than $600,000,000.

Sir, I do not know who will be the next President——

A MEMBER. McKinley.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). It is alleged by our Republican friends that their party will triumph, and that the gentleman from Ohio will be the next President of the United States; but I hope——

Mr. COLSON. If he is, one thing is certain—you will never praise him until after he is dead.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). I hope his friends on this floor will protest against the further ravishing of the Treasury [derisive laughter on the Republican side], that will result in its impoverishment and the embarrassment of the Administration.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say again that I invoke the aid of all the people in denunciation of this bill, which will still further deplete the Treasury, already embarrassed in so far as current revenues and expenditures are concerned [applause and laughter on the Republican side], and intimidate the business interests of the country, now suffering from ocean to ocean.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman yield to me now for a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield the floor to the gentleman.

Mr. HOOKER. It is unfair in the gentleman, after conceding him the time, not to answer a question which I wish to ask in good faith.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly, I will answer it.

Mr. HOOKER. And it is this: You supported the fortification bill, I believe, which provided for an appropriation of about $80,000,000, did you not?

Mr. DOCKERY. I was not in this city when that bill was considered by the Committee on Appropriations. I was called away on a mission unnecessary to refer to——

Mr. HOOKER. Then by your absence the Treasury must have suffered greatly.

Mr. DOCKERY. And I do not think I was present when it was considered on the floor of this House.

Mr. HOOKER. Just another question. I will yield to you five, ten, or fifteen minutes' time if you will point out a single item in this river and harbor bill which is not justified by the report of the engineer. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, it is known and has been known for years that the estimates of the Departments for appropriations——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HOOKER. No; I do not yield.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well; I am cut off from the answer I should like to make.

Mr. HOOKER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I assure you that I have no expectation of in any manner disturbing the convictions of the House with regard to the immediate necessity of passing this bill. I know that there are a large number of gentlemen who, on various occasions, notably this morning, have made it manifest that they regard it as imperative that the bill should pass; and I can always tell approximately, Mr. Speaker, how much of an appropriation is in a particular district by the vociferous manner in which members of the House always resent adverse criticism. The gentlemen who are most intent on showing their disapprobation of everything that is said in opposition to this measure are almost always those who have succeeded in securing the greatest possible amount.

But, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen have been very anxious to have some one point out the iniquities in this bill, while the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] was using the first ten minutes allotted to him. Did you want anything of that kind, gentlemen? You passed this bill without debate, and I make the affirmation here now that not one section has been considered in this House. Why, Mr. Speaker, was there ever anything known in all the history of villainous legislation like this? Seventy-five million dollars in round numbers taken out of the Treasury of the United States, and not one section of the bill has yet been read for amendment. Not one paragraph had a moment's deliberate consideration. There was not an opportunity to say a word in opposition to the multiplied iniquities of the measure.

And now gentlemen have the insolence to get up on this floor and demand that the opponents of this bill shall point out wherein its iniquities lurk. Shame on such false pretense! Shame on it, I say! It is unworthy of the American Congress. If this bill is what you claim, if from every line of it there is to come blessing, why did you, coward-like, get away from investigation? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why did you do it? Mr. Speaker, I have no time in ten minutes to address myself to the provisions of this bill further than to call attention to one of the amendments proposed now. As the bill left this body fifty-odd millions were provided for in the nature of contracts. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] succeeded in getting an amendment on the bill, by consent, that 25 per cent only should be available in any one year. I say that practically the conferees have taken out that wholesome provision from this bill and that practically the whole sum of $74,000,000 may be saddled upon the Government in a single year——

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). Not in the way of payments, but in the way of deferred payments upon which the contractor will secure his interest in the increased demand that he will make for the work.

Mr. HOOKER. Will you permit me a question? You do not desire to be otherwise than fair?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not. Will you read the fifth section in your time? Do not take it out of my time.

Mr. HOOKER. I will give you abundant time. The modifications made by the conference committee, so far as these continuous contracts are concerned, will not change the appropriations for any one fiscal year under these contracts to exceed $2,000,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not said that they would.

Mr. HOOKER. You say it would all become available in one year?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I did not say that.

Mr. HOOKER. What I say to you to correct you is this: That if all these contracts entered into are made by the Secretary of War immediately when he is authorized to do so, and all the money provided for under the bill, he can not expend in any one fiscal year, under the bill as it stands now, to exceed $16,612,873. Now, under the bill as it passed the House the amount that could be expended by the Secretary of War in any one year under the continuous contracts was $14,307,000, so the difference which you say the conferees have made is simply $2,000,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman has entirely misunderstood what I said. I said that under the provisions of your recommendation the Secretary of War can burden the Government of the United States with an amount equal to every dollar, in debts, of this seventy-odd millions, and you make it worse because we all know that when a contract is to be made covering a period of four years and there are deferred payments, the contractor will insist upon such an increased sum for his work as will cover the interest on the deferred payment. That is the point I made.

Mr. HOOKER. Your statement was that the Secretary of War could pile up on the Government an indebtedness of $75,000,000 in a year. I want to say to you that under the bill it is not true.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is untrue to this extent—that he has $12,000,000 or $13,000,000 to pay out, and the residue he could pile up on the Government of the United States through contracts.

Mr. HOOKER. My dear sir, he can only expend $12,000,000 and some odd hundred thousand dollars, which is provided in the annual appropriation, and not exceeding $16,000,000 in any year under contract.

Mr. HEPBURN. He will expend this sum of $12,000,000 and then the additional sum of $16,000,000, and all between these sums and the gross sum covered by this bill he may saddle upon the Government as debt under the contracts. He can make the Government of the United States responsible in the nature of contracts, and for the deferred payments made the contractor will recoup himself in additional sums he will demand for his work. Is not that true?

Mr. HOOKER. No, sir; because it is stated in the bill precisely how much can be expended in any one fiscal year.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is as to the first payment. Now, let me confound the gentleman with half a dozen sentences from his own bill:

SEC. 5. That under the authority to make contracts for materials and work, under the provisions of this act, in addition to the sums appropriated herein, the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay, in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than $400,000 upon the said contracts for any one of the works herein placed under the contract system, except as herein otherwise specifically authorized to do: Provided, Any part of the annual allotment herein provided for, not earned and paid for, material furnished, or work done in one fiscal year, may be paid for material furnished and work done under the contracts in any subsequent fiscal year: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so constructed as to prevent the Secretary of War from making contracts for the whole or any part of the works placed under the contract system in such manner as may be deemed best, payments, however, to be made as stated in this section.

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir; and that is just what I say here. Here is the limitation; and notwithstanding the $60,000,000 in contracts authorized here, the Secretary of War can not obligate this Government to pay more than $16,000,000 in any one fiscal year.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is true; but here is an indebtedness to the other amount, and here is interest in the form of a larger demand that will be made because of the deferred payments. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that is plain.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I desire to ask the gentleman if he is familiar with this experience under the contract system—that in almost every case there has been a saving of from 25 to 33 and even 50 per cent under contract system; and that this $76,000,000 to which he refers is merely a possible approximation of the cost, but does not represent the actual ultimate expense.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am free to admit that the contract system is the better system if you will make the payments promptly. There is no question about that. Heretofore, under the old system, we have been in the habit of appropriating 25 per cent, about, of the estimated cost of the work, and the contractor could only get a contract for the amount appropriated that year. There would be a necessity for assembling four different plants.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. My time was largely occupied by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HOOKER. Do you desire further time?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER. How much time would you like?

Mr. HEPBURN. Just about as much as you had.

Mr. HOOKER. About five minutes?

Mr. HEPBURN. I was thinking about eight minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOKER. All right.

Mr. HEPBURN. So that, Mr. Speaker, there would be four contracts always to complete a work, and in the payment of each contractor he must have compensation for the assembling of his plants, the assembling of his hands, and the deterioration of the work during the suspended period of work. Under this system, to some extent, that difficulty will be obviated; but where you make deferred payments you have got to do as every debtor does; you have got to pay interest in some form or other upon these millions; and in addition to that, the difficulties of getting appropriations out of the Congress of the United States, where a debt is due, is something that all the people of the United States know of, and we will have to pay, in all of these contracts, for the reputation that we have upon matters of that kind.

Mr. HERMANN. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I will say that admitting all that the gentleman has said, the gentleman will still see that there will be very great saving, amounting to from 25 to 30 per cent; and inasmuch as the gentleman is one who is in favor of economy in public expenditures, surely he would not prefer the old system to this, when there has been such a large saving in the amount that has been expended under this system.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman understand he was asking me a question?

Mr. HERMANN. I am asking whether you do not believe that the present system is far better, even assuming that it is necessary to pay a considerable sum in the form of interest on the deferred payments?

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I will not ask you another question. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, if I had had the time I would have tried to point out some of the expenditures carried in this bill that I think are not for the public interest. Some are good, but many items are bad, very bad. I would have referred again, as I have often referred in times past, to the pretended improvement of the Mississippi River, especially for the purpose of emphasizing the reasons which possibly inspire the eloquence of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] on these occasions. I remember seeing a few days ago, in one of the public prints, resolutions adopted in the county convention of a county within the gentleman's district. One of those resolutions went on to recite that the Democrats there assembled did not agree with that distinguished gentleman upon national questions; that upon those questions he was all wrong and did not represent his people; but that he had been so useful to the people of that district in securing appropriations to build levees along the Mississippi River to protect their plantations from inundation that, notwithstanding the fact that they were not en rapport with him upon political matters generally, they instructed their delegates to vote to continue him in Congress.

I do not hestitate to say, Mr. Speaker, that all the good that has been accomplished by the appropriations which have been made in river and harbor bills for that section is found in the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands from the incursions of the waters of the Mississippi River. We had here, and the committee had before them, the report of the Secretary of War in relation to the so-called Mississippi improvement, in which he stated that $27,000,000 had been expended upon that river since the organization of the Mississippi River Commission, and that the only result as to the improvement in navigation was that there had been an increase of 18 inches in the channel depth of the river in two places! That is the testimony of the Secretary of War upon that subject, and I call attention to the fact that after an expenditure of $27,000,000 there were last year twenty-three points on the Mississippi River right in the region of the "improvement" where there was a channel depth not exceeding 4½ feet. Twenty-seven million dollars expended, and the navigation of the river still in the same condition substantially in which it was when the first dollar was expended! And yet, because there are voters along that river, and because the aid of their Representatives here is necessary in order to pass the river and harbor bill, that work is continued year after year and that Commission has a renewed lease of its power, and the work of building now goes on.

Mr. Speaker, I was glad when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] read the message of President Arthur of less than fourteen years ago, in which he called attention to the wonderful rapidity of the growth of the river and harbor bill through means which he mildly criticised. At that time the bill had reached only $18,000,000, but in fourteen years, by progressive steps, we have gone on and on in these raids upon the Treasury until to-day there is the enormous sum of $74,000,000 carried and provided for in the bill under consideration and no remonstrance against it.

Mr. HERMANN. We are becoming wiser in our legislation.

Mr. HEPBURN. If we go on at this rate—and there is every reason to believe that we shall, for I have no expectation that the next House of Representatives will be more virtuous than this, or the succeeding one more virtuous than the next—if we go on at this rate, I leave the probable enormous increase of future river and harbor bills to the prophetic wisdom of some of the friends of this measure.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I will detain the House only a few moments with reference to this report. In explaining what has been done I desire to say simply this: The bill as it passed the House carried an appropriation in cash of $10,453,860. It carried continuing contracts aggregating $51,721,210.91. The cash appropriation was increased by the Senate to $12,752,350——

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HOOKER. I will.

Mr. HEPBURN. Suppose that the gentleman should be continued in the next Congress as chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors——

Mr. HOOKER. You are supposing something that may not occur.

Mr. HEPBURN. I hope it will.

Mr. HOOKER. Thank you.

Mr. HEPBURN. Suppose that should be so, and that there should be the same class of "meritorious appropriations" presented to that Congress that have been presented to this, would not the gentleman favor a like bill to this for the next Congress?

Mr. HOOKER. If I were honored with the position which the gentleman suggests, I would favor a bill which I thought would meet the demands of the people [applause]; and I will say to the gentleman that I think this bill meets the demands of the people to a greater extent than any river and harbor bill that has ever been passed by the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Then would not the gentleman give us another bill of the same character next year?

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman is going further into the future than I can see.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, in view of the probability of that, is it not unfair for the gentleman to lay such stress on the comparative smallness of the mere cash appropriation in this bill?

Mr. HOOKER. I think not. I think that, as I go on, I will demonstrate to the House that I am correct. To continue, Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that the cash appropriation was increased by the Senate to $12,752,350. The Senate increased the contracts to $60,000,473.91. In conference the cash appropriation has been reduced to $12,551,350. The contracts authorized by the bill as it passed the Senate have been reduced in conference $4,110,823, so that they now stand, as agreed upon in conference, at $56,357,308.91.

The Senate in its amendment provided for eight additional continuing contracts—one at Winyaw Bay, South Carolina, carrying an appropriation of $1,996,250; one at Oakland Harbor, California, carrying an appropriation of $666,000; one at Santa Monica, Cal., $2,998,000; one at Wilmington Harbor, California, $342,000; one at Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, $707,000; one at Bayou Plaquemine, Louisiana, $1,173,250; one at Columbia River Boat Railway, Oregon and Washington, $2,064,477, and Lake Washington Canal, Washington, $1,400,000. That has been reduced, as I stated a moment ago, $4,000,000, with two projects yet in dispute between the conferees, the one at Wilmington, Cal., and the other at Santa Monica, aggregating about $3,500,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the bill as it passed the House placed a limitation upon these contracts; in other words, the House bill provided that in any one fiscal year the Secretary of War should not expend under these continuous contracts more than 25 per cent of the amount estimated for the completion of the project. That has been amended in the Senate by a provision which states that not to exceed $400,000 shall be expended on any one project in any single year. That is the general provision in the bill applying in all cases except four projects, if I remember correctly—one the Hennepin Canal——

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HOOKER. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that as to all the cases in this bill where the amount of the contract authorized is less than $400,000 the whole amount may be paid in any one year?

Mr. HOOKER. That is correct.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, will the gentleman tell us what amount of payment may be required under that provision, together with the other percentage, during the fiscal year ending in 1897?

Mr. HOOKER. I shall endeavor to do so before I get through. The Senate provision, as I was saying, modified the House provision. There are four projects in the country as to which there is a limitation that not to exceed 25 per cent of the amount estimated to complete the work shall be expended in any one fiscal year. One of these is the Hennepin Canal; another the project at Duluth; another the improvement at Buffalo; and a fourth the harbor of refuge in Delaware Bay. I have had a computation made of the amount which would be expended under these contracts by both the House provision and the Senate provision, provided the Secretary of War should let the contract for the entire amount estimated for the completion of the work. If he should let all those contracts provided for in the bill, for the full amount estimated, there would be expended under the continuous contracts in one fiscal year $16,000,000 under the Senate provision and $14,000,000 under the House provision.

Now I wish to say further that experience has demonstrated that there has been saved on the part of the Government by this system of continuous contracts all the way from 10 to 50 per cent in the different projects throughout the country. We have completed and paid all the continuous contracts heretofore authorized except an expenditure of about $4,000,000. Therefore I say I am justified in the statement that while this provision as it now stands in the form adopted by the Senate authorizes the expenditure of $56,000,000 for continuous contracts, according to the figures that have been furnished us by the Chief of Engineers, these contracts will be let for from ten to fifteen million dollars less than the amount authorized; in other words, there will be a reduction of from ten to fifteen million dollars at least from the $56,000,000.

Now, if the Secretary of War be prohibited from obligating the Government to pay upward of $400,000 on any one of these contracts in any one fiscal year there can not be in any event, after the cash appropriations have been exhausted, more than $16,000,000 which the Government will have to pay.

I wish to say further that it is not at all likely that all these projects will be in such a condition that the contracts can be let immediately after the passage of this bill. It may be some little time before they are all contracted for.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. If there are $60,000,000——

Mr. HOOKER. Fifty-six million dollars I said.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, for convenience I will say $60,000,000. If the amount in the aggregate may be $60,000,000, may not $15,000,000 mature during the next fiscal year on the continuing contracts——

Mr. HOOKER. No, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then you will have to add that to the $12,000,000 carried outright by the bill. Now I wish to know what portion of these contracts will fall under $400,000; because all of them may mature in the first year.

Mr. HOOKER. There are, I will say to the gentleman, very few—only two or three—less than $400,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. So that you have there $27,000,000 or $28,000,000 that may possibly be expended.

Mr. HOOKER. No, sir; there are no circumstances under which this Government can be obligated to pay under these continuous contracts more than $16,000,000 in one year if every one of these contracts be let.

Mr. HEPBURN. But the bill itself carries $12,000,000 in addition to the contracts. Add that amount to the $16,000,000 and you have $28,000,000.

Mr. HOOKER. I am not including the $12,000,000 in the continuous contracts. They are two separate and distinct propositions.

Mr. DOCKERY. We shall have in addition the usual bill next year.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman is making a prophecy for next year. If we come back here—and I hope you will all come back in the Fifty-fifth Congress—and a river and harbor bill is prepared, I hope, as I said a moment ago, that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will prepare a bill which will meet the urgent demands of the commerce of the country, and that they will have the courage to urge such a bill, even if it does take a few million dollars to make the appropriations.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like, with the gentleman's permission, to ask him one or two questions.

Mr. HOOKER. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to know, first, whether these continuing contracts, in the main, involve the completion of the works which embrace them and for which the appropriations are made by this bill?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir; they are to complete the contracts.

Mr. HENDERSON. So that you will in the future eliminate them from the necessity of further appropriations?

Mr. HOOKER. They will be eliminated; all of them.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now, if I understand you correctly, under the provisions of this bill, which we are now considering, $12,000,000 is the minimum and $16,000,000 is the maximum that can possibly be expended or called for by the Secretary of War, under the operations of the bill, from the Treasury during the next fiscal year?

Mr. HOOKER. No; not quite that. Twelve millions, I will state to the gentleman, of cash appropriations are made by the bill for the two years.

Mr. DINGLEY. Or at the rate of $6,000,000 a year.

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir. Now, there may be, if the contracts are all let by the Secretary of War, and are entered into by the contractors when he has the authority under the bill to let them, and at the estimated cost they are supposed to involve—the maximum amount that the Government would be obliged to pay is about $16,000,000 by reason of them.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then, do I understand that four millions may be added to the twelve millions, making sixteen millions; or is it an additional sum of sixteen millions to be added to the twelve millions?

Mr. HOOKER. The cash appropriations and the continuing appropriations are two separate items.

Mr. HENDERSON. At all events, you are sure that twelve millions will be expended during the year?

Mr. HOOKER. No; during the two years that the bill runs.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well. Then there may be sixteen millions more, in addition, within the two years?

Mr. HOOKER. Whenever the Secretary of War enters into the contracts, if he enters into all of them that he is authorized to enter into by the bill, he may obligate the Government to pay the amount of $16,000,000 under them.

Mr. HENDERSON. And in addition to that you have what you call the "cash appropriations," amounting to six millions a year for the two years?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is to say, you expect the twelve millions to run over a period of two years?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON. And so, with the sixteen millions added, you make a total which may be called for during the year of $22,000,000?

Mr. HOOKER. That is correct.

Mr. HENDERSON. And that is the maximum that the Government can be called upon to pay during the next year under the operation of this bill?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. But my friend from New York does not include the three millions of indefinite appropriations——

Mr. HOOKER. I have included all of the appropriations that the bill carries.

Mr. DOCKERY. But I mean the indefinite appropriation for the improvement of the Monongahela River.

Mr. HOOKER. Oh, well, I do not know that we will go into that this year. That is a very indefinite subject. We will leave that to succeeding Congresses.

Mr. DALZELL. Nobody knows anything about it yet.

Mr. HOOKER. And it is not fair to charge it up as an appropriation in this bill, because it is impossible to state when the matter will be called to the attention of Congress.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, it may not be definitely fixed, but the gentleman from Pittsburg is on the trail. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. And hopes to get there some time.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then, if I understand the gentleman from New York, if the Secretary of War exercises the authority given to him under the bill and provides for all of this work it will involve the Government in an expenditure of not exceeding $22,000,000 for the next year.

Mr. HOOKER. That is correct.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In the light of the comparative statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] of the vetoed bill of fourteen years ago, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he can give us a comparison in the matter of the depth of water sufficient to accommodate the coastwise and internal trade of the United States at that time as compared with the present time, and the amount of water transportation in use to-day as compared with fourteen years ago, for the purpose of showing whether it is or is not true that the increased expenditures for rivers and harbors have not kept pace with the increased commerce and depth of water required to float it?

Mr. HEPBURN. I see the gentleman from New York is properly overwhelmed with the magnitude of the expected answer. It would take volumes to tell it all. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOKER. Well, I hope the gentleman will give us the information as speedily as possible.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why does the gentleman juggle with the idea of $6,000,000 a year? Does not the gentleman know that every dollar of the $12,000,000 may be appropriated and expended within one month after the 30th day of June next?

Mr. HOOKER. I do not, and it is not even fair to insinuate that it could be done.

Mr. HEPBURN. We are speaking now of the appropriations that are authorized by the bill. The gentleman from New York is talking about spreading them over two years' time.

Mr. HOOKER. Does not the gentleman know that it frequently occurs that appropriations are made for projects throughout the country and they are not expended in two, three, and four years?

Mr. HEPBURN. The most of them go back into the Treasury, however, if they are not expended within two years.

Mr. HOOKER. There are millions of dollars to the credit of various projects that have not been expended.

Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Will the gentleman answer one question?

Mr. HOOKER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. I believe I was recognized, and I think the gentleman should answer my question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report and insisting on the disagreement to the Senate amendments which are not included in the conference report.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, let us have the yeas and nays. Give us a record.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 33 in favor of the demand and 128 against.

Mr. HOOKER. Let us have tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker pro tempore appointed Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. HOOKER.

The House divided; and the tellers reported on the demand for the yeas and nays—ayes 48, noes 141.

Accordingly (more than one-fifth voting in favor thereof) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. A parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the question is on agreeing to the conference report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report and on insisting to the disagreement to the Senate amendments not included in the conference report, and agreeing to the further conference asked by the Senate.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 189, nays 56, not voting 110; as follows:

Mr. LEFEVER with Mr. TURNER of Virginia.

For this day:

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. HUTCHESON.

Mr. CODDING with Mr. HALL.

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. MEYER.

Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania with Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana with Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. GOODWYN with Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia.

Mr. FOSS with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. BARRETT with Mr. TYLER.

On this question:

Mr. RICHARDSON with Mr. CATCHINGS.

On this vote:

Mr. FAIRCHILD with Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky.

Mr. COUSINS with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I see that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is announced as being paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WOOMER].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I voted on this conference report. I find I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS]. I therefore withdraw my vote. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I would vote "nay."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. I desire to withdraw my vote, as I do not know how he would vote.

The result was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the same conferees.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged report—the conference report on the part of the House conferees touching the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the conference report.

[For text of conference report, see Senate proceedings of May 19.]

Mr. CANNON (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, as the report is quite lengthy, I ask to dispense with its reading. There is a statement signed by the conferees on the part of the House stating the effect of the agreement. I suppose it is in order to ask to dispense with the reading of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will omit the reading of the conference report. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7664), making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1897, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended and agreed to by the conference committee in the accompanying conference report on each of the Senate amendments, namely:

On amendment numbered 1: Makes immediately available the appropriation for repairing the wharf at Sitka, Alaska.

On amendment numbered 5: Appropriates $15,000, as proposed by the Senate, for establishing an assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak.

On amendment numbered 20: Appropriates $8,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $12,000, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs to the Treasury, Butler, and Winder buildings.

On amendment numbered 21: Requires the Secretary of the Treasury to submit a plan for a hall of records in Washington, and to report upon the suitableness of a site for such building, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment numbered 26: Strikes out the appropriation of $8,000 proposed by the Senate for wharf at quarantine station, Key West, Fla.

On amendments numbered 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, and 39, relating to light-houses, beacons, and fog signals: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, as follows: $2,000 for lighted beacons in Lynn Harbor, Massachusetts, $4,500 for range lights at or near entrance of Maurice River, New Jersey, $5,000 for a fog signal at Menominee light station, Michigan, and $500 for post and range lights at Coos Bay, Oregon; strikes out the appropriations of $70,000 each, proposed by the Senate, for the Overfalls Shoal light vessel, New Jersey, and the relief light vessel for the Atlantic coast; authorizes the construction of a steam light vessel for Diamond Shoal, North Carolina, to cost not exceeding $80,000, to be paid for out of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the establishment of a light-house on said Diamond Shoal; authorizes the construction of steam light vessels for Fire Island, New York, and San Francisco Harbor, to cost under contract not exceeding $80,000 each, and appropriates $40,000 toward each; and authorizes the construction of two steam tenders for the Second and for the Seventh and Eighth light-house districts, to cost under contract $75,000 each, and appropriates $37,500 toward the construction of each.

On amendments numbered 40, 41, and 42, relating to the Light-House Establishment: Appropriates $300,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $320,000, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of light vessels; $430,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $460,000, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of buoyage, and $4,000, as proposed by the Senate, to establish gas buoys at certain points on the St. Lawrence River.

On amendments numbered 43, 44, 45, 46, and 47, relating to the Revenue-Cutter Service: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate, permitting officers and others of the Revenue-Cutter Service to make allotments of their pay; authorizes the construction of two revenue steamers for service on the Great Lakes, to cost $200,000 each, and appropriates $100,000 toward the construction of each; and strikes out the appropriations proposed by the Senate for a new revenue cutter each for the Gulf of Mexico, the Atlantic coast, and the Pacific coast.

On amendment numbered 48: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation for $600 for rent of office for agent for the Post-Office Department to supervise the distribution of stamps.

On amendment numbered 120: Appropriating $1,500 for a children's playground in East Washington.

On amendments numbered 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, and 129, relating to the price to be paid for gas and electric lamps in the public grounds.

On amendments numbered 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, and 143, relating to the improvements of certain rivers and harbors under the contract system.

On amendment numbered 145: Appropriating $1,000 for keeping in repair the Guilford battle ground.

On amendments numbered 146 and 147, relating to the support and medical treatment of destitute patients and to the Providence and Garfield hospitals.

On amendment numbered 161, relating to the disbursement of appropriations for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

On amendment numbered 190: Appropriating $100,000 for additional ground for the Government Printing Office, for the purchase of boilers, and the erection of a boiler house.

The Senate, by its amendments, added to the bill $6,577,257.10. Of this sum, under the terms of the conference agreement, the Senate recedes from $2,990,008, the House agrees to $1,810,070, and there remains in dispute $1,777,179.10.

J. G. CANNON,
E. J. HAINER,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a word or two in explanation of this report.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. CANNON. I will make my statement, and then the matter of debate will be arranged.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I merely wanted to ask what arrangement will be made for the discussion of the conference report?

Mr. CANNON. I propose to hold the floor if I can and yield to gentlemen for remarks directly upon the conference report, such as are fair and businesslike and lead to a speedy conclusion.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate by its amendments added to this bill $6,500,000. Of this sum, in the report just read the Senate recedes in round numbers from $3,000,000—the sum of $2,990,000, to be exact; the House agrees to Senate amendments aggregating $1,810,000, and there remain in dispute between the House and the Senate, as by the report, items aggregating $1,777,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House very briefly to the matters in real difference between the House and the Senate, and if they were out of the bill we could come, I think, as to most of the other items, to a desirable and early agreement. If gentlemen will take the bill as it passed the Senate (House print), they will find these items that are most annoying in the first 21 amendments.

Mr. MORSE. Seventeen public-building bills.

Mr. CANNON. In the main public-building bills. Gentlemen are aware that the policy of the House has been and is not to enact legislation authorizing a public building, and to the grief of many of us, that the condition of the Treasury and the country is such that this can not be done, or at least it is not being done. Now, under the rules of the House, authorizing public buildings is not in order upon a general appropriation bill, nor is it in order to break the limit of the public buildings. For instance, a limit is fixed when a public building is authorized by legislation, and frequently for one reason or another legislation is subsequently had increasing the cost. That is the practice of the House in its legislation.

This bill was a clean bill in that respect when it passed the House. In the Senate they added these 20 or 21 amendments. A year ago, as to one amendment, numbered 2 in the bill, a public building at Boise City, Idaho, was authorized and $50,000 appropriated. Since then the site has been obtained, but no plans, and there will be none until next winter. The Senate amendment appropriates $50,000 and enlarges the limit of cost to $200,000. There is a similar amendment as to a public building at Camden, N. J., also at Cheyenne, Wyo.; and there is an absolutely new authorization made for a public building at Fortress Monroe, Va., upon this bill, one that never has been authorized otherwise. There is also the enlargement of the limit for a building at Helena, Mont., and also an enlargement of the limit of cost of a public building at Kansas City, Mo., from $1,200,000 to $1,316,000. Now, we kept items of this kind off this bill by points of order in the House, because they were not in order. The House conferees declined to agree to these Senate provisions; and unless the House recedes from its disagreement to those Senate amendments, or instructs its conferees to recede, I do not see any prospect of agreement, unless the Senate recedes. I want to state the matter very frankly to gentlemen, so that the House, if it sees proper, can take action in the premises, either along the line of further disagreement or along the line of receding from the disagreement to the Senate amendments.

Now I come to three or four matters that for the good of the public service ought to be provided for, and I ask the attention of the House to them:

Amendment numbered 11: For court-house and post-office at Los Angeles, Cal.: For additions to and alterations in the court-house and post-office building, $12,000.

It is the alterations that made this appropriation necessary. But for them this money could be paid out of the ordinary general appropriation for the repair of public buildings. The facts are that at Los Angeles last year the postal revenues were in round numbers $150,000, and the net revenues $90,000. They want this appropriation to finish the cellar or basement of that little public building, and the work must be done or else they will have to move into a rented building. Nevertheless, your conferees did not feel at liberty to agree even to that provision, although it could not be classed as the construction of a public building, or the breaking of the limit of cost of a public building, because the building is already up. It is for the House to take such action as it may desire touching the matter.

Then there is an item:

For making certain proposed alterations in the post-office building in New York City, arranging and furnishing certain rooms in accordance with plans prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, $80,000.

I am frank to say that upon reading the report of the Supervising Architect and upon full inquiry I am satisfied that these alterations ought to be made, that the partitions ought to be taken down, the rooms changed somewhat, and some of the stairways altered—all for the good of the public service. But for the alterations this work also could be paid for out of the general appropriation for repair of public buildings; but technically it comes within the rule, and therefore it is for the House to either insist further on its disagreement or to take such action as it may deem proper in the premises.

Mr. DANIELS. These alterations will double the room.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, I understand that, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] says, the room would be doubled by these alterations.

I want to call the attention of the House now to amendments numbered 18 and 19, found on page 6. Gentlemen know the new post-office building in this city, on Pennsylvania avenue, near Eleventh street. That is a great building, eight stories in height——

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill, if he will permit me, that he should call attention to the fact that the difference between the House and the Senate is not so much on amendment No. 18 as on No. 19.

Mr. CANNON. I thank the gentleman. I will explain that in a moment. The first floor of this great building is to be occupied by the city post-office. The other seven floors are to be occupied by a clerical force that is now occupying rented quarters. That will be the greatest Government office building in this city or in this country.

There is a desire to change the plan of the two upper stories, making certain alterations so as to accommodate a greater number of clerks. Then the Supervising Architect has made some change in the finish, so that the building can not be completed within the limit, and if it is to be finished as it ought to be—I am not now justifying the changes in plan which the Supervising Architect has made—if the building is to be finished as it ought to be, the limit will have to be broken to the amount of $410,000.

Mr. SAYERS. With the gentleman's permission, I will say that the effect of breaking the limit—that is, of agreeing to amendment No. 19 as proposed by the Senate—would be that in eighteen months from to-day nearly 3,000 clerks of the Government who are now occupying rented buildings would be transferred to this new post-office building, and the rent of the quarters now occupied would be saved, as well as the rent of the building in which the city post-office now is. All that is involved in amendment No. 19.

Mr. DINGLEY. What would be the saving in rent?

Mr. SAYERS. I should suppose about $100,000 a year.

Mr. PAYNE. When could the building be occupied if we did not break the limit?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Texas has stated the facts better than I could have done it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] asks, if the limit is not broken and this appropriation is not made, when can this building be occupied by the Government? I suppose that it can not be occupied in full at all until the limit is broken, but it will make a difference of six months whether this appropriation is made now or made next winter.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the building can not be covered in and the lower parts of it occupied without the limit being broken?

Mr. CANNON. I think it can be covered in and the lower part occupied, but not the two upper stories. The changes in the plan are such that if they are to be made economically this appropriation ought not to be postponed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. This appropriation, as I understand, does not contemplate the change in the roof which was proposed some time ago?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; this Senate amendment does not touch the question of the roof at all.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That proposition has been adversely reported in the House.

Mr. CANNON. Well, there is nothing in this about the roof.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that this change in plan has been already made, and that the building can not be completed until the necessary appropriation is made.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is correct. On the merits I am frank to say that from every standpoint I think this appropriation ought to be made; but as it involves legislation, and as this is a Senate amendment, the committee of conference thought proper to report it with the other amendments and make a frank statement about them, so that the House could take such action as it deemed proper.

There are several public buildings authorized outright by Senate amendments. For instance, a court-house and post-office at Salt Lake City, for purchase of site and commencement of construction, $75,000. There is also one at Fortress Monroe, and there are several other cases in which the limit is broken. Great effort was made to break the limit also, I believe, on the post-office building at Omaha.

Mr. DINGLEY. These are new buildings for which there is now no authority of law?

Mr. CANNON. There is authority of law for that building; but they want to break the limit.

Mr. DINGLEY. But as to the one at Salt Lake City?

Mr. CANNON. That is entirely new. The Senate did not put on the Omaha building and many others. It did put on the Kansas City building. Now, it is for the House, with full knowledge, to deal with the question as suits its judgment, waiving, if the House chooses, its objection to legislation in connection with the Senate amendments, or insisting, if it desires, that the amendment shall not be agreed to. And let us understand that, if the House so insists, then, according to the courtesy and the rule between the House and the Senate, where one body insists on legislation upon an appropriation bill and the other will not yield, the provision should go out of the bill.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Will the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Will the gentleman kindly explain to the House the status of the Senate amendments so far as they affect the public buildings at Boise City, Idaho; Helena, Mont., and Cheyenne, Wyo.?

Mr. CANNON. The House disagrees to those amendments. A year ago, as I understand, public buildings were authorized at those three places, at a cost of $150,000 each, and $50,000 was appropriated lately, within the last month or two, and sites, I believe, have been acquired at those three places.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Sites have been selected, but not acquired.

Mr. CANNON. Well, selected, but not yet acquired. We inquired fully of the Supervising Architect about those three buildings; and he informed us that in no event would pen be put to paper on the plans in less than twelve months from the time when he spoke, which was February last, when we were making the examination. The Senate amendment provides for breaking the limit at each one of those points; that is, legislating so as to make the cost of the building in one case $200,000, in another $250,000, and in another $300,000. That is legislation; and it is for the House to say whether it will concur.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to say the information coming from the Supervising Architect is that under no circumstances can these buildings be provided for within twelve months.

Mr. CANNON. They can not even commence on the plans.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Now, appropriations having been on the statute book for two years, does not the fact which the gentleman mentions show a woeful condition of affairs in the Supervising Architect's Office? Does it not show neglect, or at least a deficiency in the matter of clerks, or something wrong in some respect?

Mr. SAYERS. These appropriations, as I recollect, were not made two years ago.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. They were made in the last sundry civil bill.

Mr. CANNON. One year ago.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, one year ago.

Mr. CANNON. We know how the public service stands. It takes time to acquire these sites. Of course there is much about the public service on which I am willing to "swap horses" with my friend from Idaho during the coming campaign, he telling my constituents and I telling his how bad the Administration has been and what a wonderfully poor condition the Treasury is in.

Mr. SAYERS. I hope you will tell the whole truth while you are about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, having said that much——

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Has it not been the policy of the Appropriations Committee of this House to prevent the breaking of the limit in respect to any of these public buildings?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Does the gentleman, then, concur in the action of the Senate increasing the limit on these public buildings?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I am submitting the matter to the House.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Why not either condemn or approve the action of the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I can say to my friend that the House conferees will not agree to these public-building matters involving legislation without some indication of the sentiment of the House, and it is entirely within the power of any member of the House to get a vote on any of these questions as to whether the House should recede or not.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. In view of the action of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in shutting out propositions of members of the House to break the limit in any of these cases, should not the gentleman, in order to be entirely consistent, condemn the action of the Senate in breaking the limit?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I disagree with the action of the Senate. But I want to be entirely candid. The wants of the public service are such that if you ask me for my individual opinion I will say that if I had the power I would break the limit of the appropriation of $400,000 to finish the post-office building down here on the Avenue, so that we could six months earlier house those clerks who are now in rented buildings. If I had the power I would do another thing. I would make such repairs and enlargement in the public building in New York City as to double the court-room accommodations. If I had power I would do another thing. I would allow repairs to be made in the basement of the public building at Los Angeles to accommodate the rapidly growing business at that point, instead of forcing them out into the street to rent buildings to accommodate the public service.

Now, having said that much, perhaps I may say further that I sympathize with what I hear sub rosa—no, perhaps not sub rosa, but hear quietly and have heard to-day and yesterday and several days before on the floor of the House. Gentlemen are naturally desirous of securing public buildings in their various districts.

Mr. HOPKINS. We ought to have one in Elgin. Put that in and I am with you. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says put in a building for Elgin and he is with me. Well, if the Senate had put in one at Joliet I would be very grateful. [Laughter.] It is a most interesting town, a growing town, an important place, and ought to have a public building; and many of the people there are saying: "CANNON is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; he can get us a public building at Joliet if he wants to, and we ought to have it." Well, you all know what that amounts to. They are suggestions I can not meet. I would be glad to see a proper public building put there.

Mr. DALZELL. You have already, I believe, quite a considerable public building at Joliet. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and a good many Pennsylvanians are occupying it. [Laughter and applause.]

So it is, gentlemen, I realize the embarrassment, that as this is not a public-building session of Congress, we all will have to face the embarrassment of explaining when we get home, "Why did not you get us a public building?" You can say the revenues of the Government did not allow it at this time. Ah, but they will say, "Why did not you get it if other people could? So and So got a public building and So and So got another one." That is the way gentlemen argue with me, and I am simply stating the facts to you as they appear. I would be very glad indeed if it was possible to supply many of these places that ought to have public buildings. There is no doubt about that. But I think I have stated candidly the difference between the two Houses on these points.

Mr. HICKS. Before the gentleman leaves that, I would be glad if he would explain a little more fully the action with reference to the appropriation of $60,000 for the post-office at New York, and what action has been taken in reference to additional site for the Public Printing Office.

Mr. CANNON. I will come to that a little later on. I have already referred to it in part.

Mr. HARTMAN. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois what is the aggregate of increase in public buildings made by the Senate amendments over the House appropriations?

Mr. CANNON. The increase of the appropriations by the Senate amendments for public buildings is $702,300, and the Senate legislation authorizes the further expenditure of $1,000,087 for public buildings on amendments.

Mr. HARTMAN. Another question, if you please: Have you any objection to the public-land survey increase made by the Senate remaining in?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that I hope we can make an adjustment of that matter in the next conference. It was canvassed fully and a call for additional information made upon the Commissioner of the Land Office. In my judgment, the House provision is all that can be expended. But it is fairly open for consideration.

Mr. PICKLER. How much is the difference?

Mr. CANNON. The difference is between $250,000, appropriated by the House, and $400,000, as the Senate proposes.

Mr. HARTMAN. In order to test the sense of the House on the Senate amendments, unless some other gentleman wishes to make the motion, I will make a motion at the proper time to instruct the conferees to recede from their disagreement to the Senate amendments.

Mr. CANNON. It is competent, of course, for the gentleman to move to recede.

Mr. HARTMAN. I will do that.

Mr. SAYERS. Before such motion is made, the House should be asked to concur in the conference report, so as to eliminate from a further conference all of the items upon which we have agreed.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; there will be an opportunity to make that motion, I will state to the gentleman from Montana, after we have acted upon the report.

Now, there is a matter of very considerable interest and importance to which I wish to direct the attention of the House for a few moments. I refer to amendment numbered 190, on page 126 of the bill. This is a provision to enable the Public Printer, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to purchase two lots of land immediately adjoining the present site of the Government Printing Office, containing in all about 16,000 square feet, for the purpose of erecting a boiler house and coal shed in connection with the Government Printing Office, and also to give light and ventilation to the new building belonging to that office now approaching completion. The provision is also made in the amendment for condemnation proceedings in the event that a satisfactory arrangement can not be made for the purchase.

I will place in the RECORD, with the consent of the House, a letter from the Public Printer touching this matter. I think I can state the substance of it perhaps more quickly than it can be read. Gentlemen know that last year we made an appropriation for the purpose of constructing a new addition adjacent to the present Public Printing Office, and it will be completed within a month or two—the 1st of July, I am informed, to be accurate.

Now, the heating plant is so situated in connection with the old office that there is constant danger of fire, and it is insufficient to heat this new building. It is absolutely necessary, if that building is occupied beyond November next, that there should be an additional plant for heating and for power. It is estimated that this will cost about $100,000 to purchase the lot of ground and the requisite power house and fixtures. Now, it seems to me that this ought to be done. It can not be done unless the House does it. This is a Senate amendment. It would have been subject to a point of order if it had been offered in the House. I think it ought to be done without reference to what eventually may be done touching the Printing Office. You know that has been an old matter of contention between the House and the Senate, and it ought to be solved, but in the meantime——

Mr. HICKS. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. In the meantime the Printing Office is down there, and from sheer necessity an appropriation was made to put up a new additional building. Now, even if we commence, as I think we ought to commence in the near future, to construct an entire new Printing Office that will meet the demands of the public service, yet I regard it as an absolute necessity that this ground should be purchased or condemned, and that the heating plant should be erected so as to utilize, with safety to life and limb and efficiency to the public service, the buildings that we now have there and must occupy, pending the time that provision is made for a new office.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. This is new legislation, is it not?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I will state it fairly. We have not agreed to it. It is for the House to further insist on its disagreement or to recede; but I am stating what the facts are, so that the House may act according to its best judgment, with such information as I can give it.

Mr. HICKS. Does not the chairman of the committee think that if we should make this large appropriation now it will practically settle the Printing Office question?

Mr. CANNON. I do not think so. It is not a large appropriation. It is $100,000, and I regard it as an absolute necessity, even if we get a new Printing Office within the next four years. I think this is absolutely necessary in the meantime. I do not regard it as settling the matter of a Printing Office permanently.

Mr. HICKS. Is it not a fact that the Public Printing Office where it is now is considered unsafe and in a very dangerous condition?

Mr. CANNON. And very largely unsafe because of the location of the heating plant and the boilers, which are absolutely insufficient to heat the new building which has just been erected as an addition.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. What will the cost of the new building be?

Mr. CANNON. One hundred and twenty-one thousand dollars.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. And the heating plant is to cost $100,000?

Mr. CANNON. You have to buy land on which to erect the building for the heating plant, and it is proposed to buy 16,000 feet of ground adjacent to the present building, and then to erect the boiler plant. The estimate for the whole thing is $100,000.

Mr. HICKS. Would it not be sufficient to buy a small piece of ground, just enough for the heating plant?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, ground is quite cheap now, and my judgment is that the proposed plan is better. However, that is a matter of administration that could be considered hereafter. I do not want to go into the merits of the Public Printing Office question. I am only giving the House such information as I have, and my opinion in this matter, after investigation. Now, having said this much, I should like to take as little time as possible, and to get to direct action upon these various provisions. In order that we may progress, I will move the adoption of the conference report. Then these other amendments will be open.

Mr. HICKS. There is one item, No. 22, which my friend has missed. Will he kindly explain the necessity of it?

Mr. CANNON. That relates to the repairs on the public building at New York.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It is not agreed to.

Mr. HICKS. It will be objected to.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to be heard.

Mr. CANNON. Let us adopt the conference report. Does the gentleman oppose any item in the conference report?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I wish to oppose an item that has been agreed upon by the conferees.

Mr. CANNON. Will five minutes answer the gentleman?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have been cut off on five minutes too often. I want about fifteen minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I can not yield fifteen minutes on a single item in the conference report.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The gentleman told me when he first brought the matter up that I should have a reasonable amount of time.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I must be consulted as to what that is if it comes out of my time. I can not yield fifteen minutes on a single item of the conference report.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. After the conference report is adopted I can not get a hearing on this question at all.

Mr. CANNON. Will five minutes be enough for the gentleman?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask for ten minutes. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman and then see whether he wants any more time or not. I will do the best I can for the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, before I yield to the gentleman from New York I will insert in my remarks memoranda and letter from the Public Printer before referred to:

PRESENT DEMANDS.

The battery of three steam boilers now constituting the power and heating plant of the Government Printing Office is located in the center of the group of buildings. They are now the most serious menace to life which threatens the employees, and the same danger threatens the safety of the whole Printing Office property.

The capacity of the three boilers in use for power purposes is 630 horsepower. The requirements of the present power service is 581 horsepower, leaving but 49 horsepower for contingencies, a power margin far too narrow for safety in average service.

The ability of the steam plant in furnishing an average power and heating service the past winter was only met by the addition of a steam economizer to one of the boilers, and by the utilization for the first of exhaust steam for heating purposes. The economizer is but an extension by the addition of another boiler erected above the old boiler, thus gaining 1,000 square feet of steam-heating surface.

During cold weather, when accompanied by dark days, the requirements of the power and lighting plant are beyond the safe capacity of the boilers, and consequently the full requirements of the office are not met at such times.

Should an emergency arise, withdrawing one of the boilers from service for repairs or cleaning during any day other than Sunday or a holiday, it would be impossible to meet the wants of the office at a period when the maximum steam service is required.

NEW DEMANDS.

The new west building, which will be turned over to the Public Printer in June next, can not be heated next winter or furnished power from the present steam plant. Its requirements in steam must be met from a new plant, which can not be erected except by the purchase of land. The proposed new boiler house and two 300-horsepower boilers will not only meet the requirements of the new building in heat and power, but will afford a margin in steam service for the whole office, insuring greater safety, and meet in part the imperative demand for a duplicate steam equipment, thus making it possible to continue work in the office without interruption in case of an accident to any one of the boilers.

In no other respect is there a more urgent demand for immediate legislative authority in regard to the work of public printing than in this particular matter of additional steam facilities.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1896.

DEAR SIR: I esteem it my duty to write you in connection with the item inserted in the sundry civil bill in the Senate, providing for the erection of additional boiler plant at this office and for the purchase of land, which item is now under consideration in conference with your committee.

This work is the outgrowth of work undertaken a year ago, at the instance of the Joint Committee on Printing, in securing the erection of the new west building, now nearing completion at this office; in fact, this plant is a part of the work contemplated in such erection, inasmuch as it was intended, in connection with the erection of the new building on the lot line of adjoining owners, that the purchase of the adjoining land was to be made and the buildings removed, that light might be admitted into the two lower stories of the new building. As it is now many of the windows are completely darkened by the adjoining building.

It was also understood and stated by me that the present boiler plant would not be sufficient and could not be enlarged to furnish heat for the winter for the new west building. The erection of five additional rooms to the office, under the appropriation of $75,000 in 1894, caused me to utilize every resource of the present boiler plant, that the present power and heating demands of the office might be met, and which is inadequately met during the severity of winter.

There is no margin either in power or heat in our present plant to furnish heating facilities for the new building to be occupied in June. Such occupancy will be followed by vacating the building in November next unless heat is provided. No addition can be made to the present steam plant of the office except by purchase of land for the erection of the new plant.

All other dangers attending life and property in this office lessen before the danger incident to the tremendous steam energy concentrated within the group of buildings here, and which must be operated days, nights, and Sundays, with scarcely ordinary opportunities for withdrawing the fire and cleaning the boilers.

The demands on the steam service are now greater than ever, and the danger greater. I have mentioned this danger in public reports and verbal statements. If the new boiler plant is erected, I will use it entirely for power purposes, and use the old boilers within the office exclusively for heating purposes, removing in a larger degree the great pressure of steam, thus lessening the danger to life and property.

The presentation of this matter to the Senate Appropriation Committee was in line of suggestions as made by members of the Committee on Printing, and not with a view of leaving your committee uninformed in the matter on my part.

Most truly, yours,

TH. E. BENEDICT,
Public Printer.

Hon. J. G. CANNON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I desire to call the attention of the House to one item which has been inserted in the Senate, and which I say is improper and in my opinion is a fraud. I am conversant with the use of the English language; I am generally moderate in tone and in statement; and when I make the statement that a particular item is a fraud, I think I shall be able to sustain it in the course of my remarks, even if I have but five minutes. You will find on page 119 an item in these words: "To purchase from Gen. James D. McBride." Of course I may remark in passing that there is no such rank as "general" in this country. He might be a major-general or a brigadier-general; but I am informed that this gentleman was never either.

But it matters not what title he is found to have; here is an appropriation of $12,500 improperly inserted by the Senate and which successfully escaped the animadversions of the watchdogs of the Treasury in either body represented on this conference committee. What is this appropriation? It is to pay to Gen. James D. McBride the sum of $12,500 for a series of what? For what they are pleased to term "historical publications," whereas they are mere diagrams. They are six in number. The largest is subdivided into three segments. In this [exhibiting] is a facsimile of the Declaration of Independence; next we have the officers of Government in the year 1876, because that was the one hundredth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence—that is, the members of one special Congress. Then we have in this set [exhibiting], 1892, the officers of Government, because, forsooth, that was the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of this country. Then we have three little tablets, representing each segment of the larger diagram, making four in all. Then we have the seals of the United States, taken from books in our libraries, taken from Benson J. Lossing's encyclopedia, only the seal of the United States being reproduced in an enlarged and improper form. We have all of these seals reproduced from books in our libraries, and then we have these poor vignettes of the Presidents of the United States—cheap and poor, imperfect and faulty in execution beyond all conception or description.

Mr. LACEY. Do you say that $12,500 is appropriated for those things?

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is what it is.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr. LACEY. Is $12,500 appropriated for these three things?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The sum of $12,500 is appropriated for the purpose of giving members of Congress three sets of these worthless diagrams. The larger diagram I have already described. The next three are segments of the larger, and the other two I have here, the vignettes of the Presidents, and the other, the alleged seals of the Departments of the Government. And for his valuable biographies of the signers of the Declaration, whatever word of truth be therein, gentlemen, is obtained from this book which I now hold in my hand. [Lossing's Lives of the Signers.]

I will only call the attention of the House to one or two biographies. He tells us that John Adams was a teacher. I am unable to find that statement in the Life of Mr. Adams. In reference to Samuel Adams, he tells us that he was educated for the ministry. I am unable to find that statement in Lossing. In reference to the other signers, he tells us that some of them were elected delegates to the Provincial Congress, and of others who were equally delegates, as to that fact he is silent. But I will call attention to one or two biographies. For instance, beginning with Button Gwinnett, of Georgia, he says:

He offered himself as a candidate for the office of brigadier-general; his competitor was Colonel McIntosh. Mr. Gwinnett was defeated, and, with mistaken views, he looked upon his rival as a personal enemy and challenged General McIntosh. They met with pistols, and at the first fire both were wounded, Mr. Gwinnett mortally. He could well have said, in the language of Hamilton when fatally wounded in a duel by Aaron Burr: "I have lived like a man, but I die like a fool."

Mr. Lossing tells us:

He offered himself as a candidate for the office of brigadier-general, and his competitor was Colonel McIntosh, a man highly esteemed for his manly bearing and courageous disposition. Mr. Gwinnett was defeated, and, with mistaken views, he looked upon his rival as a personal enemy. * * * They met with pistols, and at the first fire both were wounded, Mr. Gwinnett mortally; and in the prime of life, at the early age of 45, his life terminated. He could well have said, in the language of the lamented Hamilton, when fatally wounded in a duel by Aaron Burr: "I have lived like a man, but I die like a fool."

Of course there is no plagiarism there!

I desire now to call attention to the biography of Charles Carroll, of Maryland.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask five minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman really want five minutes longer? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I yield it to him.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. This gentleman tells us that Charles Carroll was the last vestige that remained on earth of those who stood sponsors of our infant Republic and was regarded by the people of the country with the greatest veneration.

Mr. Lossing says:

For a long term of years Mr. Carroll was regarded by the people of this country with the greatest veneration, for when Jefferson and Adams died he was the last vestige that remained upon earth of that holy brotherhood who stood sponsor at the baptism in blood of our infant Republic.

Now, gentlemen, do you propose to agree to a report which gives $12,500 to a man for making up these diagrams—a man utterly unknown in the realm of scholarship, a man utterly unknown to the students of this country? Why, Mr. Speaker, men like McMaster, or any of our great historians, would never have the hardihood to ask the Congress of the United States to make such a shameless appropriation as this. These diagrams cost, as I am credibly informed, something like a cent apiece, and we are to make an appropriation of $12,500, not to benefit the people in any way whatever, but merely because Mr. James D. McBride has influence enough to secure an appropriation of this kind in the sundry civil appropriation bill. I tell you, gentlemen, this is a most dangerous appropriation. Think for a moment. When I begged the House to allow the sum of $10,000 to be appropriated for the publication of our Revolutionary archives and of the papers of the Continental Congress, one of the watchdogs of the Treasury, whose cunning attention this item has escaped, interposed an objection, and I was prevented from securing that appropriation for that proper and laudable object. Now, will this House allow an appropriation of $12,500 for such a purpose as this—a purpose which I venture to assert can obtain no advocacy whatever on the floor of this House?

Mr. CANNON. Just a word, Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from New York, and then I will ask a vote on the adoption of the conference report. I do not know whether this is a particularly meritorious item or not. The House conferees came to an agreement with the Senate conferees upon this Senate amendment—for it is a Senate amendment—and it may be well to turn to page 119 of the bill and see what it is:

Purchase of historical publications: That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase from Gen. James D. McBride 2,500 complete sets of his historical publications, entitled "Important periods in the History of the United States, portraits of the Presidents of the United States, and the seal of the United States and seals of the executive, judicial, and legislative departments of the Government"; and that said publications be distributed by the Secretary of the Senate as follows: 2 sets for the use of the Senate of the United States, 2 sets for the use of the House of Representatives, 3 sets to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress; 1 set to the President, 1 set to the Vice-President, 1 set to the Chief Justice of the United States, 1 set to each associate justice, 1 set to each member of the Cabinet, 1 set to the Executive Mansion, and 1 set to each of the Executive Departments, 1 set to the Supreme Court of the United States, 1 set to the Congressional Library; 42 sets to the Department of State for distribution among the various United States embassies and legations; 88 sets to the War Department for distribution among the various military post schools, including 1 set to the Military Academy at West Point and 5 sets to the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; 2 sets to the Department of Justice for the use of the United States prison; 78 sets to the Navy Department for distribution among the various vessels of the United States having libraries, including 1 set to the Naval Academy at Annapolis; 48 sets to the Department of Agriculture for distribution among the various agricultural colleges in the United States and Territories, and 860 sets to the Commissioner of Education for distribution among the various public libraries and educational institutions in the United States. And the sum of $12,500 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the said Secretary of the Senate to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

The cost of the 2,500 complete sets is put by the amendment at $12,500. Now, it is very easy to ridicule this work. It is easy to hold up some minor part of it and say, "Behold," and it is especially easy for the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], because there are very few men who have his complete and universal knowledge, who, like him, have ransacked all history and all literature so as to be able to detect all errors. I looked, in common with others, at these historical sketches and illustrations, and to my poor inartistic eyes they looked very well, and conveyed much of useful information which, it seemed to me, as it seemed to the Senate committee and to the Senate itself, was fit and apt for distribution to the various public libraries and the various Departments of the Government. And in saying that I think the work is apt for distribution, I do not rely on my own judgment, but do take the opinion of the Bureau of Education of the United States, which has warmly recommended it, and has recommended the purchase of many times the number of copies covered by this amendment.

That is not all. The Senate Committee on Education earnestly recommended it, as I am informed, and, according to my understanding, prepared the amendment which was adopted by the Senate. It may be that the item is a very improper one. If so, and the gentlemen of this House think it is so improper that this conference report, which settles differences between the two Houses to the extent of $5,000,000 on a multitude of items, should be voted down and sent back, well and good; they will take that action. We found the amendment on the bill, and, after inquiry and examination, the conferees on the part of the House agreed with the Senate conferees to submit the item to the House in the conference report. Of course, if we had had the benefit of the advice of experts like the gentleman from New York, possibly we might have been saved from making the mistake, if it is a mistake. I now move the adoption of the report.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask whether the adoption of the conference report will preclude a motion to recede from any action taken in it.

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, is there not some way by which we can vote against this item without voting against the whole conference report?

Mr. CANNON. You can vote it out by voting down the conference report.

Mr. DALZELL. Then I hope we shall do that.

Mr. LACEY. It ought to be done.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says it ought to be done. I will ask him if he has examined this work?

Mr. LACEY. I have heard your statement, and you have not answered the gentleman from New York. I think there ought to be some way to vote out an appropriation so frivolous as this.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that, in my judgment, it is not a frivolous appropriation. The House did not put it on the bill. The Senate inserted it, and they did so on the recommendation of the Bureau of Education and of the Senate Committee on Education, and the amendment seemed to be insisted upon to such an extent that the House conferees agreed to it. I want to say, however, that in assenting to the Senate amendment, I did so because, in my judgment, it appeared to be an apt expenditure of the public money, and was supported by the opinion of those who are my peers and superiors touching such subjects or objects of appropriation. I am quite content, without personal feeling, that the House take such action as it may see proper touching the adoption of this report.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Would a motion be in order to instruct the conferees to recede from their agreement to amendment numbered 183?

The SPEAKER. The conference report must be accepted or rejected as a whole.

Mr. CANNON. I move the previous question.

Mr. HARDY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order for me to make a motion to strike out the provision for purchasing 2,500 sets of Gen. James D. McBride's historical publications and insert in lieu thereof a provision for the purchase of "horse books"? I think they would be more beneficial to us and our constituents.

Mr. CANNON. That is a very good inquiry to be addressed to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARDY] can answer that question for himself.

Mr. CANNON. I move the previous question.

Mr. POWERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to make at some stage of the proceedings a motion to recede from the disagreement of the House to a Senate amendment—not the one now in question. Will that be in order after the vote on the adoption of this report?

The SPEAKER. Is it a matter included in the report?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; it is a matter on which there has been no agreement, and the motion of the gentleman can come in after the report is adopted.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] will be in order after the vote upon the adoption of the report if it refers to any amendment not embraced in the report.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, it was ordered.

Mr. DALZELL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Will the adoption of this report commit the House to the purchase of these 2,500 sets of historical publications?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. DALZELL. Then I hope the report will not be adopted.

The question being taken on agreeing to the conference report, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. CANNON)—ayes 59, noes 80.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 59, nays 151, not voting 145; as follows:

So the report of the committee of conference was rejected.

During the roll call,

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement for one minute, accompanied with an inquiry touching the parliamentary effect of this vote.

Mr. KEM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will ask the Speaker to state——

Mr. KEM and others. Regular order.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I demand that we have order on the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WILLIS). The regular order is called for, and order is demanded on the floor. Now, gentlemen, you have a "greenhorn" in the chair; do me the respect to keep quiet while the roll is being called. [Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk resumed and concluded the call of the roll, when

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. MILLER of Kansas with Mr. DOCKERY.

Mr. MERCER with Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. CATCHINGS.

Mr. FOOTE with Mr. ELLETT of Virginia.

Mr. HADLEY with Mr. MONEY.

Mr. EVANS with Mr. LAYTON.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. MCMILLIN.

Mr. PAYNE with Mr. COBB.

For this day:

Mr. FAIRCHILD with Mr. MEYER.

Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, when I voted I was under the impression that we were voting simply on the single amendment providing the $12,500 to pay for a certain publication. I have since learned that the effect of my vote would be to reach the entire conference report, and I desire therefore to change my vote from "no" to "aye."

The SPEAKER. The change will be made.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I was absent in conference committee, but believe I am paired on this question.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I was absent, Mr. Speaker, in conference. If present, I should have voted "no" on this proposition.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to all the amendments of the Senate on this bill, and ask a conference—the report having been rejected—on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. LESTER. I think, Mr. Speaker, that a motion to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendments would have precedence of the motion of the gentleman. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments to this bill.

The SPEAKER. That would embrace the entire report.

Mr. LESTER. I had reference to the amendments relating to public buildings.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, inasmuch as the question respecting the public buildings has been submitted to the House, whether it would not be well to take a vote on them this afternoon. It will obviate coming back to the House again with a disagreement as to that part of the report and then asking for a vote.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, my motion that the House do further insist on the disagreement as to the Senate amendments leaves it in order for any gentleman who desires to do so to move that the House recede from its disagreement to any one of the amendments and agree to the same. Am I correct?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, I am quite content that such motion shall be made, especially as to those public buildings provided for in the Senate amendments. There is not much trouble, I will say, as I understand it, about an agreement with the Senate if the question of public buildings that the Senate has put onto the bill could be eliminated.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If that question is to be taken up, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a few minutes to be heard upon it myself.

Mr. LESTER. Mr. Speaker, I will modify my motion, which was to recede from the House disagreement to the Senate amendments indicated by the gentleman from Illinois. Do I understand that his motion would cover all of the amendments, public buildings and all?

The SPEAKER. Which is the amendment the gentleman desires to move to recede from?

Mr. LESTER. With reference to the public buildings.

Mr. CANNON. All of them? I would have to ask for a separate vote on that question.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to make a motion with reference to one of the Senate amendments. I move, sir, that the House recede from its disagreement to its amendment of the Senate numbered 9.

Mr. LESTER. I move to recede from its disagreement to all of the amendments relating to the public buildings.

The SPEAKER. Can the gentleman give the numbers of the amendments?

Mr. LESTER. I think they are numbered 2 to 22, inclusive.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to ask a separate vote on amendment 190 also.

Mr. TERRY. I move to recede from the disagreement to the amendment I have suggested, which I will read. It is in the following words:

(9) For court-house and post-office at Little Rock, Ark.: For additional amount to construct an addition to the United States court-house and post-office and enlarging judge's chamber and the offices of the marshal and clerk of the circuit and district courts, and for an elevator, $43,000.

Now, I desire briefly, if in order, to support my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has charge of the matter.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HARTMAN. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move, as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas, to recede from the House disagreement to all of the Senate amendments mentioned in the report as having been disagreed to? The list is found on page 5, in the last five lines of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the more orderly course would be to vote upon the question of insistence on the disagreement as to such matters on which a separate vote is not demanded, then if there be separate votes demanded upon other amendments they should be taken separately.

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

Mr. TERRY. I ask for a division, then, in regard to the public buildings.

Mr. CANNON. I will indicate the amendments, Mr. Speaker, on which separate votes will be asked.

The SPEAKER. There are other matters about which there is no dispute, and the Chair suggests that they may as well be disposed of, and then the amendments be taken up in their order.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. I will ask a vote on amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 22. This will cover the public buildings.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest that you also include the amendment numbered 190, on page 126.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman that probably it would be better to first vote upon all matters outside of the amendments to which he has referred, and then have such separate votes as may be necessary on the remaining amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will send the list to the desk.

Mr. SAYERS. Amendment 190, on page 126 of the printed bill, is the amendment to which I call the gentleman's attention.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I ask a separate vote on that, too.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

On amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 22, and 190.

The SPEAKER. Now, the gentleman from Illinois moves that the House insist on its disagreement to all the other amendments except those named, and ask a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first of the excepted amendments, which is amendment numbered 2.

Mr. ATWOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that these excepted amendments are now passed by the House?

The SPEAKER. They are not passed. All except those are passed.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask if we can not have a vote on all of these public buildings in one proposition?

Mr. DINGLEY. No, sir; not to-day.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. Consequently the amendments must be taken up separately. The Clerk will report the second amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

(2) For public building at Boise City, Idaho: For continuation of building, $50,000; and the limit of cost of said building and site is increased from $150,000 to $200,000.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, pending the vote, if I have the power to do it, I will yield five minutes to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Give me ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I will give you five minutes, and see if you need ten.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Possibly I can say all I know in five minutes. I hope that these amendments providing for increased limit of cost and for the establishment of new public buildings, proposed in these Senate amendments, will be disagreed to, and that the committee of conference will be instructed to insist upon their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate. This is the most vicious way of legislating that is known to Congress.

Now, we have a committee in this House—perhaps some of you have heard of it—a Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Before that committee have been pending a great number of bills for the establishment of public buildings, for the increase of the limit of cost, and similar matters. The committee have acted upon them. They have made reports upon between thirty and forty of them, but those reports have not been filed in the House because the committee have been informed, from a source which they consider entirely authoritative, that the bills could not be considered in this House in this session. As somebody has said here to-day, this is not a public-building session. Many of those bills are quite as important as, and some more important than, any that are found in this list. For instance, there is a bill for the purpose of strengthening the ironwork in the first story of the appraisers' stores building in New York. That building has been put up one story. Experts have examined it and decided, and this decision is indorsed by the Supervising Architect's Office, that it is utterly useless to go any further in the erection of that building until an appropriation is made for strengthening the ironwork, because it is not sufficiently strong to hold up what will be stored in there after the building is completed. That work must stop unless this appropriation is made. Is there a stronger case than that in this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. Is that in this bill?

Mr. MILLIKEN. No; that is not in this bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask the gentleman where that bill is?

Mr. MILLIKEN. It is in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOPKINS. It has not been reported?

Mr. MILLIKEN. No report has been made from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to this House, for the reason that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have been distinctly given to understand that no bills from that committee would be considered in the House if they were reported.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Given to understand that by whom?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, in the first place, I know it from my own judgment. In the second place, I have it from so many people in this House that it is not necessary for me to spend any part of my five minutes in giving the gentleman that unnecessary information.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. It is information that is very necessary to the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. There are between thirty and forty public-building bills before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, every one of which is as important as these projects that are included in these Senate amendments to the sundry civil bill. Gentlemen who have those bills can not get consideration of them in the House. If nothing is done here they may go home to their districts and say, "We have fared as well as anybody else. It has not been the policy of this Congress to pass public-building bills because the state of the Treasury is such that it will not bear the appropriation. We have not the money in the Treasury to pay for the erection of these buildings."

But suppose you put into the bill now under consideration the few that are no more worthy than the others. Then when a gentleman goes home to his district and his constituents say, "Why did you not get our public-building bill through?" what can he say? They will say to him, "Why, other fellows got theirs through." Here are 17 public-building bills in this sundry civil appropriation bill, carrying almost a million and half of dollars.

I have gone through the list. Here is a building in Boise City, Idaho, $50,000. Another in Camden, N. J., $125,000.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. But is there any appropriation?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Another for the extension of the limit at Cheyenne, Wyo., $100,000, and so on. Now, here in this bill is an appropriation for a hall of records. I ask if any gentleman of this House has examined that bill? Does any gentleman in this House know where that hall of records is to be located? Does any gentleman in this House know how much is going to be the cost of that building? I know something about it. I have reason to say that I know nobody has asked for that particular hall of records except a gentleman who wants to sell his land and some other gentlemen who do not want it occupied by something that will not be as good as a hall of records. [Loud applause.] That is one thing you have got in this bill. I say, Mr. Speaker, that when a gentleman proposes a bill that will not bear the investigation of a committee, a bill that comes into this House without investigation in regard to its merits, a bill that will not bear investigation by a committee of this House, and that can not get a report from a committee of this House, it should never be considered here because it is put on as an amendment in the Senate. [Loud applause.]

Some of the most vicious legislation has been carried through in that way. How was it when the appropriation was made and this penitentiary wall was built up around this Capitol at a cost of more than a million dollars, defacing the Capitol and making it worse than before? Did that come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds? No; it was stuck on an appropriation bill in the Senate and went through without anybody knowing anything about it. That has been done over and over again. It was done in the last Congress and before the last Congress. I think the older members of the House will remember there was an effort to pass through Congress a certain bill to buy a place for a Public Printing Office.

The Senate insisted upon that from Congress to Congress. I opposed it, and so did many others. I opposed it in the last House, and we defeated it here. What is the result? That proposition on the part of the Senate was that we should buy the land of a certain gentleman who had friends over there and pay $1.17 a foot for it. It has been sold since for 30 cents a foot. The man who owns it to-day only paid that for it, and told me so himself. [Applause.] I think we have been justified by the facts in opposing that measure. While I know that many of these buildings in here are meritorious, I hope the House will vote to instruct the committee to insist upon its disagreement to all these amendments; and if the gentlemen who have bills in here want to have them passed, and of course they do, let them go through in a legitimate way. [Applause.] Let them be examined by a committee of the House and a committee of the Senate, and when they come into this House let them come in here with a report which shall state what the merits are, and what the cost is going to be, so that the House can act intelligently upon them. If you pass these bills to-day you establish a precedent which you can not afford.

Why, gentlemen, what use have you for your Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds if it is to sit here and report its bills and not have them considered in the House, and the Committee on Appropriations are going to fix the locations, are going to authorize public buildings, are going to pass on the cost and limit the cost of public buildings, and all that? Why do you not let the river and harbor bill go to the Committee on Appropriations in the same way? There is just as much sense in that. It is true that comes in an omnibus bill and public buildings do not. There will be just as much sense——

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question now?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Give me a little more time, will you?

Mr. CANNON. How much?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I will give the gentleman a couple of minutes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Give me five.

Mr. CANNON. I think the House understands the matter, and I have to yield to the gentleman who makes the motion.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I say there is just as much sense in this House refusing to pass the river and harbor bill and let the Senate put all those projects upon an appropriation bill as an amendment and send them over here as it is for them to put on appropriations for public-building bills.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman now permit a question?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have made a report to this House, have they not?

Mr. MILLIKEN. They have.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. We have considered that report?

Mr. MILLIKEN. We have.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Your committee has not made a report that we can consider.

Mr. MILLIKEN. It is not our fault; it was not intended by the House to pass bills of that kind.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. How many of these are new buildings provided for in this bill?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have not looked them all up. Some of them are new buildings, and some are increases of the limitation.

Now, I want to say——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLIKEN. One minute more.

Mr. CANNON. I yield one minute more.

Mr. MILLIKEN. So far as the appropriation for the purchase of land connected with the present Public Printing Office is concerned, I have only this to say: I am always willing to make the appropriations necessary to carry on that concern at present, but it was only to-day that I met a gentleman who is attorney for a very good citizen of Washington, a man whom I very much admire personally, who has been for the last three or four Congresses endeavoring to get the Government to buy his land and fix the Public Printing Office upon it, and the attorney said, "Well, if this thing goes, it will fix it so we can sell good old Andy's land." [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. And who is good old Andy?

Mr. MILLIKEN. A better man than you or I, and that means that he is good enough for anybody. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I do not know him, but I suppose the gentleman from Maine, judging from his reference, must know him.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, as he is a good man probably the gentleman from Illinois does not know him. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I hope these bills will all be voted down on general principles, so that our friends who are not fortunate enough to get in their bills at present may go in at the next session and have their bills considered and passed in a legitimate way. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I yield now to my colleague on the committee [Mr. SAYERS], and afterwards I will yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the speech of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] and I do not concur in all that he has said. I do not think this House will act wisely if it does not make the appropriation contained in the Senate amendment for the continuance of the construction of the new post-office building in this city. That building ought to be completed as soon as possible and the limit ought to be broken for this reason——

Mr. MILLIKEN (interposing). If the gentleman will pardon me, I will say that I forgot to refer to that. So far as that work is concerned, it is the finishing up of the building, and I would make it an exception.

Mr. SAYERS. There are several other items to which the gentleman forgot to refer. Now, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the new post-office building in this city, if it be completed in accordance with the terms of the Senate amendment, within twelve or eighteen months of this time, there will be room provided not only for the city post-office, but for 3,000 clerks or thereabouts for whose accommodation the Government is paying to-day about $100,000 a year in rent of private buildings in this city. If the Senate amendment in reference to this building be agreed to—I shall move to recede from our disagreement to that item—gentlemen can rest assured that in eighteen months at the furthest the city post-office will be moved into the building, and 3,000 Government employees or more will also find offices there, and there will be a clear saving to the Government every year of fully $100,000.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to repeat that I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] about the new post-office building here and that I regard it as an exceptional case.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, the amendment that I want to call the attention of the House to is No. 2, which reads:

For public building at Boise City, Idaho: For continuation of building, $50,000; and the limit of cost of said building and site is increased from $150,000 to $200,000.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I can admit all of the criticisms of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and avoid the effect of them so far as this item is concerned. There are, so far as I know—and I think I am correct in the statement—three States in this Union which have no public Federal buildings whatever in them. The State which I have the honor to represent upon this floor—Idaho—is one that has no public building in it. A public building there was provided for in the last sundry civil bill which passed Congress. There was an allowance of $150,000 in that bill for a public building at Boise City. An appropriation was made for the purchase of a site. That site has been selected, and the title thereto will soon vest in the United States.

Now, this bill provides an appropriation of $50,000 to commence the building. So far as the question of the advisability of erecting a building there is concerned, it is not open to discussion. It has been decided by the Congress of the United States. The building ought to be erected there. That question has been submitted to the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and they have unanimously recommended it. The Senate has passed it. It has been submitted to the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and their subcommittee has reported it favorably.

The last sundry civil bill provided for this public building. I want to remind gentlemen of what they all know on reflection, that in every State in this Union there is need for at least one public building. We need a public building in Idaho. We have the United States courts there; we have the surveyor-general's office there; we have the United States land offices there; we have the deputy collector of internal revenue there; we have several other United States officials there; the records of the United States courts are there. Therefore, as a bald business proposition, if any business man on the floor of this House had occasion to rent for the transaction of his business the room which it is necessary to rent for the United States officials in Idaho in order to transact the public business, he would certainly, as a matter of economy, erect a building of his own. From that point of view alone, for the mere saving of rent, a public building should be erected there costing at least $200,000, as provided for in this bill.

Now, I say again, that the criticism which the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has made here is without force as against this item, and I submit in all fairness that this appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that separate votes are to be taken on each of the amendments, and that the previous question is considered as ordered.

Mr. LESTER. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia does not understand that the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Then I move the previous question on these various amendments.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TERRY. Does the previous question which the gentleman asks for apply to the amendment which has just been considered or to all of them?

The SPEAKER. It applies to all of them.

Mr. TERRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that as a matter of fairness and common justice each man here is entitled to be heard on these amendments—— [Cries of "Order!"]

And I hope the House will not perpetrate the glaring injustice of refusing members the chance to advocate the merits of propositions in which they are interested. [Renewed cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the previous question may be considered as ordered upon all these amendments severally; that five minutes be given for debate on each side upon each amendment, and that the vote be taken separately on each amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM]. [Laughter.]

Mr. TERRY. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will withdraw the demand for the previous question, and give us an opportunity to discuss these propositions.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, is it in order for me on this first amendment to move the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CANNON. Then I move the previous question on the amendment just read, relating to the public building at Boise City.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the Chair state the question?

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding from the disagreement of the House and concurring in the Senate amendment with relation to the public building at Boise City.

The question was decided in the negative; there being on a division (called for by Mr. WILSON of Idaho)—ayes 39, noes 127.

The SPEAKER. The noes have it; and the House insists on its nonconcurrence in the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I now ask that amendment numbered 3 be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For public building at Camden, N. J.: For construction of building, $25,000; and the limit of cost of said building is increased $125,000.

Mr. CANNON. I believe I have the floor. I will ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] whether he wishes to occupy five minutes?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. If I can not convince the House in less than five minutes I do not think I shall be able to do so at all.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment, I am glad to say, does not come under the criticism of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN]. It is peculiar in that respect. The act authorizing the construction of this building was passed in 1884. In securing the land upon which to erect the building there was some delay; and when the title to the site had been perfected, the Secretary of the Treasury, under the advice of the Supervising Architect, refused to authorize the construction of the building on account of the insufficiency of the amount appropriated.

The city of Camden had grown wonderfully in population during the short period which had elapsed since this building was authorized. In 1884 the postal receipts were only $20,000; at this time they are $70,000. Besides, sir, the Government, after obtaining possession of the site in the heart of that city constructed an unseemly board fence around it, which at the present time is in some places partly torn down and in others altogether destroyed. In this condition it makes a constant rendezvous at night and even in the daytime for disorderly boys and tramps, so that it is a nuisance to the city.

Only $25,000 is asked at this time. The importance of the structure and its necessity have been passed upon by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in previous Congresses. The business of the post-office alone warrants the construction of this building. Besides the post-office there is located in the city of Camden an office for the internal-revenue collector of that district. The collector of the port is also located there. The number of post-office employees in the city of Camden has increased from 21 in 1884 to 63 at this time.

It seems to me that the House, when it has presented to it a meritorious matter like this, ought to give it fair consideration. It may be impossible for us to bring all these matters before the House at one time. We must take them up singly. I ask, therefore, that fair consideration be given to this amendment. The appropriation proposed is one necessary to be made. The present attitude of the Treasury Department practically permits a nuisance in the city of Camden. This amendment of the Senate ought to be adopted. That is all I have to say. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I ask a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that this session be extended after 5 o'clock until this bill is disposed of.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEM]. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Let the next amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

(4) For public building at Cheyenne, Wyo.: For continuation of building, $50,000; and the limit of cost of said building and site is increased from $150,000 to $250,000.

Mr. CANNON. I yield a few minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the amendment now under consideration is one of those amendments that was objected to by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN], but I submit if there are to be no public buildings erected in the far West until we get a report from the present committee of this House on Public Buildings and Grounds, this session will pass without even beginning the construction of any one of the public buildings so much needed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, you will get a report as soon as the bill can be got through if it has merit.

Mr. MONDELL. Further, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House has had under consideration this proposition and I understand that they have gone this far, that they have determined whenever in their wisdom they see fit to report to the House a provision for any public building, that this public building shall be one of them.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman ought to be grateful to us for that.

Mr. MONDELL. The conditions existing at Boise City and Helena are similar to those existing at Cheyenne, and it is one of three capitals of sovereign States of this Union that have no public buildings.

We have a beautiful city, situated at the very summit of the continent, a magnificent city; we have an excellent statehouse, and beside it we wish to place a splendid public building, one that is appropriate to a city of that character, and that will be an ornament to the nation. We have the full complement of Federal officers necessary and usual in a capital city, and we wish to have the proper appropriation made to supply what we so much need there in the way of a public building. We want a building well enough constructed to reflect credit upon the nation in the capital of our State; and we ask you, therefore, to support this amendment. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede from a disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

(6) For post-office at Fortress Monroe, Va.: That the sum of $15,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of a post-office building at Fortress Monroe, Va., upon the Government reservation. The said building shall be erected upon plans, specifications, and contracts to be approved, in the manner provided by law, by the Secretary of War, and to cover quarters for the postmaster and office accommodations for customs officer and United States commissioner. Nor shall any plan for the erection of said building be approved by the Secretary of War involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $15,000.

Mr. CANNON. I ask a vote.

The question was taken; and the House refused to recede from its disagreement.

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

(7) For public building at Helena, Mont.: For continuation of building, $50,000; and the limit of cost of said building and site is increased from $150,000 to $300,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

(8) Strike out:

"For post-office and court-house at Kansas City., Mo.: For continuation of building under present limit, $50,000."

And insert:

"For post-office and court-house at Kansas City, Mo.: For continuation of building, $50,000; and the limit of cost of said building and site is increased from $1,200,000 to $1,316,000."

Mr. CANNON. In fairness to the gentleman representing the Kansas City district I promised to yield to him for a few moments.

Mr. VAN HORN. I only wish a minute or two.

Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to state that the bill as originally prepared, appropriating money for this work, required the ground to embrace an entire square. The simple fact is that in the procuring of the ground and the grading necessary, which could not be foreseen by anyone—nothing except experience could demonstrate it—it is found that the building can not be completed within the present limit. That is all there is of the matter, and I hope the House will recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion to recede and concur was rejected.

The Clerk reported the next amendment of the Senate, as follows:

(9) For court-house and post-office at Little Rock, Ark.: For additional amount to construct an addition to the United States court-house and post-office and enlarging judge's chamber and the offices of the marshal and clerk of the circuit and district courts, and for an elevator, $43,000.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. I ask the kind attention of the House while I endeavor to show the merits of this proposition, and I ask only fair treatment upon the merits of the case. I desire to say, gentlemen, that this proposition stands upon stronger grounds than any proposition which you have considered, as I will undertake to show.

In the first place, I will say that the necessity for the improvement of the public building at the city of Little Rock has already been passed upon by Congress at a preceding session. We appropriated $58,000 for this purpose. The Secretary of the Treasury sent down there to inaugurate that work, and found that on account of the peculiar architecture of the building and on account of the kind of stone that was used in its construction, namely, Ohio stone, that it would cost more to carry out the project than Congress had allowed. Therefore he sent to the Speaker of this House a recommendation and estimate for $43,000 more. Now, this is not one of the cases spoken of by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] in which there has been no estimate. There has been a careful estimate upon this proposition, and the amount that will be required is definitely ascertained. Further, I will say that this is urgently needed, as I will show you, by a letter from the United States circuit judge of that district, Judge Caldwell, with whom many of you are acquainted. He wrote me the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, EIGHTH CIRCUIT,
Little Rock, March 28, 1892.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just seen a copy of your bill relating to the United States building in this city.

I have said and written so much about this building in the past that I have grown weary of the subject. My letters are on file in Washington protesting against laying the foundations of the building under the limitations and restrictions of the act making the first appropriation.

I said then, and time has verified the correctness of my judgment, that the building which it was proposed to erect would be found totally inadequate to accommodate the public officers and business expected to be provided for within its walls. I knew this was so so far as it related to the United States courts.

I pleaded for two court rooms, or a judge's chambers large enough for a chambers court room, but all in vain. There is but one court room and the judge's chambers is barely large enough to contain my bookcases, a table, and two or three chairs.

The result is that when there are two judges here and it is desirable to hold two courts at the same time, as it frequently is, we are unable to do so except when the county court-house is not in use and is loaned to us, or we can get in the State house.

The want of another court room is a source of expense to the Government and of delay and cost to parties and witnesses.

The circuit court of appeals ought to hold its winter sessions at this place, and doubtless would do so if we had a court room, but under existing conditions it is out of the question.

I know nothing about the wants of the other departments. I only know that the present building does not furnish adequate accommodations for the United States courts.

Yours, truly, HENRY C. CALDWELL,
Circuit Judge.

Hon. W. L. TERRY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Now, gentlemen, as you have it there, the Government of the United States has to depend upon the courtesy of the county of Pulaski for the privilege of holding one of its courts. Only a small sum is asked. The Secretary of the Treasury says it is necessary. He has sent in an estimate. It has all been determined, and you have here the letter of a Federal judge who stands as high as any man in the United States showing you the deplorable condition of affairs at Little Rock for the want of this improvement. I appeal to the sense of fairness of the House, that upon so meritorious a matter as this you permit the amendment of the Senate to stand.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding and concurring.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TERRY) there were—ayes 52, noes 116.

Accordingly, the House refused to recede and concur, and insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

CONFEREES ON THE FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees upon the bill H. R. 8109, the fortifications appropriation bill, Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, Mr. GROUT, and Mr. BARTLETT of New York.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House will now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, when the gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE, will act as Speaker pro tempore.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 p. m. Mr. PAYNE took the chair as Speaker pro tempore, and directed the reading of paragraph 2 of Rule XXVI; which was read by the Clerk, as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar for the consideration of bills under the special order.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 35, noes none.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina raises the point of no quorum.

Mr. TALBERT. I desire, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is in order.

Mr. TALBERT. I desire unanimous consent to make a statement.

Mr. KEM. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TALBERT. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Accordingly the motion of Mr. WOOD was agreed to; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

ELLA D. CROSS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 997) granting a pension to Ella D. Cross.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of Ella D. Cross, widow of Richard D. Cross, late lieutenant-colonel of the Fifth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

Mr. WOOD. I suggest that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY], who prepared the report in this case, can make a statement which will satisfy the House quite as well as the reading of the long report.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, we are apparently on the eve of this session, so that it might be a proper time to review the work that the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions have performed and laid before the House. I have caused to be prepared a list of all the bills passed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, together with the amounts, rank, etc., which I ask unanimous consent to print. I do not desire to take up the time of the House to read it; and yet the House ought to know what it contains. I therefore, Mr. Chairman, ask unanimous consent to print this, instead of reading it to the House at this time.

Mr. KEM. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print the document in his hand. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. I object.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. This report has been prepared from the committee records.

Mr. KEM. I object.

Mr. LACEY. I move that the gentleman be permitted to print the document.

Mr. ERDMAN. I will read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that leave be granted to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to print the document in his hand.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The document is as follows:

Mr. ERDMAN. This shows that it will take several million dollars every year to earn the sum that will be required to pay the amounts that you have appropriated. I want the real soldiers—nearly a million of them—who are on the rolls to-day at $6, $8, $10, and $12 a month, to look at this list, to examine it, to see who are the favorites of the Republican party, who are getting $100, $75, $50, and $30 a month, and let them wonder why they are not selected as the favorites.

I admire the courage of a few of you who, knowing what was right, have dared to stand up and assert it.

Unfortunately, the Republican party arrogates to itself the proud title of the sole conservator of the entire stock of patriotism in the land. Unfortunately, I say, inasmuch as the tendency of its teachings and its doctrines in this respect is to make patriotism a mere commercial contract and to render the future Grand Armies of the Republic mere aggregations of mercenaries, hirelings, Hessians or Janizaries. If I may be guilty of an alliteration, let me say, "Stop your unholy traffic in patriotism, pensions, and politics, and make the pension roll a roll of honor." Your purpose has been and is now, instead, to make it a political polling list. How far from honorable that is you may judge for yourselves when I tell you that in the good city of Philadelphia, the city of phenomenal Republican majorities and of phenomenal political fraud and corruption—in the good City of Brotherly Love, they place upon that list the names of dogs. In the fall elections of 1894, when you proudly boasted of your enormous majorities there, you had upon that list the name of the dog William Rifle—so determined by a Republican judge. If you care to have his picture on the pages of the RECORD I will lend you the cut. Let me hear no more about voting the unfortunate colored people of the South until you yourselves stop voting dogs. Go and proclaim to the country that all that the Fifty-fourth Congress will do for the old veterans is to place on the pension roll galvanized rebels, bums, bounty jumpers, and deserters, and then emphasize your illegal misconstruction of the act of 1890 by enacting it the law.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest respect for my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN]. He evidently is conscientious in his course with regard to pension bills in this House. But as he deliberately makes the statement that Republican members here are politically partial in their votes regarding pensions, I say that the facts confute him. I have been a member of this House for nine years. I have never seen politics injected one way or another where a pension was honestly due to a soldier, the widow of a soldier, or the orphan of a soldier. [Loud applause.] And I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that only the other day this House, with 150 Republican majority, reduced a pension sent here from its own Committee on Invalid Pensions from $75 to $50 a month. That was the pension of the widow of Gen. Joseph B. Carr, a gallant soldier, once secretary of state of New York; and the only Republican elected upon the State ticket in that year. Her pension was reduced from $75 a month to $50 a month, although she was entirely destitute, and within ten minutes this same Republican House voted to retain the pension of Mrs. John Newton, the widow of a gallant general who never voted a Republican ticket in his life.

I have not forgotten that a Republican House of Representatives pensioned the widows of Maj. Gen. George B. McClellan and Maj. Gen. John C. Fremont side by side, in one vote. I do hope, Mr. Chairman, as one who did some service in the Army, however little, that my friends upon the Democratic side of the House who never served in the Army will at least be sure of their facts before they attack propositions for pensions for soldiers or soldiers' widows, who are honestly entitled to them. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Just a word, Mr. Chairman. This widow, whom it is presumed we shall pension by this bill, is the widow of a man who was always a Democrat, and who never voted anything but the Democratic ticket in his life. He was a brother of Colonel Cross, who lost his life at Gettysburg, and he was himself a lieutenant-colonel in the fighting Fifth New Hampshire.

Mr. ERDMAN. Did the gentleman understand me to say that political favor was shown on the floor of the House in pension matters?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I understood from the remarks of the gentleman who has just concluded [Mr. CUMMINGS] that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had said so.

Mr. ERDMAN. I admit that the inference was a fair one from the very incorrect and erroneous statement of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I am very glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania make that statement, and as I rose only to confute his supposed assertion I have nothing more to say, and I ask for a vote in this case.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. JANE STEWART WHITING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1511) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Stewart Whiting.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $75 per month, the name of Jane Stewart Whiting, widow of the late Commodore William Danforth Whiting, of the United States Navy.

Mr. MILNES. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1511) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Stewart Whiting, adopt as their own the following quotation from the Senate report, and recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out the word "seventy-five," in line 5, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty":

"Mrs. Whiting is the widow of the late Commodore William Danforth Whiting, who entered the naval service of the United States in March, 1841, and was retired April 13, 1882.

"Commodore Whiting belonged to an old American family. He was born in Lancaster, Mass., May 17, 1823. His father was Gen. Henry Whiting, who served in the Indian wars and in the war of 1812; his mother was Eliza Macomb Whiting. In 1841 Commodore Whiting was appointed a midshipman from Massachusetts, and he was attached to the sloop Cyane, of the Pacific Squadron, from 1841 to 1844; from that year to 1846 he served on the frigate Columbus, of the East Indian Squadron; he then went to the Naval School, and on August 10, 1847, was promoted to passed midshipman; in 1846–47 Midshipman Whiting served in the sloop Levant at the capture of Monterey, Cal., when the American flag was hoisted at that place, on July 7, 1846.

"In 1849 Midshipman Whiting was attached to the sloop Marion, of the East Indian Squadron, and in 1853 he was at the Naval Observatory at Washington, and in the Coast Survey from 1854 to 1857, being on the steam frigate Niagara when that vessel laid the Atlantic cable in 1857. On May 1, 1855, he was promoted to master, and was commissioned as a lieutenant on September 14 of the same year. From 1858 to 1860 Lieutenant Whiting was on the sloop Marion, off the coast of Africa, and on the Macedonia in the following year.

"He was executive officer of the sloop Vandalia at the capture of Port Royal in 1861, and afterwards commanded the steamer Wyandotte in the South Atlantic blockade and in the Potomac flotilla. On July 16, 1862, he was commissioned lieutenant-commander, and on the gunboat Ottawa took part in the attacks of the defenses of Charleston. In 1864 and 1865 he commanded the school-ship Savannah, and in the following year the steamer Tioga, of the Gulf Squadron; he was commissioned as commander on July 25, 1866, and did land duty at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard in 1867–1869 and 1871–72, being in command of the Saratoga, of the North Atlantic Squadron, in 1870.

"Commander Whiting was promoted to a captaincy on August 19, 1872, and was ordered to the command of the flagship Worcester, of the North Atlantic Station, under Admiral Scott, where he remained from 1871 to 1875. In the first year of his cruise Captain Whiting took out contributions of food and clothing from the American people to the French sufferers of the Franco-Prussian war.

"After serving for some time at the Naval Asylum at Philadelphia, he was appointed, in 1877, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation at Washington. In 1881 failing health and almost total blindness, the result of a stroke of lightning which knocked him down while in active service, caused him to retire from the service. On October 12, 1881, by act of Congress, he was retired with the rank of commodore. After his retirement Commodore Whiting lived in New York. He was an hereditary member of the Society of the Cincinnati, being a direct descendant of Timothy Whiting, who fought in the battles of Lexington and Concord.

"When the U. S. S. Marion was ordered from the west coast of Africa at the beginning of the civil war, Commodore Whiting and Admiral Stanton, it is said, were the only wardroom officers who remained loyal to the United States.

"In 1849 Commodore Whiting was married to Jane Stewart, who was born in Cork. The marriage took place in Boston. Mrs. Whiting and four children survive.

"Testimony submitted to your committee shows that Mrs. Whiting is in very straitened financial circumstances, and in view of that fact and of the long and valuable services of Commodore Whiting your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

The amendment recommended in the first paragraph of the report was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BARTON S. DAWSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4494) granting a pension to Barton S. Dawson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Barton S. Dawson, late private in Company L, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, at the rate provided for total blindness, and requiring the regular and personal attendance of another person, said pension to be in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment, striking out all after the word "rate," in line 6, down to the end of the bill and inserting the words "$30 per month in lieu of his present pension."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to this case as one where a private soldier is given $30 a month.

Mr. MILNES. You ought to have given him $50.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman on my left says we ought to have given him $50.

Mr. Chairman, I desire, in connection with what has been asserted here this evening, to say that in my opinion there never has been a Congress which, within so short a time, has advanced the pensions of as many private soldiers and noncommissioned officers and of the widows of such soldiers and officers, as the present one. [Applause.] Further, Mr. Chairman, without undertaking to be exact, I venture the assertion that there have been five cases of the pensions of private soldiers or of their widows raised during this Congress, for every one where we have raised the pension of officers or of their widows. There has not been a deserter, there has not been a bounty jumper, there has not been a man dishonorably discharged, pensioned during this Congress. No such persons have been put on the roll.

As to the statement which some gentlemen are so industriously trying to send out over the country that we are seeking to pension officers and officers' widows to the neglect or the detriment of private soldiers or their widows, I want to say that it is not true. It is true that in some few cases that have come up here, while I individually may have believed that a less pension would have been sufficient, yet I have honored the judgment of my colleagues on the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the judgment of the Committee of the Whole in passing upon those cases, and where they have found a destitute old widow of some gallant officer, or where they have found an old officer himself in distress, as in the case we disposed of to-day on a conference report, the case of a man 75 years old, a paralytic, who has had an invalid wife for seven years, whom only ten days ago he buried—in such cases and in the cases of the destitute widows of these old officers, where, to keep them out of the poorhouse, the Committee of the Whole have advanced their pensions beyond what the general law would allow, I have honored the judgment of my colleagues and of the Committee of the Whole, and have not hesitated with them, under such circumstances, to vote to advance the pensions.

It is a very easy matter, Mr. Chairman, to arraign the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the party in power for having pensioned a few of these old officers and their widows at a higher rate than the general law allows. It is a very easy matter to go out among the private soldiers and make such representations to them. But I do hope that the private soldiers and the noncommissioned officers of this country—and I served in the ranks for more than two years—I do hope, I say, that they will not be deceived by this cry that a few old officers and the widows of a few old officers have had their pensions advanced, because it is simply the old cry in another form and is intended to discredit the pension roll by seeking to array the country against pensions of all kinds by working up a prejudice against the persons who receive these pensions.

Now, in conclusion, as to the policy of this Congress and the policy of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as evidence of what the Committee on Invalid Pensions have held and intend to hold, and what I believe the Committee of the Whole will sustain them in, I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution which was unanimously adopted by the committee, which shows that we intend in no case to make any advance for officers or their widows except where there is destitution, and which further shows that for every case where we have raised the pension of an officer or the widow of an officer we have raised the pensions of at least five privates or noncommissioned officers.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas marked confusion and delay have resulted from the want of some uniform rule in the consideration of private pension bills: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is the sense of the House that all private pension bills should be drawn according to the rates of pension indicated by the general pension laws unless the evidence should clearly show that a higher rate is justly required to relieve actual distress, the question of the soldier's rank being considered wholly immaterial in determining an exceptional rating.

Resolved, That all recommendations from committees should be in harmony with the sentiment of the foregoing resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying this bill aside to be reported favorably.

Mr. ERDMAN. In the statement which I incorporated in my remarks of a few moments ago will appear the name and rank of every man for whom our committee has provided a pension, together with the amount of the pension. I have also had computed and abstracted up to within ten days ago the result of the work of the committee, and that will show practically as many officers pensioned as privates; and in the monthly and annual amount of pension the preponderance is largely in favor of the officers.

Mr. PICKLER. Not one-fifth as many officers as privates have been pensioned.

Mr. ERDMAN. I refer the gentleman to the statement of the actual number. The count can be made by any member who doubts my word.

Mr. MILNES. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ERDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILNES. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he has not voted for almost every one of these pensions to generals and other officers, and to the widows of officers?

Mr. ERDMAN. Probably I have voted for a number.

Mr. MILNES. And for pensions ranging from $50 to $75 a month?

Mr. ERDMAN. Whatever I regarded as meritorious cases I have sustained.

Mr. MILNES. I have several times called the gentleman's attention to the fact that he has voted for every one of these bills.

Mr. ERDMAN. I have voted for a good many; I have not voted for all of them.

Mr. Chairman, the other side takes pride in claiming credit for all that is done by this House. Gentlemen on that side are welcome to the credit of what my statement shows. What any individual member here or there may have done will count for little. It is what you do as a whole, as a party, that you have to be responsible for.

Mr. WANGER. I wish to occupy but a moment to call attention to the fact that all cases of the character of the one embraced in this bill ought to be promptly relieved, and there ought to be a method of relief when Congress is not in session as well as when we are sitting. A soldier who is so stricken by disease as to require the constant assistance of another person ought certainly to have a pension of $30 a month. I hope this bill will pass, and I trust the Committee on Invalid Pensions will very shortly report a measure which will enable every man who is thus disabled to present a petition to the Pension Bureau in order that relief may be granted whenever necessary.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill No. 4281. I do this at the request of a friend. The beneficiary in the bill is an old soldier now in distress. Under a misapprehension I objected to the consideration of the bill the other day. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration now.

Mr. BROMWELL. I object.

DOLLY S. BROWN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1646) for the relief of Dolly S. Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Dolly S. Brown, dependent mother of Irving Stevenson, late of Company D, Third Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers; and that said Dolly S. Brown be granted a pension of $12 per month, subject to the provisions of the pension laws; this pension to date from the date of the above-named soldier's death, namely, September 29, A. D. 1879.

Mr. SPALDING. Let us hear the report.

The report (by Mr. POOLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1646) for the relief of Dolly S. Brown, after duly considering the same, submit the following report:

Irving Stevenson, the son of Dolly S. Brown, was one of three brothers who enlisted in Company D, Third New York Cavalry, August 12, 1861. Irving Stevenson served honorably until August 11, 1864, when he was discharged with his regiment. He applied for and received a pension at the rate of $4 per month from the date of his discharge until April 30, 1879, when he died, never having married.

His mother, Dolly S. Brown, formerly Stevenson, filed a claim for a pension under act of June 27, 1890, alleging that the soldier's death was due to army service. This she was unable to establish, and the claim was rejected. The evidence before your committee shows that the soldier suffered from rheumatism and resulting disease of the heart while in the Army, and that he was treated for those diseases after the war, and that he was found dead in his bed, the evidence being, as stated by physicians, that his death was due to heart disease.

The claimant, Dolly S. Brown, the mother of Irving Stevenson, always cared for the son after her remarriage, and until his death. She is now 84 years of age, is very feeble, has a small piece of property, the rental value of which would be, if rented, but $120 per year, has no children capable of supporting her, is beyond work, and in all human probability can not live long to enjoy any pension, and in view of these facts and the strong probability that the death of the soldier was due to army service, your committee recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment, striking out all after the word "laws," in line 9.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee, to strike out, at the end of the bill, all after the word "laws," in line 9, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably.

SILAS ADAMS.

Mr. COLSON. There is a bill on the Calendar (H. R. 4841) granting a pension to Col. Silas Adams, who was a member of the last Congress. Colonel Adams died a few days ago, leaving a widow who is now without the means of support. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be now taken up and passed with an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to take up out of its order House bill No. 4841. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. I object.

GEORGE JOHNSON.

Mr. BROMWELL. The objection I made a few moments ago to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] was made under a misapprehension. I therefore withdraw my objection.

Mr. TALBERT. I then renew the request.

The CHAIRMAN. It is competent as a motion.

Mr. TALBERT. I move, then, that the Committee of the Whole take up the bill (H. R. 4281) granting a pension to George Johnson, of Lenox, Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $72 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of George Johnson, late a soldier in Company C, Nineteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and now a resident of Lenox, Iowa.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend by striking out "seventy-two," in line 5, and inserting "fifty" in lieu thereof; by striking out "soldier," in line 7, and inserting "private" in lieu thereof, and by striking out all after the word "Infantry," in line 8.

Also amend title by striking out all after the word "Johnson."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to concur in the second, third, and fourth amendments proposed by the committee. I think the Committee of the Whole ought not to concur in the amendment proposing to reduce the amount of the pension from $72 to $50 a month. I have a personal acquaintance with this soldier. I have known him for a number of years. I know him to be absolutely helpless. He is paralyzed. For years he has been unable to turn himself in his bed. He requires the constant attendance of another person. Even the smallest offices necessary to himself he is entirely incapable of performing. He can neither dress nor undress himself, and if there is anywhere in the history of pensions in this country a case where a soldier is entitled to the fullest and the largest pension allowed by the law—the pension of $72 a month—this is such a case.

The trouble about it is in the Department. This soldier was shot through the hip, the ball passing clear through his body. He is absolutely paralyzed on the left side. The paralysis is gradual and progressive. He is paralyzed just as completely on the right side; but the surgeons in charge, who did the scientific examination, said that, while the paralysis of the left side was due to the shot he received, there was no satisfactory evidence to show the paralysis of the other side as arising from that cause. While two boards who examined him agree with unanimity that the paralysis is due to the same cause, yet the Department has held otherwise in view of the statement to which I have just referred. At least a half dozen physicians testify that it is a case of entire paralysis; but I have never been able to satisfy the officer in charge that this was the truth.

I know all about the case myself. I took an appeal years ago and argued the case before the then Assistant Secretary of the Interior, but he chose (while he increased the pension $6 a month at that time) to follow the direction of the officers of the Department rather than the decision of the eight or ten medical officers who were testifying under the solemnity of an oath, and some of them on official duty, that the disability was total and was contracted in the service.

I hope, therefore, Mr. Chairman, without detaining the committee, that the committee will not agree to the amendment to reduce this amount as proposed, but leave it at $72 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I just desire to state the reason why I asked that this bill should be taken up out of its regular order. I objected to unanimous consent the other morning for its consideration, but afterwards I had a conversation with my friend from Iowa, and he told me the facts in regard to the case and the condition of this old soldier, showing him to be brave, true, and loyal. I ascertained from him that he was totally incapacitated and unable to do anything, and I thought in justice to him that I would ask unanimous consent to consider it among the very first cases to-night to be taken up. I hope there will be no objection to that course, as a matter of justice to him.

I have nothing more to say. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask a vote first on the three amendments and afterwards on the fourth amendment of the committee.

The question was taken on the three amendments in gross.

The said amendments of the committee were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLUE in the chair). The Clerk will now report the amendment on which the gentleman from Iowa asks a separate vote.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, strike out "seventy-two" and insert "fifty."

Mr. PICKLER. I shall not resist the raising of this pension to $72 a month.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SILAS ADAMS.

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee take up, out of its order, the bill (H. R. 4841) granting a pension to Silas Adams.

The Chairman, having submitted the motion, decided that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. STRONG. I rise to make a point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that bill can not be taken up out of its order without unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been held to be in order. The Chair will again submit the motion.

The question being again submitted, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STRONG. That was not the point of order I made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Col. Silas Adams, of Liberty, Casey County, Ky., and pay him a pension of $50 per month.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment: In line 6, strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty"; so that it will read $30 per month.

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "Colonel Silas," in line 5, and insert "Melissa"; also after the word "Kentucky," where it appears in the bill, insert the words "widow of Silas Adams, deceased, late colonel of the First Kentucky Cavalry"; and strike out "him," in line 6, and insert "her."

Colonel Adams died a few days ago, and I wish to amend the bill to give the pension to the widow.

Mr. HICKS. I am inclined to think that the gentleman had better offer a substitute rather than undertake to amend the bill, as the amendment is entirely new matter. This is a bill granting a pension to Col. Silas Adams.

Mr. COLSON. I have offered an amendment to correct the name.

Mr. HICKS. I was saying you had better offer a substitute. I raise the point of order. I do not think that the bill can be amended to meet the point the gentleman has in view. However, if he is willing to take the chance, I do not propose to press the matter, as I do not desire to obstruct the business of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HEPBURN). The Chair thinks the amendment is competent. But the first question is on the committee amendment, to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. POOLE. I understand that this is a proposition to pension the widow of the beneficiary named in the bill, who since the bill was drawn has died.

Mr. PAYNE. The House seems to be dividing?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. COLSON] has offered an amendment with reference to the name. The question will first be taken on the amendment proposed by the committee. As many as favor the committee amendment will say "aye"——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken, I desire to say a word. This House has passed a number of pension bills for the widows of majors and captains, and men below the rank of Colonel Adams, granting them pensions at $50 and larger sums, and I want to say to this committee that it is a matter of simple justice that this pension should be allowed at $50.

Among all the thousands of brave men who followed the flag of this country through the civil war there was no braver, no more chivalrous soldier than Silas Adams; and if the services of any man ever entitled his widow to $50 per month the widow of Silas

Adams is entitled to that pension on account of his brilliant and noble services to the Union. I protest against any reduction of the pension. It is due her and just to her. I knew Colonel Adams personally. I knew him during the war; and his superiors, since his death, the men that he served under, have borne willing testimony and published to the world their tribute to the character of this soldier.

They have spoken of him in the highest terms of eulogium and panegyric. High as that eulogy was, and brilliant as it was, it was no more brilliant than the character and services of this soldier. No terms of praise can be too strong, now that he sleeps in the grave of a hero, a patriot, and an American soldier. Splendid as are the words uttered of him, they are nothing but the simple, plain, honest truth. He was a soldier, a gentleman, a patriot, in the broadest sense of the term. Besides that, Mr. Chairman, he was a member of this House, serving with distinction during the Fifty-third Congress. His widow is entitled to this pension. Speaking on her behalf in the poor, feeble manner that I am able to-night, remembering his illustrious record, proud of it as I am, in the name of old Kentucky, with every drop of blood in my veins tingling with admiration for that grand old soldier and patriot, I beg of this committee to perform an act of simple justice to his poor, forlorn, and desolate widow, and give her the pittance of $50 a month. [Applause.]

Mr. PICKLER. Has Silas Adams died since this bill was reported?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes, he died a few days ago.

Mr. PICKLER. What do you want to do?

Mr. COLSON. To substitute the name of his widow.

Mr. LEWIS. To substitute his widow's name.

Mr. PICKLER. Do that first, and then we will determine what pension we will give her.

Mr. COLSON. I have made that motion.

Mr. HOPKINS. What is the committee amendment?

Mr. PICKLER. To strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. MILNES. That has been agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. No; it was not announced.

A MEMBER. The negative vote was not taken.

Mr. HOPKINS. I trust that amendment will be voted down.

Mr. HICKS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HICKS. The inquiry I desire to make is this: How can this be a committee amendment to the bill, when the beneficiary named in the bill has died since the bill was reported——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not answer that question.

Mr. HICKS. And the name of the beneficiary in the bill has been changed without the consent of the committee. How can the committee amendment apply?

The CHAIRMAN. No change has yet been made. This is a bill to pension Col. Silas Adams.

Mr. HICKS. Yes; but he has died.

Mr. HOPKINS. If I understand the parliamentary position correctly, the gentleman from Kentucky in charge of the bill proposes to amend the bill so that the pension to be voted here will go to the widow. That can be done without sending it back to the committee, and I trust it will be done. Now, as to whether the pension shall be $30 or $50 a month, I desire simply to say a word. Colonel Adams was a distinguished member of this House.

Mr. CROWTHER. Should a pension be granted for that?

Mr. HOPKINS. His services throughout the war were as eminent as those of General Cogswell, whose widow has received $75 a month; as eminent as those of General Ewing, whose widow has received $75 a month; as eminent as those of Colonel Dustin, from my own district, whose widow has received, at the hands of this committee, $50 per month. He came from the border section, where it required courage and love of country to do what he did. His services make some of the brightest pages not only in the history of the State of Kentucky, but in the history of the United States, and if this committee proposes to do absolute and fair justice they will vote down the amendment proposed by the committee, and give the widow of this grand soldier of the late war $50 a month. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois who has just taken his seat whether the fact that Colonel Adams was a member of this House is any reason why he should be pensioned, or his widow?

Mr. HOPKINS. I referred to that simply to identify him as the colonel who served his country during the war in the manner I have so feebly expressed.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been carefully considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. After mature and careful consideration of all the facts which came before that committee, we determined to give Colonel Adams, the beneficiary of this bill, the full sum which would be allowed to him had he died or been injured in the service and in line of duty; and now it would be an outrage upon thousands of soldiers of this land, and the widows of thousands of soldiers in this country who get not to exceed $8 and $12 a month, to give this lady more than she could receive if she could prove her husband's death was traceable to his service. We have given the beneficiary exact and equal justice in this bill. We give all that the law would allow, and now to raise the widow, after he is dead, $20 per month more than she could receive under the law would simply be doing an injustice to thousands of widows of private soldiers in this land, and thousands of soldiers who themselves can not receive a pension. We are trying to give exact justice; and I ask the House to stand by the action of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago we passed a bill to pension a soldier who was totally blind. In the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions it was stated that that soldier required the attendance of another person all the time, and we gave to that soldier but $30 a month. Now, I desire to say that in my judgment this bill is subject to the point of order that you can not substitute the name of another person for the one in the bill in a private pension bill. If it is insisted on giving this widow $50 a month I shall raise that point of order; but if it is agreed that you will let it remain at $30 per month, all that she would be entitled to if her husband had been killed in battle, then I have no desire to raise such point of order; but I do insist that to give this widow $50 a month, where there is no claim whatever of disability, is an outrage upon the soldiers of this country; and the people of this country do not want that kind of pension legislation. Therefore, if gentlemen interested in the bill will agree to allow the pension at $30 a month I will not raise the point of order. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] made an eloquent and patriotic speech on this question. I want to ask him a question in connection with it. It was proposed by the bill originally introduced to give to Colonel Adams only $30 a month. I want to know upon what principle of equity or law he proposed to give $20 more to the widow than to the man who earned the pension?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can say to the gentleman that if that bill had come in here to grant a pension to Colonel Adams at $30 a month, I should have voted in favor of giving him $50 a month. I think his services to the country warrant that figure, and that the committee did not do him justice.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We are very charitable with other people's money.

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Chairman, to put the matter at rest, rather than have a point of order raised, I am willing that the bill should pass at $30 a month.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the widow's name?

Mr. COLSON. That is inserted in the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask that the Clerk read the bill as the names are now substituted.

Mr. STRONG. Mr. Chairman, this was a proposition to take this bill up out of the regular order. I made the point of order at that time. I did not know that it was to pension the widow of Colonel Adams. I knew nothing about the bill. But I want to make this statement: I was not objecting to the passage of the bill, but I was objecting to taking bills up out of their order. Some of us have come here night after night to attend these sessions. We have been careful to take up no time by useless discussion, if we could help it. I do not propose now that others shall come in and have their bills taken up out of the regular order just at the time when we have reached our bills. That is the only point I want to make. I believe the point is well taken, and I will make it again if it becomes necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment recommended by the committee.

Several MEMBERS. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. To strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLSON offered an amendment; which was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "Colonel," in line 5, and inserting "Melisha Adams, widow of"; and also inserting the words "colonel First Kentucky Cavalry, deceased."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ERDMAN. I suggest to the gentleman that he offer a substitute for the bill. If, when this matter comes up in the House, the Speaker shall hold the same as he held when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] raised the point upon bills donating condemned cannon, the gentleman certainly can not get this bill through.

Mr. PICKLER. No point of order is raised yet.

Mr. HICKS. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. ERDMAN. But the point can be raised when the bill comes up in the House.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, it has not been raised yet.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The title of the bill was amended so as to conform to the amendment in the body of the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. Let the bills be taken up in their order on the Calendar.

HARRIET R. MATLOCK.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 2045) granting a pension to Harriet R. Matlock.

Mr. MILNES. I object.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I do not ask unanimous consent. I move that the bill be taken up.

Mr. MILNES. I raise the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute that we take up the bills on the Calendar in their order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not necessary, because if the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey should be voted down, the regular order would be a matter of course.

Mr. PAYNE. Somebody else may make a motion to take up some bill out of its order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submits that if the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota should be adopted we would be in precisely the same condition that we are in now, because any gentleman could still move to call up any particular bill. The rule is clear.

Mr. PAYNE. The rule is that the Committee of the Whole shall determine the order in which business shall be considered, and if the committee make an order to consider the bills in their order on the Calendar, that is the end of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read clause 4 of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Committees of the Whole House business on their calendars may be taken up in regular order, or in such order as the committee may determine, unless the bill to be considered was determined by the House at the time of going into committee; but bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors shall have precedence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] moves to take up for consideration the bill indicated by him.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to say to gentlemen that they have every morning to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of their special bills, and it is not fair to take up Friday night in this way.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, and it was rejected.

CALEB L. JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6417) to complete the military record of Caleb L. Jackson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against Caleb L. Jackson as a member of Company D, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment of New York Volunteers, and it shall be held and considered that the said Jackson died on or about the 4th day of June, 1863, while in the military service of the United States and on account of disability incurred in such service and in line of duty.

Mr. MILNES. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. PARKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6417) entitled "A bill to complete the military record of Caleb L. Jackson," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment.

This is a bill enacting that the charge of desertion be removed and that it be held that he died about June 4, 1863, while in service.

On the march from Manassas to Gettysburg he fell sick and was never seen again. Comrades prove the fact. Letters to his wife of January 1, February 23, March 18 and 24, and April 14, 1863, prove him a patriotic, earnest soldier, and a loving husband and father, whose character is a guaranty against any idea but that of death in service.

The military record, a copy of the last letter, and a memorandum copy of an affidavit made by his captain are annexed.

Case of Caleb L. Jackson, late of Company D, One hundred and forty-sixth New York Infantry Volunteers.

It is shown by the records that Caleb L. Jackson was enrolled August 30, 1862, as a private of Company D, One hundred and forty-sixth New York Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years. He appears to have served faithfully until June 4, 1863, when he is reported as being absent without leave. As he did not return to his company, which remained in service until July 16, 1865, he was regarded as a deserter, and his name was dropped from the company muster rolls.

In an application for removal of the charge of desertion, Mrs. Lovina Woodcock, of Lewis County, N. Y., declared, September 26, 1891, that she was Jackson's widow, and that about five years ago one Cook, a comrade of Jackson, stated to her that while the company was on the march from Manassas to Gettysburg Jackson was taken sick and tried to get excused from duty; that failing to get excused, he marched until he could not go any farther, when he fell down and out of the ranks, and that that was the last seen or heard of him.

Sylvester O. Cook and Andrew Dorn, comrades, in affidavits dated July 31, 1891, testified that at the time Jackson became separated from his command, on the march near Manassas, in June, 1863, he was sick and unable to keep up with the column, and therefore fell out of the ranks.

The affiant Cook, who was the first sergeant of the company, added that he was instructed to report Jackson as absent without leave.

A number of relatives and neighbors have testified that nothing has been seen or heard of Jackson since June, 1863, and that it was the general belief of the soldier's relatives and intimate friends that he died about June, 1863. A search of all records of this Department fails to disclose any evidence of this man's death or burial, or any clue to his whereabouts subsequent to his reported unauthorized separation from his company on June 4, 1863, at which date the command was on the march to Gettysburg, Pa.

Upon this presentation of the case the Department was constrained to deny the application for removal of the charge of desertion, the evidence submitted not being deemed sufficient to establish that the soldier died in the service, and because the case did not come within any of the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1889, which was at the date of denial and which is now the only law in force governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE,
War Department, March 5, 1896.

MARCH 6, 1893.

Affidavit of James G. Brindley, late corporal, Company D, One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers, made before Willis E. Merriman, Albany, N. Y., notary, on March 3, 1893, 52 years old.

I well remember Caleb L. Jackson, who enlisted sometime August, 1862, for three years or the war in a company which was afterwards Company D, One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers, of which I was captain. I had known said Jackson, having resided in the same town. Until June, 1863, he was a faithful and good soldier. On the forced march from camp near Fredericksburg to Gettysburg, he being then a man of middle age, with many others fell out of the ranks, as I now believe, from exhaustion and not from a desire to avoid doing duty. I know that he has not been heard from since that time. There being no other alternative, he was reported absent without leave and eventually dropped from the rolls as a deserter.

I now firmly believe that he was either captured and died in prison or was killed in a skirmish with the enemy. He was an honest citizen and enlisted from patriotic motives, as did also his son, and I believe that the charge of desertion made by me at the time ought to be removed.

Supposed to be in comptroller's office, Albany, N. Y. Filed March 3, 1893.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, on last Friday night, when I asked consent to lay aside such bills as this, some gentleman, I forget who it was, stated, as I understood, that this particular man had been shot down on the field of battle. Am I correct? I ask for information.

Mr. PARKER. No, sir; this is the first time that this bill has been called up. This man fell out of the ranks on the march to Gettysburg and was never heard of again. The letter which the gentleman has heard read in the report, if he has listened to it, shows that this man did not go away; that his controlling idea was that of duty, first to his country and afterwards to his family, and that the charge of desertion against him is one that ought to be removed on the highest grounds.

Mr. TALBERT. I am not objecting. I am just asking for information.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN ZELLERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4519) granting a pension to John Zellers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $50 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Zellers, of Coffeyville, Kans., late of Company K, Sixth-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4519) granting a pension to John Zellers, having had the same under consideration, beg to report as follows:

John Zellers was a private in Company K, Sixty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, One hundred and forty fourth Regiment Illinois Infantry. He is now drawing a pension at the rate of $12 per month under the act of June 27, 1890. This soldier prosecuted a claim under the act of July 14, 1862, but for want of a hospital record was unable to show his injury to be of service origin. He received an injury to his right leg in the line of duty at or near Alexandria, Va., and was sent to the hospital, but declined to stay, notwithstanding his injury, and went forward with his regiment.

He did not consider the injury serious, but it continued and grew worse, until he was finally discharged at the expiration of his term of service. This injury to the leg resulted in varicose veins and has gradually progressed until the use of the limb is entirely destroyed, and he is required to use crutches a great part of the time. His limb is covered with running sores, requiring constant treatment. And the disease is progressing with no hope of recovery, and it is only a question of a year or so at most when death must relieve him of his suffering, from which he has seldom ever been free since the close of the war. He is now in destitute circumstances, without means of support, and is wholly incapable of performing any kind of labor, either manual or otherwise.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty," in the fifth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty," and by adding to the end of the bill the words "in lieu of the pension now being received," and that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendments recommended in the last paragraph of the report were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GABRIEL WIDMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4267) granting an increase of pension to Gabriel Widmer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to grant to Gabriel Widmer, late of Company K, Twenty-third Michigan Infantry, an increase of pension at the rate $50 per month on account of total disability.

The committee recommended an amendment striking out the word "fifty," before "dollars," and inserting "thirty." Also an amendment striking out the words "on account of total disability."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HANNAH R. QUINT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R, 6792) granting a pension to Hannah R. Quint.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Hannah R. Quint, widow of Brian W. Fletcher, late of Company B, Fourth Maine Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. MILNES. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6792) granting a pension to Hannah R. Quint, having given the matter careful consideration, respectfully report:

Brian W. Fletcher, to whom the claimant in this case was married December 12, 1850, served from June 15, 1861, until July 21, 1861, when he was killed in battle at Bull Run, Va.

Mrs. Fletcher was subsequently married to one Daniel Morrison, who deserted her, and she secured a divorce from him on that ground.

Again she married, this time a man by the name of Orin Quint, from whom also she was divorced on account of cruelty and nonsupport. She is now over 66 years of age, is unable to work on account of age and loss of health, and is in destitute circumstances.

In view of the fact that she was the wife of the soldier from 1850 until he was killed in battle, and is now in need, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The question being taken on laying the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House, the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.
